America, Beware!

By
REV. HERBERT J. BRYCE
Des Moines, Iowa

A LEAGUE of Nations, yes, but where Does God our Father find a place?
I search the scroll, but find not there
The name of God upon its face;
Was He the author? Did He guide?
Was His the master, sovereign will?
Then, wherefore is His name denied,
Was it for good? It bodeth ill.

When o'er the seas our fathers came,
In search of larger liberty,
They did not fear to use His name,
Or recognize His sovereignty;
And here, upon our shores they reared,
With faith in God its basic stone,
A great republic, world revered,
America, our loved, our own.

A League of Nations! Shall we then
Subscribe, in absence of His name?
Shall we ignore our God, as when
The ancients built on Shinar's plain?
We scorn the lures of crime and lust;
What lesser sin to compromise
With those who do not place their trust
In God who rules in earth and skies?

A League of Nations! Shall we sign?
My native land, beware! beware!
No covenant should ere be thine,
Unless thy God is honored there.
Hold fast thy faith, the faith of those
Who for that faith both bled and died;
Thou hast no friends, but only foes,
'Mongst them where God hath been denied.

Bubble Grains

Make Other Foods Delightful

Like Puffed Nut Meats

Puffed Grains are breakfast dainties, but that's not all. Two are whole whole grains which supply whole-grain nutrition. All are food confections, fairy-like in texture, nut-like in their taste.

Puffed Wheat makes bowls of milk vastly more inviting. And milk with whole wheat, steam exploded, is the pinnacle in food.

Puffed Rice or Corn Puffs add to fruit a fascinating blend. The grains are fragile, flaky, flavory. They add to fruit what crust adds to a shortcake or to pie.

Crisp and butter them and these airy grains become nut-like confections. There is no between-meal dainty which compares with these.

Puffed Wheat Puffed Rice Corn Puffs

Each 15c—Except in Far West

Food Cells Exploded

Puffed Rice or Corn Puffs taste like puffed nut meats on ice cream. And home-made candies are made light and nutty by them. Puffed Wheat or Corn Puffs make flimsy toasted wafers for your soups.

In Puffed Grains we blast every food cell. Over 100 million steam explosions are caused in every kernel. Thus every granule is fitted to digest, and every atom feeds. These are the best-cooked grain foods in existence, and the most bewitching. If you believe in whole grains made wholly digestible, use them wherever you can.

Serve one of them in some way every day.

PREPARE NOW

to fit yourself for more effective Christian service by enrolling for a MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE CORRESPONDENCE COURSE.

Perhaps never in all history was there so great a need and demand for trained Christian workers, able to "rightly divide the Word of Truth."

Begin now to systematically study the one Book which outweighs in value all other books in all the world. Dig in it as for gold and you will secure treasure of value and extent beyond any calculation.

"EVERY CHRISTIAN"

says the Sunday School Times, "who follows faithfully the prescribed course is inevitably built up in the Christian life, and often led out into enlarged service. * * * It is possible for the Bible correspondence student to be more thorough than the one who has the personal contact, for sometimes in a class-room days go by before an individual student is called upon to recite, while the correspondence student must recite every lesson. The latter may also have more time for his lesson than he would have if he were taking a crowded study course in a great school."

If you are not already enrolled as a Correspondence student there is no better time to start than now. Fill in and mail the accompanying coupon and full particulars concerning all our courses will be sent to you. The prices are very low—much below cost—and the instruction is unsurpassed. You will be a personal pupil—time, place and amount of study under your own control.

From Correspondence Bible Students:

"I have come to know the Bible in an entirely different light than ever before. The Old Testament is now intensely interesting, whereas before it was dry reading."—A Topeka, Kansas, student of the Synthetic Course.

"I should like to say that I have gained more of real knowledge of the Bible and God in studying the one book (Genesis) as your course directs than I ever before gained from the whole Bible."—A Montana student.

"I want to bear testimony to the blessing the course in Synthetic Study is to me. In all my nine years of active ministry, I have not had such help and inspiration from anything. I believe that in the study of the Old Testament alone I have found enough NEW material for sermon and Bible class work to last me five years."—A Nebraska pastor.

"A month ago I appeared before the Baptist council and was ordained. My examination lasted more than three hours but I came through with flying colors. I used statements from the Doctrine course as my whole argument."—A Philadelphia student.

"I was not able to take a theological course at a seminary, but when I was ordained I passed a rigid examination in which I based my answers upon knowledge obtained largely through the course in Doctrine."

"The course in Practical Christian Work has made me a better Christian, and has helped me much in bringing others to Christ."—An Iowa student.

"Money could not buy what I have gotten out of this course already. And to think that I have taken only the first section! The lessons have drawn me closer to my God and made me feel a deeper interest in and a deeper responsibility for my fellow-men."—A Georgia student.

"This course (Scofield) taken in ten months without interfering with my regular pastoral duties, has proved of incalculable value to me. I expected much, I received far more. I most heartily recommend it to other busy ministers and laymen."—A Houston, Texas, pastor.

"What marvelous light I am receiving through these lessons! Long, long years I have puzzled over things in the precious Book that now I understand."

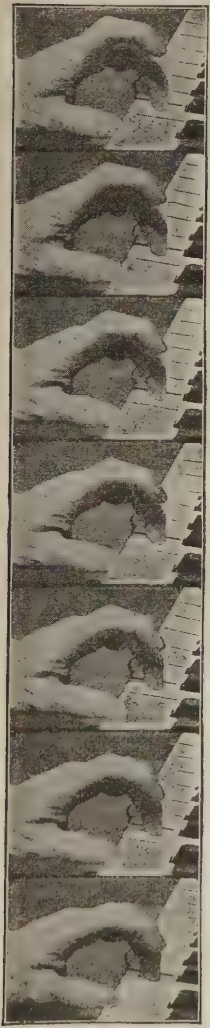
My Way of Teaching Piano Made Plenty of Enemies

All the old fogies who are down on anything new—especially correspondence study—made it pretty hard for me when I first started 25 years ago.

And the fact that in spite of their opposition I obtained more students every year seems to me pretty good evidence that my method isn't wholly bad.



I now have far more students than were ever before taught by one man. There isn't a State in the Union that doesn't contain a score or more skilled players of piano or organ who obtained their entire training from me. They learned in quarter the usual time and at quarter the usual cost. I will gladly refer you to any number who will soon convince you of the excellent results they gained from my instruction. My free booklet, "How to Learn Piano or Organ," will interest and inform you. But don't send for it if you're afraid of being convinced.

My way of teaching piano or organ is entirely different from all others. Out of every four hours of study, one hour is spent entirely away from the keyboard—learning something about Harmony and The Laws of Music. This is an awful shock to most teachers of the "old school," who still think that learning piano is solely a problem of "finger gymnastics." When you do go to the keyboard, you accomplish twice as much, because you understand what you are doing. Within four lessons I enable you to play an interesting piece not only in the original key, but in all other keys as well.

I make use of every possible scientific help—many of which are entirely unknown to the average teacher. My patented invention, the COLOROTONE, sweeps away playing difficulties that have troubled students for generations. By its use transposition—usually a "nightmare" to students—becomes easy and fascinating. With my fifth lesson I introduce another important and exclusive invention, QUINN-DEX. Quinn-Dex is a simple hand-operated moving picture device, which enables you to see, right before your eyes, every movement of my hands at the keyboard. You actually see the fingers move. Instead of having to reproduce your teacher's finger movements from MEMORY—which cannot be always accurate—you have the correct models before you during every minute of practice. The COLOROTONE and QUINN-DEX save you months and years of wasted effort. They can be obtained only from me and there is nothing else, anywhere, even remotely like them.

Men and women who have failed by all other methods have quickly and easily attained success when studying with me. In all essential ways you are in closer touch with me than if you were studying by the oral method—yet my lessons cost you only 43 cents each—and they include all the many recent developments in scientific teaching. For the student of moderate means, this method of studying is far superior to all others, and even for the wealthiest student there is nothing better at any price. You may be certain that your progress is at all times in accord with the best musical thought of the present day, and this makes all the difference in the world.

My Course is endorsed by distinguished musicians who would not recommend any course but the best. It is for beginners or experienced players, old or young. You advance as rapidly or as slowly as you wish. All necessary music is supplied without extra charge. A diploma is granted. Write today, without cost or obligation, for 64-page free booklet, "How to Learn Piano or Organ."

Rev. Jesse Forrest Silver

Revised Edition, with index; 311 Pages. Regular Price $$1^{15}$

This new book, which has passed through several editions, has gained an international reputation. A copy should be in the hands of every student of the Word of God. The author, who was a firm postmillennarian, was converted to the opposite view while engaged in exhaustive research on this subject.

Professor W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D., says: "When any writers are able to disprove the contentions found in this book it will be time for premillennialists to capitulate." R. A. Torrey, D. D.: "It is simply invaluable."

We offer this book with a year's subscription to The Christian Workers Magazine, new or renewal, for only $$2^{25}$ or to anyone who will send us two new yearly subscriptions, we will send a copy of the book, postpaid.

PUT THE JEWS ON YOUR PROGRAM

Everybody now talks about the Jews—their miraculous history, their recent national re-birth under the power of Zionism, their future destiny in the homeland. How much do your friends know about these thrilling questions? How much do the members of your church know? How much do you know? Why not set apart one meeting this winter for the Jews?

WE WILL HELP YOU

We have a Jewish Missionary Program ready for you. It is arranged for several to take part. The expense is small:—either send us $1.00 for the program, or we will send it free, if the society or church using it will send us the collection taken at the meeting. With the program goes also a supply of literature for distribution, telling of the work of this Mission. Tell us how much literature to send—how many people you expect to be present. If you have had our Program No. 1, ask for No. 2, and if you have had Program No. 2, ask for No. 3. But—Write now!

The Power of the Middle Classes

IN AN earlier issue we discussed a Middle Class Union recently formed in England to protect the millions who work with brain and pen against legislative and industrial tyranny; and we ventured an opinion that from the natural or worldly point of view it was a wise and necessary step.

These men and women are between the upper and nether millstones, and their only chance in this selfish and cruel world, outside of the living and true God, is to demonstrate their power and ability to take care of themselves.

The Winnipeg strike last summer afforded an illustration of what this class can do when it really finds itself and rises to an occasion. The loyal soldiery and the loyal police in that city were asked simply to maintain order, and the citizens took care of the rest. They broke the strike by showing their independence of the strikers, and that they were under no necessity to submit themselves to the dictation of an organized minority.

That minority had tied up activities vital to the life of the community, and on the theory that they were the most necessary members of the community had lain back and waited for victory.

But the community had "the laugh on them" because the pitied bourgeoisie simply left their other tasks for the time and operated the public utility plants and emptied the garbage cans.

They did what a capable housewife does when the cook goes back on her—cleans the kitchen and cooks the family meal herself. It is a little unpleasant, but she sings at her task because of her sense of power and certainty of success.

It was different in Seattle, where a vigorous mayor, by using the soldiery and the police, crushed the incipient Bolshevism in short order. That was well, but the other was better because it prevented the agitators from raising the cry of oppression, and because it gave the Middle Class a sense of their own power and importance.

But speaking of the Middle Class, it appears that they are likely soon to have a strong addition to their numbers from the ranks of the skilled workmen, for in Winnipeg the latter found their interests diametrically opposed to those of the proletariat. The strike deprived them of their wages, more properly to be called salaries, as another says, and compelled them to fight the cause of men and women, less able, less skillful and less industrious than themselves.

We quote a secular contemporary:

"Society may have an obligation in respect to the lower class of laborers, but it is obvious that this obligation should rest on the entire population and not on a particular class. When the skilled workmen as members of a union go on strike in order to assist the common laborer they are bearing a burden which is not properly theirs.

"Conservative unionism gets along farther, and year by year faster, than radicalism because it works with actual conditions, whereas the common laborer, representing the least knowledge of conditions and led often by extremists who at the best are fanatic theorists, scornful of conditions, resorts to methods as ineffective as they are destructive of the common interests of employer and employed.

"The skilled workman, therefore, usually is doing himself harm and the unskilled laborer no good when he allows himself to be drawn into hostilities over which he has no fair proportion of control and perhaps no direct interest at all.

"In view of the Winnipeg experience we do not believe it is possible to convert any skilled workman of intelligence to Marxism or its modern equivalent, Bolshevism."

We trust this prophet is true, for if so, we are that much nearer peaceful industrial conditions and a quieter life.

But we have said all this in order to say something more. It is the same old story perhaps. We are just repeating ourselves, that is all, but it is this, that the Christian preachers of this country, and of the world for that matter, have this crucial problem of industrial peace and a quieter life largely in their hands. It is not that they should go into politics, but rather that they should keep out of it, and by an earnest, fearless, intelligent, true and heaven-endued ministry testify the gospel of the grace of God.

The basic fact of that testimony is that God is sovereign, and that all men have an individual accountability to Him who can by no means clear the guilty. The mawkish sentimentality about the social consciousness, and the solidarity of the race and human brotherhood, fair as it sounds, is the vaporish idealism of theorists and cranks who are more dangerous than armed men. As a matter of fact they account for the armed men that are menacing the world today.

The neglect of the Bible, the substitution of the evolutionary hypothesis for the doctrine that God created the heaven and the earth and a pantheistic philosophy for that of a fallen race redeemed by a divine sacrifice, is at the bottom of all the mischief disturbing the political and social order of the times.

To put it in another way, as The Church in the Furnace states, "the masses have become alienated from the church through her failure to be a teaching institution," or as Mrs. Herman in her book on Christianity in The New Age states, "the most poignantly significant thing about the self-revelations of anxious souls that the war has extorted, is their unveiling of the non-Christian character of the faith of a large proportion of church members. Whatever Deity they really and profoundly believe in as distinct from the Deity they pay conventional homage to in the church, it is not the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The editor of The Episcopal Recorder commenting on these words with saddest truth, that the pulpit in this country, as well as that in England to which the observations of Mrs. Herman particularly apply, "has largely fallen away under the so-called demand of the times from a strong teaching ministry, and surrendered its prerogative to furnish an entertainment which will attract the crowd."

When will the pulpit return to its vocation? We confess there is little to be expected from the theological seminaries that furnish the pulpit supply. A stream can not rise higher than its source, and unless the Christian laymen of the country who have in many instances more wisdom than their teachers, rally to the strong support of the Bible Institutes which in the providence of God have begun to take their place, the future of the nation and of the world is forbidding indeed.

In the words of a true scientist who is at the same time a humble disciple of Jesus Christ, George McCready Price, of California, "The world is sick and needs salvation from sin. Is the church to confess that her entire experience as an evangelistic agency has been a long mistake, and to begin now along these tame, Christless, cultural, and political lines to remodel her whole work, and thus try to stem the horrible tide of evil that is sweeping over the world?

"The Bible is more, much more, than our religious guide. It is the blessed charter of our civil and religious liberties. And in abandoning it the modern English-speaking peoples have thrown away the only restraining influence that can keep this age from repeating on the largest scale those deeds of blood that stain almost every page of history."

Bishop Neely on The League of Nations

Editorial Book Review

BISHOP THOMAS B. NEELY, Ph.D., LL.D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is known as an evangelical theologian, a constructive church leader, and a devoted and intelligent patriot. He is also an authority on parliamentary law, and if we mistake not, the parliamentary practice of the Congress of the United States acknowledges indebtedness to his work upon that subject. Like the late Bishops Simpson and Newman, and indeed like most of the distinguished overseers of the great Methodist body past and present, he is alive to all that concerns the political as well as the religious welfare of our beloved nation, and his voice has potency far outside of the fold which he particularly guards.

These considerations prepare the way for a wide and thoughtful reading of his book just from the press, entitled, The League, the Nation's Danger, in the preface of which he says, "the country has had no such crisis since the Civil War."

The first chapter contains a brief but interesting resume of the history of the proposed League; the second is taken up with pertinent comments thereupon; the third deals with the question of its amendment or rejection, which would be extremely valuable were it only for the quotations it contains from both friends and foes of the plan; the fourth broadens our intelligence and lets us into some of the secrets concerning the revision of the League Covenant as compared with the form in which it first came before public attention, although as the Bishop says, "the essential objections to the old still apply to the new." This chapter contains valuable information about the Monroe Doctrine, and also shows how the League would interfere with and control domestic as well as international affairs, on the question of labor, for example.

Chapters five to eight deal with such highly important problems as the relation of the League to the Peace Treaty, demonstrating the distinction between them; rights and powers of the United States Senate in the premises, and America's foreign policy from the beginning.

Chapter fourteen, on European opinion of the League, is an eye-opener to any who have not closely followed the foreign newspapers as quoted in the American press; but the chapter most interesting to us, and which we believe would prove equally so to our readers, is that in which the Bishop discusses the question as to whether the League would prevent war.

He points out that it is of the nature of fallen humanity to fight, and hence that until all men are regenerated, no political organization, diplomatic agreement or other mechanical device can prevent war. As a matter of fact, the League "legalizes war in seven cases and makes it compulsory in three." "In the League Council itself the steel and flint may strike, and the spark may explode the world again and again." "The League's constitution gives to it functions for declaring and carrying on war, and empowers it to call upon all the nations in the League to respond by their armies and navies."

This last fact is the crux of the whole situation as the Bishop views it, for he speaks as an American, as a citizen of the United States. To quote again from his preface, "as a man must have his own family so he must have his own nation, and, in its way, national life is as important as family life. . . . Today nationality is attacked by a modern dogma called internationalism, which means no nationality, and obsessed devotees prate about being citizens of the world as against being citizens of a country.

"This book is written in the interest of America and the world, and treats of an insidious phase of the adverse movement. The world may be small among the great orbs, but it is too large to be governed by a political coterie or a small committee, and the United States is too large to be ruled by any power other than itself."

The book has about 240 pages with a copious index and the Covenant of the League. Paper, 75 cents, cloth $1.50. It can be obtained from the printer, E. A. Yeakel, 1708 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., or through The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 822 N. LaSalle St., Chicago.

Editorial Notes

Watch the Bundle

The President in an address at Turin, Italy, said: "The plans of the modern world are made in the counting house. The men who do the business of the world now shape the destinies of the world." Or, to put it in the words of a newspaper magnate, "The interests of all nations are now bound into one bundle. We must watch that bundle. Its name is commerce."

We quote these utterances as bearing on the fulfilment of Bible prophecy and on the question as to whether we are nearing the end of the age (not the end of the world, please remember).

The prophets both of the Old and New Testaments point to the dominance of business and commerce as we gather to the end of the age. Zechariah's vision of "the ephah that goeth forth," and which is finally related up to the "land of Shinar" (5: 5-11), has usually been so applied. The language of James warning the rich who have "heaped treasure together for the last days" (5: 3) is also in point. Note in that chapter the reference to the relation of capital and labor, the wantonness of the rich and the unjust treatment of the working classes.

Revelation enlarges upon it. In chapter 13 describing the rise of the two beasts, the secular and religious despots of the latter days, there seems to be an allusion both to a money trust and a labor trust, for "no man may buy or sell save he that has the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." And in chapter 18 Babylon is destroyed, Babylon in the land of Shinar, the center and seat of world luxury and power in the last days, Babylon through the abundance of whose delicacies "the merchants of the earth waxed rich." The merchants are weeping and mourning over her "for no man buyeth their merchandise any more;" and every shipmaster is joining with them, "and as many as trade by sea," for their gain is gone.

Yes, if the nations are now bound into one bundle whose name is commerce, the student of the Bible will find great interest in watching that bundle.

Prohibition Not Enough

A correspondent takes us to task for a remark in an editorial in an earlier issue in which we said: "It is better to make men temperate and sober than to try to get rid of the manufacture and sale of intoxicants." He regarded it as a thrust at the prohibition movement which was far from our thought.

The meaning was explained in a later expression of the same editorial that "It is better to make men true disciples of Christ than to try to improve the world in which they live."

Of course it is good to improve the world and to aid in that direction by getting rid of the manufacture and sale of intoxicants, but the comparative futility of the improvement of man's environment while man himself remains the same is demonstrated continually by current events. One such is the strike situation and the race rioting in Chicago at this writing. Nothing so serious has occurred in this city in many years, and yet the saloons have been shut down or cleaned out for nearly a month.

Let us have prohibition and world improvement so far as legislation and humanitarianism can bring them about, but let us not be diverted from the basic principle that all men are shapen in iniquity and conceived in sin and that nothing can change them essentially except the divine miracle of a clean heart and a right spirit through faith in Jesus Christ.

The Negro Problem

In the light of the recent race riots in Washington, Chicago and other places, our subscribers will read with quickened interest the contribution on another page entitled, "The Negro Problem in America." It is the substance of an address given before the Missionary Union of the Moody Bible Institute by one who knows the subject on which he speaks.

We especially ask attention to the latter part of the article where he tells us what the problem is. It is a more serious one he thinks than that of the reconstruction period, though any who went through that period may wonder how that could be. Ten million negroes in this country, only 60 per cent of whom have any education! They are increasing faster than our forces for elevating them are increasing.

Five million are outside of all Christian churches notwithstanding all the money and effort put forth to evangelize them.

What a missionary proposition is thus presented to us at our doors!

Preaching to Jews in New York

Imagine lower Fifth Avenue, New York, at the noon hour. Thousands of Jewish garment workers and others from the "lofts" parade up and down, seeking the air and filling the street with the spirit of Jewry. Jewish newsboys cry out Yiddish papers while the restaurants do a thriving business with their odd Jewish dishes of borsch, lakshen, lodkish, etc.

Here is a great opportunity to reach multitudes of Jews who never enter a mission hall. The New York Jewish Evangelization Society, guided by its director, Thomas M. Chalmers, has undertaken to give the gospel to these thousands at the noon hour on Tuesdays and Thursdays, meetings being held elsewhere on other days. Clear messages are given on sin, the guilt of men and salvation by the blood.

It is a moving scene. There is little or no singing. The first speaker is usually Mr. Chalmers, who gives a message in English with many quotations from the Word in Hebrew and German. The truth is pressed home with much power and the men listen eagerly. Some laugh at or scorn the message. Some seek to take away the crowd, but this utterly fails. Here and there a Jewess nods assent or is angry that anyone will listen. Many want to ask questions, which are not allowed as it disturbs the meeting.

But it is when Mr. Bregman speaks that they are specially stirred and seek to interrupt. Being a Jew and formerly a rabbi, he knows the Jewish mind thoroughly and how to interest them. They call him traitor and renegade. If no policeman is present then riot is apt to break loose. But the crowd is held in check and the Word given with power.

It is interesting, fascinating, a study in human nature and in the working of God's grace after souls. Pray that God will richly bless in winning many to Christ.

New Methods of Church Finance

The War Loan Press Bureau informs us that a Baptist church in Oklahoma is erecting a new edifice where the funds, as rapidly as raised, are placed in War Savings Stamps until needed, thus earning a high, safe rate of interest every month. Also that each of ten departments of a Baptist Sunday-school in Texas has been organized into a War Savings society, class funds being set aside for church improvements. Similar plans have been adopted by a Methodist church in the same state.

St. Chrysostom's Protestant Episcopal Church, Chicago, for some time has been a steady investor in governmental securities, and a boys' Sunday-school class of another Chicago church receives Thrift Stamps for prizes instead of books and cards.

Churches all over the United States are realizing the opportunities offered by War Savings Stamps and the newer Treasury Savings Certificates, which are exempt from all taxes except inheritance, surtaxes and excess profits and war profits taxes, and may be converted into cash at any time at exact face value.

An Apology

We regret that in a treatment of the Sunday-school lesson recently, one who was on our staff at the time entered upon an argument to disprove the Baptist position as to the mode of baptism. We regret even more that the copy got through the editors' hands without the slip being noticed.

Some of our Baptist readers have complained, and we think justifiably. This is an interdenominational publication, and we should not without good cause introduce matters of that kind.

We are thankful to have our attention called to such breaches of courtesy whenever they occur (which in this case was not seriously intended, we feel sure), and we will always do what we can to make a suitable explanation and apology.

Simon Peter's Fall and Recovery

By Rev. L. W. Gosnell, Assistant Dean, The Moody Bible Institute

Rev. L. W. Gosnell

AN OLD writer says: "It seems wonderful to find on the page of inspiration the record of the fall of such an eminent servant of Christ as Simon Peter. We, in our wisdom, would judge it best to draw the curtain of silence over such an event. Not so the Holy Ghost. He has seen fit to tell us plainly of the errors, and failures, and sins, of such men as Abraham, Moses, David, Peter and Paul, in order that we may learn holy lessons from such records—lessons of human frailty, lessons of divine grace, lessons full of solemn warning, and yet of most precious consolation and encouragement. We learn what we are and we learn what God is." The story of Peter's fall and recovery abounds in such lessons.

I

THE PROMISE BEFORE THE FALL

> "And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." (Luke 22:31, 32.)

These verses set before us Satan's demand. He is permitted to sift what purports to be God's wheat, as in the case of Job (Job 1:6-12; 2:1-6). He asked for all the disciples, for the word "you" is plural in Greek, and we know how they were sifted by the events connected with Christ's trial and death. There had been a sifting time in John 6:66, when "many went back, and walked no more with him." But while that was a sifting of false and true disciples, this is a sifting of the false and true in His disciples, and the test is much sharper. Satan's purpose was, of course, malignant, and he hoped they would turn out to be chaff, like Judas, or at least make a miserable breakdown.

Next is set before us Christ's prayer. The word "thee" is singular: He prays for Peter since his need is special and his faith in danger, humanly speaking, of fatal lapse. He calls him by his old name and repeats it as if in sadness. Observe that Christ had already prayed for Peter—the Greek making this quite clear; the prayer was not the result of Peter's repentance but was offered while Peter was still unsuspicious of danger. It reminds us of John's word: "If any man sin we have an advocate with the Father"—even before we repent. Note especially that Christ did not pray that Peter should not fall. "Simon must be permitted to break down, as Jacob his father before had to be broken down, that just as Israel sprang out of crippled Jacob, so Peter, the man of stone, might come out of sifted Simon. Jacob had to give up his cunning, Job his goodness, Simon his strength" (F. W. Grant). Christ only prays Simon's faith may not fail. Peter had been the great confessor of Christ as the Messiah and Son of God (Matt. 16:16), yet his faith in Him was being sifted. How assuring to know that we are not left entirely to Satan, but that God says to him, in answer to our Advocate's prayers, "Thus far, but no further."

Finally, we have Peter's commission: "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Conversion, in Scripture, is applied not only to the first turning of the soul to Christ, but is used for any turning from sin, even on the part of a believer. Here is plainly seen the outcome of Peter's testing. As the result of Christ's intercession he would be made strong, by being led to a consciousness of his weakness, and thus enabled to strengthen his brethren, both among the apostles and in all the ages of the church.

II

THE REASONS FOR THE FALL

1. Self-Confidence

> "And he said unto him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison and to death. And he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me." (Luke 22:33, 34.)

It may be said truly that self-confidence, in some form, is the secret of all failure. "When I am weak, then am I strong." The man who knows himself will never boast as did Peter. Said John Bunyan, "Every one has a better heart than I have," and such a consciousness, casting us upon God for help, is our best safeguard against sin.

"Beware of Peter's word,
  Nor confidently say,
'I never will deny Thee, Lord,'
  But, 'Grant I never may.' "

We understand better now why Peter, in the epistles he wrote later, insisted so much on the need of meekness and godly fear. Christ knew Peter from the first and warned him that before the cock should crow twice he would thrice deny him.

2. Prayerlessness

> "And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the > ground. And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow, and said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation" (Luke 22:44-46).

Luke, like a physician, assigns their sleep, psychologically and physically, to sorrow. Jesus, too, is ready to make allowance, saying, "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak" (Matt. 26:41). Yet he craved the sympathy and help of these human companions. "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" (Matt. 26:40)—even after three years of personal association! Indeed, in Mark's Gospel, which is thought to have been written largely under the influence of Peter, the question is made individual, "Simon, sleepest thou?" (Mark 14:37)—as though to say, "After all your protestations!" As a matter of fact, did not their slumber root back in ignorance of themselves? If they had realized their weakness and danger, they would have watched with spiritual alertness, and prayed, with spiritual dependence. How great is the danger of those who slumber on in spiritual indifference. It will be recalled that when Christian, in The Pilgrim's Progress, saw the man shut up in an iron cage of despair and asked him how he came there, the man began his answer with these words, "I left off to watch."

3. Distance

> "Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high priest's house. And Peter followed afar off" (Luke 22:54).

In a spiritual sense, this is always highly dangerous. The only man who is safe is the man who has a satisfied heart, because he lives in fellowship with Christ. "The joy of the Lord is your strength." "Rejoice in the Lord," says Paul to the Philippians (3:1): "to write the same things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe." It is half-hearted service, following afar off, which leads on to denial of Christ. In Peter's case, there would have been no difficulty if he had entered the palace with John. No one would have raised a question then as to Peter's relation to Christ, for it would have been manifest, and the temptation to denial would not have arisen. But as it was, Peter had to face his foes alone and be plied with the question, "Art thou also one of this man's disciples?" (John 18:17, 25.)

4. Association

> "And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them" (Luke 22:25).

Here he sits among Christ's enemies, as though one of them. For a man of Peter's nature, familiar, lacking reserve, this was an almost certain forecast of failure. It is difficult to be true to our profession, sometimes, when forced among Christs' foes, but how much more difficult, when we elect to be among them. Peter's only safety lay in a frank avowal of his discipleship, but this was not forthcoming. One has said of his failure, "It began in sneaking." There is much wisdom in showing our colors early in our dealings with new acquaintances. I recall how I was saved much sorrow by refusing to go pleasuring one Sunday with a new acquaintance, because I had been brought up to respect God's day; I saw him in later years, marred by sin, into which he would probably have led me. We agree heartily with the old writer who says Peter "had no business with the flunkeys."

III

THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE FALL

> "But a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with him. And he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not. And after a little while another saw him, and said, Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not. And about the space of one hour after another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with him: for he is a Galilean. And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew" (Luke 22:56-60).

Oriental houses had an interior court, of quadrangular shape, with a passage from the street to the court, entered by a gateway. Peter had gone into the court in which a fire was burning.

There are some variations in the accounts of Peter's denials, but this is to be expected in independent narratives. It is suggested that stress is not to be put upon three presons who questioned Peter, but upon three periods when he was questioned. The first was at the gate, on entering the court; the second, beside the fire; the third, in the court by the kinsman of Malchus. At any rate the principal point is that Peter thrice denied his Master.

There is a downward progress in the denials.

First, there was simple evasion, "Woman, I know him not," or, as given by Mark (14:68) "I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest."

Next, he supported his denial by a solemn oath, as reported by Matthew (26:72).

The third time, as Matthew (27:64) and Mark (14:71) both relate, he descended from a solemn oath to profanity, for he began "to curse and to swear, I know not the man." Perhaps this had been one of his habits in the old fisher life. It is a melancholy comfort to think he supposed they would feel certain he was no follower of Christ if they heard him swearing! This habit is one which clings tenaciously to the soul and men redeemed from a life of passion sometimes fall into it. There is encouragement for such in the fact that though the chief apostle fell into this sin the Lord did not give him up. But what a foolish sin it is. "None but the devil's sayings need the devil's proofs," says an old writer, and Horace Mann wrote as follows: "'The devil tempts men through their ambition, their cupidity, or their appetite, until he comes to the profane swearer, whom he clutches without reward."

How can we express the depth of Peter's sin in denying Christ? Peter, who had that night partaken of the Last Supper, deserts his Master! Peter, who was the great confessor, is become the denier! Peter, who was willing to die for Christ, is ashamed to be taunted for His sake! No wonder he never forgot that hour: we find him on the day of Pentecost saying to the Jews, "Ye denied the Holy One and the Just," and in his second Epistle he speaks of some "denying the Lord who bought them."

> "Ashamed of Jesus! that dear Friend
> On whom my hopes of heaven depend!
> No; when I blush be this my shame,
> That I no more revere His name."

IV

THE RESTORATION FROM THE FALL

To begin with, how wonderful that a man so fallen should be restored. Judas by transgression fell and went to his own place, but Peter is restored to his old place—aye, to an even higher place. The difference between the two men has been thus expressed by Dr. W. H. Griffith Thomas: "Judas lost his faith, then cast away his love, and went over to the enemy as a traitor. Peter thought to save himself without hurting Christ. Selfish, weak, and wicked, but not apostate. Judas thought of the consequence of his sin, and so came remorse leading to despair. Peter thought of the sin itself, and so was led to repentance and hope. 'Satan tripped Peter, but trapped Judas.'" Peter's recovery was altogether a matter of grace, as much as was his conversion. How deeply indebted was he! How deeply indebted are we!

There were four elements in Peter's restoration.

1. The Cockcrowing

Just after the third denial, Luke says (22:60): "And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew."

God often uses voices other than human in His yearning desire to restore wandering souls. Mark Guy Pearse, in his years of mission work in London, found that frequently a bunch of old fashioned flowers, placed in the hand of a fallen girl, would open the fountain of her tears, for it would revive memories of the old home and happier days. Men have heard the voice of God in the chimes sounding out from some church tower in a great city.

2. The Lord's Look

> "And the Lord turned and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And Peter went out and wept bitterly" (Luke 22:61, 62).

The cockcrowing in itself might have had no effect on Peter. Indeed, the cock crew the first time earlier in the night, after the first denial (Mark 14:68) but Peter, in his passion, seems not to have noticed it. But now his Lord, who stood in a room opening on the court, or may have been led across the court that minute, turns and looks upon Peter, as he denies Him with cursing and swearing. This brings back the saying about the cockcrowing and the three-fold denial and breaks Peter's heart. Many who resist all else break down before wounded love. I knew a proud-spirited boy who resented the punishment administered by his mother. One day he struck her. The look she cast upon him, of surprise and grief, did what all the chastisement had failed to do, and he grew up to honor his mother. The Greek word which describes Christ's look shows us it was a sudden, piercing, gaze. We cannot imagine it, but surely it contained reproof and sorrow and entreaty. Peter was smitten to the heart and went out and wept bitterly. Indeed, some of the ancients say that as long as Peter lived he never heard a cock crow but it set him a weeping.

Some may wonder whether there is anything in Christ's dealing with us corresponding to His looking upon Peter. Surely we have such a correspondence in the Word of God. As C. H. McIntosh puts it: "His look upon Peter answers to His word brought home to us in the power of the Holy Ghost." How often has the Spirit of God used the Word of God to reveal to us that we are not only disregarding the divine holiness but also grieving the divine love.

3. The Private Interview

Three verses refer to this. First, Mark, who wrote under Peter's influence, tells of the message from the risen Christ which must have thrilled the humbled disciples' hearts:

"But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter that he goeth before you into Galilee" (Mark 16:7). He needed such a special assurance that he was still included among the disciples. The rest of the story is given in two passages: "The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon" (Luke 24:34); "He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve" (1 Cor. 15:5).

The others may wait, even John, but Peter must be assured of the Master's unchanging love. How gracious it was to see the wanderer alone! We are not told what took place at that interview and we need not know. It is sufficient that the Master welcomed the erring disciple. "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance" (Luke 15:7).

4. The Public Reinstatement

This is set forth in John 21:15-19:

> "So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs. He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my sheep. He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? and he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep. Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdest thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not. This spake he, signifying by what death he should glorify God. And when he had spoken this, he saith unto him, Follow me."

It may be asked what need there was of a public reinstatement, since Peter had been privately restored. We answer in the words of another: "The disciple had been restored privately, the apostle must be restored publicly." This was the more necessary since the denial had been public.

Note how many reminders there were of the night of the denial. In verse 9 we read: "As soon as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there." What memories that would stir in Peter! The words, "when they had dined," in verse 15, carry our thoughts back to the words, "after supper," in John 13:2. Again, in the passage before us there is a three-fold inquiry, corresponding to the three-fold denial, and the reference to feeding the sheep reminds us of the night when the Shepherd was smitten and the sheep scattered (Matt. 26:31).

But it is to be especially noted that Christ makes no reference to the past until after they had dined. Peter sat with the rest in the glow of Christ's love, unafraid on account of his sin. Now that it is evident the old communion is restored, Jesus has somewhat to say to Peter which is both an ordeal and a kindness.

Peter's Confession

First, we have Peter's confession. Jesus said, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" Notice, he calls him by the old name, Simon, which would remind him of his natural state, in accord with which he had acted when he denied Christ. Again, the Greek word for "love" used by Jesus (αγαπαν), stands for an unselfish love, which expects nothing back—friendship, love. Then, too, Jesus wishes to know whether Peter loves Him more than these other disciples, since he had insisted that should all forsake Christ he would not. It must have been a painful question for Peter, but a salutary one. And note his answer: "Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." He uses a different word for "love" (φιλειν), a lower word than that of Jesus' indicating a personal, clinging affection which seeks return, a matter of passion rather than will. He will not claim the higher form of love described by Jesus; and is silent as to loving more than the other disciples. How humble he is!

Jesus repeats the question, omitting any reference to the others, and only asking whether Peter has the high type of love for him of which he had spoken before. Again, Peter will only humbly assert that he has an affection for Christ. When the question is asked the third time Jesus Himself uses Peter's word for love, as if to say, "Are you sure you have even this lower kind of love, that you have even an affection for me?" What a searching question for Simon Peter! No wonder he is grieved when Jesus asks the question the third time and seems to doubt whether he even has the lower kind of love. He can only assert, "Lord thou knowest all things: thou knowest that I love thee." As F. W. Grant puts it: "Thus his self-judgment is complete. Searched out by the divine eye, he is found and owns himself, not better but worse than others; so self-ignorant that he cannot claim quality for his love at all, nothing more than he feels and is conscious of, and which (he has so failed in showing it) omniscience alone might see." But though Peter was thus searched, what a privilege to be allowed three times to confess his love for Christ just as three times he had denied!

Peter's Commission

Next, we have Peter's commission. Christ says, "Feed my lambs." Again He says, "Feed (tend, R. V.) my sheep," i. e. shepherd, guide, protect, provide for the mature ones of the flock, the advanced believers. The third time He says, "Feed my sheep," but uses a different word for sheep, referring to those between the lambs and the mature ones. What a proof of Christ's love for Peter that he is willing to commit to his hands the sheep who are so dear to Him and for whom He died. Peter has now given up his confidence in himself, and is conscious only of his weakness, but only now is he fit to strengthen his brethren. One says truly, "When brought to nothing, He can use us in our nothingness, and when He can use us He will."

Peter's Cross

Finally, we have before us Peter's cross. He had protested his willingness to die for his Lord but had miserably failed Him. To be restored to the apostleship would seem enough, but grace goes beyond our imaginations, and here the Lord tells him he shall have the privilege of martyrdom for His sake. "Follow me," said Jesus, and follow Him he did to the cross, for tradition says he was crucified head downward. "What a contrast between Simon 'young'—restless, forward, blundering, boastful, self-confident; and Peter 'old'—subdued, mellowed, passive, crucified! What a difference between a man walking whither he would, and a man following a rejected Lord along the dark and narrow pathway of the cross, home to glory!" (C. H. McIntosh.)

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman illustrates God's dealings with his wandering children by a story told by Adelaide Proctor. It is the story of a nun who kept the portal at a convent in France, and cared for the altar of Mary. Her heart went out to a soldier she nursed, she left the convent and in Paris fell into a life of sin. After years she came back to the convent steps to die. She was taken in and nursed back to health, when, lo! she found another woman had taken her place in the convent through the years, and now that she had come back the place was awaiting her. She slipped back into her old position and few knew she had ever gone away.

"Some would tell us if a man fails, he can never recover his position; and no doubt, under government, we must reap as we sow. But grace is another thing altogether. Government drove Adam out of Eden, and never replaced him there, but grace announced the victorious seed of the woman. Government kept Moses out of Canaan, but grace conducted him to Pisgah's top. Government sent a perpetual sword upon David's house, but grace made the son of Bathsheba the wisest and wealthiest of Israel's kings."

The nun only got back her position, but Peter was advanced from being a "fisher of men" to being a shepherd of the flock of God, who shall receive "the crown of glory," and a martyr, who shall receive "the crown of life." With what new meaning can we sing, "He restoreth my soul!"

Dwell Deep

Dwell deep. Tempests and tumults shake the world. Chaos
With raging soul, and face of fierce expression, walks
To and fro, and laughs derisively. The darkness
Of barbaric ages has come again, and men
And nations grope amid a gloomy wilderness.
The sun has hid his face, and direful anarchy,
Spawn of hell, with wreckage is strewing all the world.
Mutterings, premonitory of fearful storms,
Are heard whichever way our faces turn. Therefore Dwell deep, and rest your head upon the heart of God.

Dwell deep. Men whose hearts are full of hate and envy
Prate of peace, and everlasting brotherhood. Guns
Scarce silent, smoke, and swords still reeking are restless
In their scabbards. Greed and vice and crime, grim demons,
Swagger arm in arm, and scatter seeds whose harvests
Are plenteous wherever beats a human heart.
Children lift up their wondering faces; women
Sad and pallid, are filled with solemn fears while men
Bend 'neath the burdens that press hard upon their souls.
The times are strange, and full of mystery. Therefore Dwell deep, and rest your head upon the heart of God.

Dwell deep. When doubts assail and stealthy shadows creep
Across your sky, and fill you with a sense of doom
And thunders roar, and lightnings frighten with their glare,
And old foundations seem to crumble 'neath your feet,
Dwell deep, and rest your soul amid eternal things.
Upon the surface storms may rage, and billows break
On every beach of life, and fling disaster
Far and wide; but if your soul is dwelling quiet
In the depths, naught can harm you evermore. Therefore Dwell deep, and rest your head upon the heart of God.

All-Sufficient Grace for a Reconstruction Period

By the Rev. J. H. Jowett, D. D.

Sermon at City Temple, London, Stenographically Reported

"NONE of these things move me. Neither count I my life dear unto myself so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God." Acts 20:24.

Bonds and imprisonment awaited him. And these are by no means the least of the experiences. His circumstances were never free from turbulence. You will seek in vain along this man's road for green pastures and still waters where the only sound is the singing of the birds.

The Apostle Paul is always on the hard road. He is always confronted by a thousand brutal antagonisms. If I should image in my own mind the character of his journey, I would call it strangely like an uncertain country amid the cliffs of Engelberg, where you are guided by red dashes of paint, splashed against the outjutting rocks of the country-side. The Pauline road is red, as he moves from place to place, like crimson marks of paint and sacrifice.

Will you take a glance along the road and see if the crimson emblem is not an unbroken line? At Damascus they watch him, at Antioch they raise persecution against him and Barnabas, and expel them out of their coast. At Iconium an assault was made, both of the Gentiles and of the Jews, to use them despitefully, and the apostle fled. At Lystra they stoned and threw him out of the city. At Philippi they laid stripes upon him and cast him into prison. At Thessalonica certain Jews of the baser sort set all the city in an uproar. At Berea the Jews came also and stirred up the people. "I fought with beasts at Ephesus." And so on right away to Rome.

The Hero of Faith

And to add to the wonder of it, we are told that this brave apostle of the Lord dragged about a body, a heavy weight of physical infirmity. He now and again refers to it, and with changeable modes of expression. Once he refers to it as a thorn in the flesh, again as an earthen vessel, brittle, easily chipped, easily shattered and broken. And I hear him borrowing the image from his own trade, refer to the body as a light tent, so very fragile, even the slightest wind would carry it away.

But what this body got through! What things it was able to endure! I suppose the apostle did much of his journeying in boats, exposed to the rigours and hardships of exacting climates, the extraordinary cold heights and the enervating valley. I do not think I was ever quite able to appreciate what he meant by that simple word, "in cold," until about three years ago when I was traveling in Asia Minor, over the ground he journeyed. The rigours of that climate were borne by this man of exceedingly frail and fragile frame.

Three times he suffered shipwreck, three times beaten with rods, five times flogged with Roman thongs, in fastings often, in hunger and thirst. Yet this sick man, always sick, so ill and so afflicted, preached about for a whole generation as ambassador of redeeming grace. And now down the second generation we see him still on the same road, borne up by a spirit of the same dauntless courage, knowing nothing he said, but the command. The bonds and imprisonment is my bloodred line of sacrificial and painful experience, and is all I would ever know.

What a road, my brethren, and what a traveler! What a commission! Yes, and what a glorious hero of faith.

What Happened to Him

How did he face it all? If this man had a road of that character, and if these were the kind of infirmities with which he was weighted all along the way, how did he face it? In what mood and spirit did he march? What had he behind him?

He had behind him and within him the energizing force of a tremendous experience. Something happened to this man on the way to Damascus. What happened regenerated his whole view, and transformed his inner life. One thing we cannot forget, it is that the secret of Damascus in him, was that with which he confronted Jerusalem. The light that shone upon him on the way to Damascus changed the whole perspective of his life, as surely as if by some volcanic convulsion a gigantic mountain were to be destroyed in the countryside.

What kind of experience was it with which he traveled this exceedingly rocky road? What happened? This happened. "I was apprehended by Christ Jesus."

An exceedingly vivid, full-colored and picturesque word. It is used elsewhere in the New Testament for the overtaking of a traveler by a robber on a lonely road. "I was apprehended." The hands of the Lord Jesus fell upon him suddenly, as the hands of a robber would fall on a traveler. He was gripped. And he was gripped by the hand of a friend. On the way to Damascus this man was overtaken by Jesus. And from that very startling moment Jesus never let him go. "I was apprehended by Christ Jesus."

And in another instance he describes that momentous experience. He says that "our Lord Jesus was seen of me also." Our language does not quite bring out the fulness of the New Testament word. It means the wide-open eyes of a child. It means the contemplation of an overwhelming surprise. "He was seen of me."

You have almost to prolong the word, and put wonder into it, if you are to feel the spirit of the apostle.

And in another place. "Have I not seen Christ"? That is another word, a more intimate word, which suggests clear discernment, as though the Lord was coming near His temple and had His hand on the latch. He was seen of him, in the first place, as a surprising presence. Afterwards he sees Him at the door, with His hand outstretched on the latch.

Now hear him again, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Now the latch is being lifted, and the Lord is now within. The Lord liveth in me. This man's life has now become the temple of the Lord's indwelling presence. And the atmosphere makes the holy place.

I can only mention one other instance, "For to me to live is Christ." Not that he had his personality pressed out of him, but to have it impressed, energised, enthused. He hands himself over every moment to his Saviour, and his Saviour hands his personality back to him every moment, steeped, sealed, with the consecrated, wonderful impress of the Lord.

All these things happened on the way to Damascus. And it was with that great secret in his soul, that this man wrestled with all the difficulties of the road.

It is not the old Saul who now faced the menace at Jerusalem and the stoning at Lystra, and the mocking at Athens, and the corruption at Corinth and Rome. It is the old Saul lost in Jesus. The old Saul seen and entered and possessed by Jesus Christ, literally a whole heaven of difference. It is Saul made over again. It is Paul, a new relation in Christ Jesus. That is how that man walked down the road.

A Consciousness of Obligation

If I may add another description of the spirit of Paul I would say this, he met his antagonisms under a profound consciousness of obligation. This man had been made free, and he felt his freedom bound him again to the One Who had delivered him. He had been bound by the riches of grace, and now yearned for every child of God to share the same grace. The spiritual riches made him the debtor of everybody. He was their spiritual debtor.

Therefore this man went about looking into the eyes of his fellowmen, and yearning to share with everybody the invaluable riches with which he had been fed by the Lord. He was always trying to give away what the Lord had given to him. And he never overcame or discharged the debt, and the more he gave away the more he had to give, until the very weight of the glory gloriously overpowered him with the necessity of obligation.

Necessity is a great word. "Necessity is laid upon me." And all through this Paul is boasting of his freedom. The chimes of spiritual liberty are ringing everywhere in the letters of the apostle. And yet he says, "Necessity is laid upon me, woe unto me if I preach not."

This is not the obligation born out of bondage. It is the necessity born out of sovereign grace. This man is a slave just because he is free. He is the bondslave of the Lord Jesus who gave him his liberty. The love of Christ constrained him. Literally, put him into bonds and carried him along the way as though he had been taken up by a vast maelstrom. That is the way this man met every antagonism. That was the way this man knocked at every closed door, as free and yet bound, sharing the unsearchable riches of grace, and yet indebted to everybody.

Now, my brethren, great lovers like that are not easily enticed from the road, limping aside when stones are in the path, or turning aside from difficulties, or when a lion leaps out, or when some door remains obstinately closed at which he has been hammering through the dark watches of a long and tedious night. Men who are moved by a constraint of this kind do not turn aside.

Now I come straight to my text. "None of these things move me." In telling of the love of the Lord I set no bounds, in joy to finish my course, and testify of the gospel of the grace of God. Such was the great motto, and such was the great spirit with which this great apostle trudged along his heavy road.

I am going to ask a further question. What did the apostle conceive to be his motive as he moved along the road?

How grateful I am I have not to seek for an answer. I find it answered completely in my text. He said when he felt that frail body of his along the road was losing courage, the only thing he had to do was to testify the gospel of the grace of God. This man, with this Damascus secret in his spirit, swayed by the mighty strength of redeeming love, with a sense of indebtedness in service, went everywhere and anywhere testifying to the gospel of the grace of God.

The Meaning of Grace

He went to Ephesus, that home of superstition, testifying the gospel of the grace of God.

He went to Corinth, that center of pollution and materialism, testifying of the grace of God. He went to Rome, that very center and throne of high imperialism testifying.

Everywhere he went, across mountain roads, trudging through solitary plains, crossing stormy seas, that everywhere he might testify the gospel of the grace of God.

And what did he mean by grace? I am perfectly sure that when I ask a question like that I touch the supreme difficulty that every minister has been contending with. All through our ministry we have been trying to tell something of the grace of God. When we have done our best we have scarcely begun.

One of my congregation at Carrs Lane went out to the West, and he wanted to send his minister some idea of his enormous environment. There came by post a letter with these words: "Enclosed is a sample of my environment." And the enclosure was just a feather of a tropical bird. Just a sample of my environment!

I have tried to speak to you about the grace of the Lord Jesus. When I have done my best it is just a feather. Just the beginning of a continent of beauty and glory that is hidden in this marvelous word grace.

What is grace? Grace is more than mercy, more than tenderness,—more than the multitude of tender mercies. Grace is more than love, more than innocent love, grace is holy love.

But it is holy love in spontaneous movement, going out in eager quest toward the unholy and the unlovely, that by the ministry of divine sacrifice it might redeem the unlovely and unholy into its own strength and beauty. The grace of God is holy love on the move to thee and me, and the like of thee and me. It is God on the move undiscerned, going out toward the unlovely, that He might win them into the brightness and glory of His own likeness. And that is only a feather of a bird that lifts its wings in the world.

Grace by Comparison

I will tell you what the apostle does when he wants to show you what a big thing grace is. He mentions some other big things, and when he has mentioned the big things, he brings the biggest thing, and the lesser things that seemed so big have an eclipse.

Bear with me while I mention one or two here. Paul looks about and lays hold of the guilt of the race, one of the biggest things he knew. He places that before us in all the appalling frown and menace, and we are just overwhelmed by its bounds, and then he testifies the gospel of the grace of God, and lo! the guilt is dissolved, just as ice and snow and frost are loosened under the genial warmth of Spring. He sings: "We have forgiveness in the riches of His grace."

Then he looks about and lays hold of the sin of the race. Who can portray and unfold the sin of the race with such terror as the Apostle Paul? And when he has dealt with it, in the first and second chapters of Romans, that sin abounds on every side in its black and presumptuous sovereignty, then he testifies the gospel of the grace of God, and says: "Where sin abounded grace doth much more abound."

It is like the fulness of the ocean, receiving into its enveloping grave the sewerage and the utter pollution of some great city. "Where sin abounded grace did much more abound." The bigger thing is eclipsed by the biggest thing, which is the grace of the Lord.

Then he looks round again for a big thing. He sees the discords of the race. Our jars and our jealousies, our hatreds, our racial clashes, and divisions. And when we are just appalled at the savage sovereignty of racial alienation, he testifies of the grace of God, which breaks down what he calls "the middle wall of partition."

My brethren, racial alienation is our great menace. But the grace of God is mightiest. He looks out upon the soul of the race. He looks on the guilt, the sin and the racial alienation and the sorrow of the race, stretching on every side like a putrid marsh. Then he testifies of the grace of God, which can transform the waste, and convert it into healthful soil, in which all the fruits and flowers of the Spirit will grow.

What Grace Can Do

I cannot even try to tell you what the Apostle Paul says that grace can do. One can preach twenty sermons on it.

I will tell you what he said. There are sorrowing hearts in my congregation. He said, the grace of God brings to the sorrowing the breath of endurance. We are strengthened in the grace that is in the Lord Jesus.

And he said that grace brings to the sorrowing soul the tender light of the dawn. Do you remember it? "We have good hope through grace."

He even says that grace can go into the very heart of sorrow and instill the springs of praise. Do you remember the beautiful phrase: "Singing with grace in your hearts unto the Lord." The singer is the sufferer; in the night there are songs.

Do you wonder that a man with a view like this, and an experience like this and a message like this should be running everywhere, up and down about the world telling everybody the tidings of redeeming grace?

That is how the heroes of the apostolic church faced the antagonisms of the whole world. They held the glowing secret of personal ministry. They felt the driving power of the constraining love. They believed in the overflowing adequacy and sufficiency of redeeming grace, and when they met with obstacles they almost rejoiced in the obstacles.

Almost? Altogether. That is what one apostle shouted out: "Count it all joy when you come to a trucky bit of road." Because they knew a multiplication of difficulties would only tend to manifest the power of the grace of God.

"None of these things move me. I set no value on my life compared with the joy of finishing my course in the ministry to testify the gospel of the grace of God."

Are We Following Paul?

Now, my brethren, are we in the apostolic succession? How is it with the apostles' successors? How is it with the church and the toilers in our own land?

We are living in fierce and turbulent times: "Ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars: nation shall rise against nation: there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. There will be great tribulation." All the cosmic system of the world will be shaken. Whatever these words may mean they are a wonderful description of our own day. With all this upon us my brethren, how are we facing it?

I have been very feebly trying to show you how one of the greatest of the apostles faced that necessity. How are we facing it in ourselves? Have we got sure foothold, or are we moving from our standing? Are we holding our lives dear unto ourselves, or are we gloriously bold in the deep eternal verities of personal experience that strengthened the Apostle Paul? Have we had some stupendous personal experience in our lives as unchanging as the unchanging Matterhorn, when the shadows are gathering, and when the flowers are withering? Have we been apprehended by Christ Jesus and do we feel His grip upon us now? Do we feel the greatest constraints of His redeeming grace? If we do we can never be dull dreamers. Though the world experience the most awful change we need not fear. Why should we fear, and why should we doubt?

The Optimistic Note

My brethren, I confess quite frankly I think the church of the living God ought to sound a more optimistic note. We have the unsearchable riches of the grace of God. We have the same grace with which the Apostle Paul confronted Ephesus, and Corinth, and Rome. We can meet the need of New York, and London, and Calcutta. That grace is all-sufficient.

And it is our privilege to accept the power of a like spirit in our homeland. What huge needs surround us, and in what huge variety! What hunger is around us! Thousands of men and women around us today who have lost their spiritual bearings in the last few years. A vast pall has fallen upon them; has gathered about their feet. Their light has been blotted out. The footprints along the road have been lost. They are stumbling along like deluded travelers who have been overtaken by the night. And it is the message of God to testify to these staggering souls the grace of the Lord.

On the other hand I do believe there are thousands of people who are just beginning to find their spiritual bearings because of the happenings of the last few years. Three years ago they lived in a world that was no bigger than a cave. Their horizon was built of material walls, and their world responding to material interests and transient aims and carnal delights.

And now! The walls are crackling, and under the shattering blow of sorrow, and tragedy and calamity they are having their first startling glimpse of a nobler and larger world.

It is our privilege to testify to these awakening souls the gospel of the grace of God. They are round about in the homeland. There are souls that are crushed with the oppressive weight of woe, and bereavement. And their wounds will not be staunched. What is there for people like this? What but the gentle ministry of His healing:

"He makes the wounded spirit whole.
He calms the troubled breast.
He's manna to the hungry soul
And to the weary, rest."

The Task Before Us

I look further than the homeland for the towering needs, and I see in most of the world the impossibility of lifting up and re-establishing our fallen ideals. It will not be an easy thing, when the war is over, to rebuild throughout Europe our broken homes. It will not be an easy task to restore our ruined churches.

It will be an infinitely more difficult thing to recover our lost ideals, to reconstitute our conceptions of the undivided unity of the holy catholic church, to restore again to the minds of men the vision of human brotherhood, and of righteous good will and of divine favor, and to work into the purposes of man the great possibilities in Christ Jesus of liberty, equality and fraternity.

And, my brethren, I think the most stupendous task which lies before us is the re-equipment and refurnishing of the mind of the race. By grace and truth the seemingly impossible thing may be accomplished, and with all these industrial and social problems whose menace is even now traveling our streets and before we know where we are will be hammering at our doors, behind and beneath all these tasks, I was going to say the common groundwork of them all, in which probably all of them are rooted, is our modern sin throughout the world, the bed and groundwork of all our deepest woe.

My brethren, in the face of all these things are we daunted? Are the soldiers of Jesus afraid? Why should the church of God flinch?

The immensity of our task is also the index of our resources. And our antagonisms are only the measure of our opportunities. Our experience is in proportion to the measure of our need.

Everywhere people are calling for the full satisfaction of redeeming grace. I think that is one of the benefits of living in two countries; that you can see more of the grace of God in operation. And everywhere I go across that land that is in danger of a commercial, deadly materialism, and never more deadly than in the days of this colossal war, I find the people are calling for the satisfaction of redeeming grace, calling in their degradation, calling in their quest for rest, calling in their sleep, calling in their waking.

Everywhere, in lands far away the sons of men are opening their eyes. What shall they see?

Eight hundred million in China are opening their eyes. Upon what shall they look? I know that Confucianism is hanging out her banners, but she has lost her spiritual control. All who know China best say that the Chinese mind is empty. Who is going to fill it?

The cultured school in India is walking about in the open road in quest of the satisfaction of redeeming grace, and fifty million educated Hindoos are groping for spiritual life.

In Africa, Mohammedanism is marching faster than Christianity. My brethren, how is it? Has Mohammedanism more urgency in her message? Has she greater treasure in her dowry? Mohammedanism has no vision. She has not much standing. She has no specific for sin, no creed. Everywhere the African is calling for the satisfaction of redeeming grace. Have you heard of it?

I hear them calling. My God! I hear them calling far more poignantly than I did. I hear them calling from lands where the love of Jesus has never been known. I hear them calling from the mountain regions of Mongolia, from the secret fastnesses of Thibet, from the mountains of Afghanistan, from almost immeasurable breadths in Africa, where the voice of Him Who bringeth good tidings has never yet been heard.

Everywhere the world is calling. She is calling in her delusions, in her undefined groping and desire, calling in her weariness and sin. How fares it with the church of God? Is she ready? Are her feet shod with the readiness of the gospel of peace? Is she moving only in reluctance and timidity and fear? Or is she bravely responding to the thrilling calling? Is she speaking in doubt and unbelief? Or is she replying everywhere in the glorious inspiration of her quenchless hope?

My brethren, let this be my closing word. Jesus lives. His grace is still obtainable. His grace is all-sufficient. We are all as His people, to face a difficult road, and the children of faith have always been most justified in their most audacious claims.

Oh, thou, that bringest good tidings, get thee out to the mountains of Jerusalem. Lift up thy voice, with strength lift it up, be not afraid, say unto the people, behold your God!

Some Fallacies of Evolution

By J. T. Spangler, Professor of Philosophy and Religious Education, Lebanon Valley College, Annville, Pa.

EVOLUTION, as commonly held, is the theory that the cosmos, the world of order, including things physical, mental, moral, social and spiritual, has been evolved from an antecedent chaos by resident forces. Charles Darwin, however, admitted that, so far as life is concerned, the creation of a few primordial germs must be posited. If this be so, why should one be accused of shallowness who contends that the Bible teaches the intervention of the Creator at the beginning of all things, at the beginning of life and at the beginning of human life? And the Bible does not err in setting forth an intelligent and benevolent maker of things as they appear within the creative acts of Genesis.

In the introduction to The Other Side of Evolution by Rev. Alexander Patterson, Prof. G. Frederick Wright, of Oberlin College, says: "The doctrine of evolution as it is now becoming current in popular literature is one-tenth bad science and nine-tenths bad philosophy. Darwin was not strictly an evolutionist and rarely used the word. He endeavored simply to show that species were enlarged varieties. Herbert Spencer, however, came in with his sweeping philosophical theory of the evolution of all things through natural processes, and took Darwin's work in a limited field as a demonstration of his philosophy. It is this philosophy which many popular writers and teachers, and some thoughtless scientific men, have taken up and made the center of their systems."

Discarded Theories

Very interesting, indeed, are the very many theories, supposedly contradictory of the Bible, that have been discarded by the circles of scientists who have held them. And just as interesting are the names of distinguished scientists who were sometime evolutionists, but who renounced evolution as mere theory. Mention may be made of Virchow, the distinguished German physiologist; Wundt, the founder of experimental psychology; and Cope, the very eminent American physiologist. And is it not significant that such men as Lord Kelvin, England's grand man of science; Sir J. William Dawson, the eminent geologist and naturalist of Canada; Dr. Etheridge, of the British Museum, and Sir Robert Anderson, the great English humanist, never accepted the theory? Many others could be mentioned.

Professor Wundt said that his acceptance of the evolutionary hypothesis was the crime of his youth. Dr. Etheridge said: "Nine-tenths of the talk of evolutionists is sheer nonsense, not founded on observation and wholly unsupported by fact. In all this great museum there is not a particle of evidence of the transmutation of species. This museum is full of proofs of the utter falsity of their views." Similar are the words of John Ruskin: "I have never yet heard one logical argument in its favor. I have heard and read many that are beneath contempt." At this point it may be noted that the most distinguished scientists are frank to admit that the hypothesis of the evolution of species by variation remains unproved.

Is the Pot Greater Than the Potter?

And what is variation but an accident in an inferior species? And how is it possible for a superior order of being to be evolved out of a mere accident? Yet we are asked to believe that natural selection builds an organism about an accident; and that thus the whole orderly creation up to, and including, man came into being. Is the pot greater than the potter? Man is not very different zoologically from the ape. But since the dawn of history the ape has remained a mere ape. It cannot be shown that he has advanced, accidentally or otherwise. Man, on the other hand, has made stupendous advances along all lines. Does the small physiological difference account for the marvelous intellectual, moral and spiritual supremacy of man? Surely not. Man came not by an accident, but by creation.

But what is natural selection but selection by nature? Is it anything more, if we say that it operates by resident forces? Surely it is only an impersonal something; and it is as ruthless as a pestilence. If it is the one thing that accounts for everything, then its concomitants, "survival of the fittest" and "might makes right" are absolutely a part of it, deny this as its devotees will.

And look along its way. Behold, its victims are legion. As one from his own point of time looks back through the alleged ages of ages and marks the victims lying along the way up to oneself, he may well ask with Dr. A. M. Fairbairn, "Has not the price been too great?" One could not be happy in the thought that oneself and his children and grandchildren and descendants, to the end, are to be victims along the way, even though the sure final issue were in John Fiske's spiritualized man.

Three Indictments Against It

This theory is open to the charge of fatalism, because, according to its very implications, man is only a victim, the plaything of an impersonal force. It is open to the charge of deism, because it leaves no room for Providence. It has no place for a "Father who pities His children." It is open to the charge of being atheistic, even when professedly theistic, because it denies the deity of Christ and the deity and personality of the Holy Spirit.

I care not for a professed theism that has a sonless Father and a messengerless, sovereign God; that thus violates the holy trinity and gives back a despoiled God. This is not theism; it is its opposite. Jesus said, "I and the Father are one;" and "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." How then can one be violated without the violation of the other? How can the deity of the one be denied and the deity of the other held?

Profession may be very far from faith. Not only does it deny the deity of Christ; it also denies his saviourhood. Man is not a hopeless sinner; rather is he inherently good. Therefore he needs not a substitutionary death, but education. And with these denials go the Scriptures. They are good for educational purposes, but there are other books just as good. And so there is no inspired Bible. It denies the fundamentals, every one of them. How can a Christian profess to believe in it?

The War Its Logical Result

The recent world war was another logical effect of the evolutionary hypothesis, of the theory of natural selection and its two correlations. In Germany, according to Friedrich Nietzsche, was the super-man, the "Son of God born from heaven," the fittest to survive. And in order to survive, might is right, and faustrecht —first right—the justifiable method. Thus the horrors and cruelties employed were but the logical expression of the philosophy of Spencer and Haeckel and Nietzsche.

It has been said that Nietzsche was insane. Perhaps he was. But it cannot be denied that he was absolutely logical in decrying Christianity because of its mercy, kindness, sympathy and love, and in exalting cruelty, frightfulness and diabolism.

This is the certain logic of the philosophy. And in a deluded world the Antichrist will entrench himself in political power by this same philosophy; and by the same the horrors of the tribulation period will be justified by the Antichrist and his puppets.

Despite the assurances that war, on a large scale, was impossible, the horrible thing came and has gone. Now that it is past, we are regaled with prophecies as to the new era, with propositions for the solution of all the problems of the period of readjustment, with assurances that the war was the thunder and lightning that has cleared the atmosphere for the evolution of man into the millennium of peace, good-will and prosperity, world-wide in scope. But what is the din we hear, and have been hearing, in the midst of the making of peace and the building of the League of Nations? Only the age-long din,—just war!

Now, how can the constructive rise out of the destructive? They are not of the same nature, and, therefore, men are dreaming of a logical impossibility. Shall we not rather turn to Him who is "The power of God and the wisdom of God?" He transcends all resident forces. He effects transformations, while man can do no better than effect reformations. "A king shall reign in righteousness." And there shall be "a new heaven and a new earth." "Neither shall nations learn war any more."

An Open Letter on Christian Science

By Mr. C. E. Putnam

Addressed to The Richmond (Kan.) Enterprise, and furnished in manuscript to this magazine.

DEAR EDITOR:

I read in The Enterprise of May 9 an article by Willis D. McKinstry, entitled "The Doctrine of Christian Science," in which after paying his respects to Dr. Gray, he attempts to set forth some of Mrs. Eddy's discoveries, and quotes the following statement in Science and Health, page 109: "And I won my way to absolute conclusions through divine revelation, reason and demonstration"; but he did not tell us that Mrs. Eddy also states in her book, No and Yes, on pages 20 and 21, that "Human reason is a blind guide, a continued series of mortal hypotheses, antagonistic to revelation and science—human philosophy has ninety-nine parts of error to the one-hundredth part of truth, an unsafe decoction for the race."

Can we risk our eternal welfare on the teachings of one who says she obtained her absolute conclusions by coupling divine revelation with her human reason, taking her own definition of reason's reliability? I know we have had many people from the time of the apostles down to the present who claim to have had divine revelation, and some, like Mrs. Eddy, even claim that they represent Christ's second coming. The Master was particular to warn us against all such persons, saying, "Take heed that ye be not deceived: for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and the time draweth near: go ye not after them (Luke 21:8). See also Matthew 24:4, 5 and Mark 13:5, 6.

Christian Science and the Second Coming of Christ

Mrs. Eddy's claim that her discovery through divine revelation and reason is Christ's second coming or reappearing is thus stated in this same book, No and Yes, page 46, where she says: "The question now at issue is: Shall we have a practical, spiritual Christianity, with its healing power, or shall we have material medicine and superficial religion? The advancing hope of the race, craving health and holiness, halts for a reply; and the reappearing of Christ, whose life-giving understanding Christian Science imparts, must answer the constant inquiring, 'Art thou he that should come?' "

Please do not pass over this question lightly, but carefully analyze it, and you will see that she really says that Christian Science imparts the life-giving understanding of the reappearing Christ, and that it is the answer to the question, "Art thou he that should come?"

If Christian Science is in fact, as she claims, the answer to this question, it would make it the Christ, and it is against such claims that Jesus warns us, "Go ye not therefore after them."

Again, on page 13, she says, "Science and Health has effected a revolution in the minds of thinkers on the subject of mediumship, and given impulse to reason and revelation, goodness and virtue." So Christian Science really gives impulse to this reason, which she says is such a blind guide and unsafe thing.

Now what does impulse mean? Webster defines impulse as "the act of impelling or driving onward with sudden force;" so, if reason is a blind guide, and Christian Science gives it impulse, it must impel or drive on this blindness.

Mr. McKinstry says, "Its teachings are consistent with those of the Master, who affirmed that 'God is Spirit.' This fundamental truth was given to the woman of Samaria." Again, he says that Christian Science endorses the scriptural teaching that God is all-in-all.

Mrs. Eddy defines spirit in Science and Health, page 585, as "All that is good, God," but Mr. McKinstry, like the tempter, misquoted the Scripture that the Master uttered to the Samaritan woman; he left out the little article "a" which is absolutely necessary to be left out, to be in harmony with her teachings. The Master said "God is a Spirit," and Mrs. Eddy teaches that there is but one Spirit and that is good, God, and that he is "all-in-all."

Scripture Falsely Quoted

Let us also carefully look at this statement or teaching of Christian Science that "God is all-in-all," for it is on this false quotation and application of Scripture that Mrs. Eddy finds what she calls "scriptural authority for denying the personality of Satan," as also it is a foundation for all her false teaching concerning the unreality of matter, sin, sickness, disease, death and Satan, and in fact everything that is not God. She states plainly in Science and Health, page 7, that the first fundamental proposition of Christian Science is "God is all-in-all," and Dr. Blanchard has well said that if one admits this fundamental proposition, everything else in Christian Science naturally and inevitably follows; but if this fundamental proposition is untrue, then nothing in Christian Science follows, and its teachings are false.

Let us examine the Scripture and find what it does say about when God is to be "all-in-all." Read 1 Corinthians 15:20-28, and see what must first be done and who is to do it before God may be "all-in-all." Notice when that time is said to be coming, certainly not under present conditions nor at the present time, but after the resurrection at Christ's coming (v. 23), after the end of this age and after the Kingdom or millennial age, when Christ shall have put down all rule and all authority and power and delivered up the Kingdom to God, even the Father (vv. 24, 25), and even the last enemy, which is death, shall have been destroyed by Christ (see Rev. 20:10-15) and all things are put under His feet (vv. 26, 27). "And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all" (v. 28).

This makes it plain that in this present world, under present conditions, God is not "all in all," but all these changes mentioned must first take place that "God may be all in all."

A careful study of 1 Corinthians 15:24-28 will prove to anyone who is willing to take what God's Word says in preference to man's (or woman's) conclusions, that it is not in this age nor even in Christ's millennial reign, but after the Son has completed His reign and work, and the last enemy, death, and absolutely everything antagonistic to God, shall have been cast into the lake of fire, "Then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all."

It cannot possibly be true now, and if we say it is true now we make God a liar, and if, like Mrs. Eddy, we say we can destroy the reality of all evil by denying it, we are claiming to be able to do what these verses say plainly God the Son shall in His own time accomplish.

In John 17:15, Jesus did not pray the Father to take His true followers out of the world nor to take evil out of the world—"But that thou shouldest keep them from the evil." This was certainly a recognition by Jesus that evil was actually and really in the world and that the Father, too, has knowledge of it.

Denying the Personality of Satan

Again let us examine Mrs. Eddy's scriptural authority for denying the personality of Satan and declaring as did the Master that "evil is a lie and the father of itself."

Jesus' exact words to the Scribes and Pharisees when they said that we have one Father, even God, are these: "Ye are of your father, the devil (not evil), and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it" (John 8:44). According to Mrs. Eddy this something which is nothing and has no real existence and no personality, Jesus says, speaks and lies, and is the father of lies, and has lusts which "Ye will do," and was a murderer from the beginning and abode not in the truth.

Again, in Matthew 4:1-11, we are told that the devil talked and quoted Scripture and Jesus, too, talked and quoted Scripture. Three times is this stated and when he asked Jesus to fall down and worship him, Jesus said, "Get thee hence, Satan," and Matthew states that "Then the devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and ministered unto him."

Does such language from the Son of God furnish us scriptural authority for denying the personality of Satan? If Satan has no personality, Jesus has no personality, for both manifested just what it takes to constitute personality.

According to Webster, personality is "that which constitutes, or pertains to, a person," and person he defines as "a living soul; a self-conscious being; a moral agent; etc." Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health, page 510, that "The world believes in many persons; but if God is personal, there is but one person." So it is evident that she disregards Webster and the correct meaning of words, and puts a meaning to words which is neither scriptural nor in harmony with the English language.

Perverting the Meaning of Resurrection

Mrs. Eddy plainly perverts the meaning of the word resurrection, and in reality denies the death and resurrection of Christ. She says in her book, Christ and Christmas, that Christ was not crucified—that doom was Jesus' part.

Furthermore, she denies the resurrection of the body. Her definition of the resurrection is "spiritualization of thought," Science and Health, page 584; but certainly Christ, the Son of God, which, in No and Yes, page 36, she says "was unconscious of matter, of sin, disease and death, and was conscious only of God, of good, of eternal life and harmony," could not need or receive a spiritualization of thought for there could be nothing unspiritual in Him to spiritualize.

Again she perverts and blasphemes God's name, Jehovah, translated Lord God, for in Luke 1:32 we read that this Son of the Highest is given His throne and kingdom by the "Lord God," whose creative work, recorded in Genesis 2:7, Mrs. Eddy, in Science and Health, page 517, pronounces a lie. Unquestionably this is awful blasphemy.

Does Christian Science Deny the Atonement?

In conclusion, let us consider her doctrine of atonement. Mr. McKinstry says that "It is absurd to assert that Christian Science denies the atonement of Jesus," but let us see what kind of atonement Mrs. Eddy believes in.

In No and Yes, under the heading, "Is there a Sacrificial Atonement?" she says, "The glory of human life is in overcoming sickness, sin and death. Jesus suffered for all mortals to bring in this glory; and His purpose was to show them that the way out of the flesh, and out of the delusion of all human error, must be through the baptism of suffering, leading up to health, harmony and heaven"; and on page 35, she says, "He atoned for the terrible unreality of a supposed existence apart from God—Jesus came announcing truth, and saying not only 'the kingdom of God is at hand,' but 'the kingdom of God is within you.' Hence there is no sin."

Can one believe that such is the atonement taught in the Bible?

I wish to again call your attention to Mrs. Eddy's statement that "Christ was not crucified —that doom was Jesus' part."

Then let us examine Romans 5:6, 8-11, which reads thus: "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. . . . But God commendeth his love toward us in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. And not only so, but we also joy in God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement."

Then again we will read in 1 Peter 3:18: "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit."

Dr. Torrey's Testimony

Dr. R. A. Torrey, writing on God's doctrine of the atonement against Unitarian and Christian Science doctrines of the atonement, has truly said: "Men and women use the old words with a new meaning; so as to deceive, if it were possible, the very elect. Even the Christian Scientist will tell you he believes in the atonement and that Mrs. Eddy taught the atonement but when you begin to ask direct and pointed questions regarding his belief and teaching, you will find that by atonement he means, and Mrs. Eddy meant, something utterly different from what you mean and what the Bible teaches.

Paul tells us that the devil masquerades as an angel of light (2 Cor. 11:14), but never has he done it more successfully and dangerously than in the teaching regarding the atonement which he has inspired in Mrs. Eddy and in the Unitarian teachers, and also in the teachers in many supposedly orthodox pulpits, in many Congregational pulpits, in some Methodist pulpits, in many Baptist pulpits and even in some Presbyterian pulpits.

"Some years ago," Dr. Torrey goes on to say, "in teaching a Bible class in Minneapolis, attended by people from all the churches, I remarked incidentally that Christian Science denied the doctrine of the atonement through the shed blood of Jesus Christ, and an intelligent lady, came to me at the close of the class and said:

" 'Mr. Torrey, you ought not to have said what you said today about Christian Science, for you do not understand its teachings. They do teach the atonement.'

"I replied, 'I said that Christian Science denies the doctrine of the atonement through the shed blood of Jesus Christ. Do you believe that Jesus Christ bore your sins in His own body on the Cross?'

"She answered, 'I think Christian Science is a beautiful system of teaching.'

"I said, 'That is not what I asked you. Do you believe that Jesus Christ bore your sins in His own body on the cross?'

"She replied, 'Christian Science has done me a great deal of good.'

" 'That is not what I asked you. Do you believe that Jesus Christ bore your sins in His own body on the cross?'

" 'I think that Jesus Christ's life was the most beautiful life ever lived here on earth.'

" 'That is not what I asked you. Do you believe Jesus Christ bore your sins in His own body on the cross?'

" 'The Christian Scientists are lovely people.'

" 'That is not what I asked you. Do you believe that Jesus Christ bore your sins in His own body on the cross?'

" 'I believe in following the Lord Jesus Christ.'

" 'Do you believe that Jesus Christ bore your sins in His own body on the cross?'

" 'Oh,' she said, 'that is a doctrinal question.'

" 'Now,' I said, 'you are yourself an illustration of the truth of the very thing I said. You do not believe in the atonement through the shed blood of Jesus Christ.' "

The Christian Scientist uses the word atonement, but he means something entirely different from what the Bible teaches regarding the atoning death of Jesus Christ. So does the Unitarian.

The Peril of False Teaching

Read the ninth and tenth chapters of Hebrews, and see how plainly and unmistakably we are taught that it is through the shed blood of Jesus Christ that atonement was made for us, and that through Christ's death and shed blood we are saved, and without it there is no remission of our sins. Are we willing to accept such a substitute for the plain Bible presentation of Christ's atonement when our salvation from sin and our eternal destiny is involved?

Can we not realize why the Bible warns us so much against teachers of false doctrines that will lead us astray? Surely it must be very important to us, because the results, if the false doctrines are believed, are irretrievable and eternal.

How many times it is said in the Bible, "Be not deceived!" The great deceiver is strikingly revealed in Revelation 12:9, "The great dragon, that old serpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world."

Let us go to God in earnest petition, and ask Him to give us the Holy Spirit to guide us, and then surrender our own wills to His will, and let Him lead us by the Word unto God's way of salvation that we may not be deceived and eternally lost.

Let us at least be true to ourselves and true to God's Word. None can change that Word. "For what if some were without faith? Shall their want of faith make of none effect the faithfulness of God? God forbid: yea, let God be found true, but every man a liar" (Rom. 3:3, 4; R. V.).

Letter to Mr. Bicknell Young

First Reader of the First Church of Christ Scientist (the Mother Church), of Boston, Mass.

"MY Dear Mr. Young:

"I returned last Saturday from my summer vacation and found your letter awaiting me.

"I have intended for some time to write you of my experiences during the past three years in so far as they affected my relation to Christian Science.

"It would not be right, nor do any good, to take up your time telling all my experiences during the last few years that opened my eyes to the fact that, as the mother of a ten-year-old daughter, I could not conscientiously continue in the practice of Christian Science.

"When I was thirteen years old I joined a Congregational church of this city and became a worker in the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Society, and tried to lead an earnest, prayerful, Christian life, up to the age of twenty-four, when I accepted Christian Science.

"Six years later my little girl was born, and I was told by the practitioner employed at that time that, 'as I had only given birth to a divine idea, my body not knowing of any birth,' I need not stay in bed. On the third day I arose and dressed, and on the ninth day I went to my mother's home, feeling weak and dizzy, but bravely denying the fact.

"As a consequence a physical condition was left, from which I have suffered intensely. I have spent over one thousand dollars for Christian Science treatment for that alone, and I now know that without an operation I will never be well.

"Immediately after my little girl's birth, I was taught from the Christian Science standpoint, that every fear I had for my child affected her; that if an epidemic of scarlet fever was in the neighborhood and I feared she might get it, it would be my fear and not the germ that would bring the disease to her.

"Now, I being a normal mother, could no more help the fear coming than I could help breathing; so, at once I would turn cold, afraid my thought had touched her; then frantically I would call the practitioner and take from five to ten dollars worth of treatments till I would calm down, feeling sure that while treatment was going on my thought could not touch her. Another small fortune was thus spent.

"Finally, a very serious trouble came into my life, and I was completely stunned. Alone in my room, I tried to pray, and I found there seemed to be no God to hear me. The God who had been my stay and comfort in my young womanhood had gone, and only a stone wall remained.

"Oh, how I longed for the help and comfort I once had in prayer!

"Then I began to study my Bible, not just the references given in the Christian Science lessons, but whole chapters at a time, and I found verses I hadn't seen for years, for I had read only the verses given in the Christian Science lessons. For some unaccountable reason these verses never seemed to come in those lessons.

"At length, I remember coming to the verse (1 Timothy 2:5), "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus." Then I seemed to wake up to the fact that I had spent a small fortune for human mediators who wouldn't think of mediating without some material money. And I realized how I had denied my Saviour and my Lord, and that I had only been one of many thousands that had accepted the strong delusions, prophesied in 2 Thessalonians 2:9-11, to come in this age.

"I was believing it right to tell my little girl if she had a cold on Monday she could say, 'I have not got one'; but on Wednesday she must not lie about something else, and to admit to myself that the lie on Monday was not a sin. Then the verse, 1 John 1:10, came to me and I fully made up my mind that my child should have far different religious training.

"I am thankful for my experience in Christian Science, for the agony I have gone through in coming back to 'the faith once delivered to the saints' (Jude 3) has given me such a severe lesson that I henceforth shall cling only to the Word of God and never again be led away into anything that can separate me from Him.

"I believe once more in the man Christ Jesus as my only Saviour. I am praying the simple prayers of faith to my Heavenly Father as to a person and not a principle. And the 'comfort and peace that pass all understanding' have come into my heart.

"What religious training I am now having I am getting from the Moody Bible Institute of this city, and it absolutely meets my needs along that line.

"Believe me, I have only the highest regard for you and Mrs. Young, and am only striving to work out my life's problems in the way that seems absolutely right to me, and to the best interest of my small daughter."

"Sincerely yours,
"Mrs. ———————."

[The above communication has been in our hands for some time awaiting a convenient opportunity to publish. Two months after its receipt the following came to us from its author, which also will have interest and instruction for our readers.—Editors.]

"Two weeks ago I visited the practitioner who lives in ———— and through whom I was led into Christian Science.

"She had been telling me of a member of the Christian Science Church who had refused to let his mother, seventy-five years old, live in his home because it interfered with his demonstration of harmony. She seemed to bring before his thought the claim of old age and disease.

"So a Methodist neighbor woman had taken the mother in and was tenderly caring for her.

"Then I said what a fortunate thing it was that there was, sometimes, an orthodox Christian around to care for the relatives of the Christian Scientists so they could be free to demonstrate harmony, when she turned to me exclaiming, 'Why, are you not still studying and practicing Christian Science?'

"I said, 'Oh, no, have not for three years.'

" 'Well, what are you doing?'

" 'Praying.'

" 'What, not in the old orthodox way!'

" 'Yes, thank God.'

" 'Why, what are you doing about Jesus Christ?'

" 'I have accepted Him as my Saviour.'

" 'Not the man Jesus?'

" 'The man Jesus, flesh, blood and bones,' I replied.

" 'Well,' she said, 'anyone who once ever understood the truth (Christian Science) could never go back to that rot."

" 'But I understood the subject so thoroughly,' I replied, 'I was accepted as a student of Bicknell Young in 1906. You made application at the same time, and each year for three years and were not accepted. Then you had to take class instruction under an inferior worker.'

"She could make no answer.

"Then I added: 'My dear, if I had had no conviction of the wrong within myself, I had reached the point where I refused to bring up my daughter to learn to lie. I could not see where I could make a child understand that it was all right to lie on Monday and say, "I have no cold" (when she had), but on Wednesday she must tell the truth on another subject. And personally I got terribly tired of lying to myself.'

"Of course, she informed me that I was evidently completely mesmerized by 'Old Orthodoxy,' one of the most pernicious of errors, and had allowed it to enter my consciousness, for which she would handle the subject mentally, until the error had been dispelled.

"I replied, 'You will be wasting your time, for I have taken the "shield of faith," and the promise is that, with it, I shall be able to "quench the fiery darts of the wicked" ' (Eph. 6:16)."

The Negro Problem in America

By Rev. John Little, Louisville, Ky.

An Address at The Moody Bible Institute

LIKE many questions, the negro problem in America had a very small beginning. About 300 years ago one ship contained the entire negro problem. About twenty negroes were landed on the coast of Virginia, but today we have more than 10,000,000 of these people in our country, with every question that concerns the elevation of mankind related to them. It is one of the big questions before our country and at this particular time is one that demands earnest thought by all classes of people, and I believe particularly by Christian people. If we think over the negro problem as it has been in America I think it is a good thing to make three general divisions of the period covered up to the present time.

I

The first period would date from about 1619 up to the close of the Civil War. The negro came to this country as a savage and during that period of savagery I think he made three distinct gains. I think we can all realize that at a glance.

The first gain that he made was that he learned the value of continuous labor. In Africa the negro did not have to work, because nature provided for him. He worked intermittently, and if we take the continent of Africa and look over it we will see that he has not been a continuous laborer. He has no buildings in all of his native country such as the one we are in today. He has no system of transportation, but walks from one place to another. Largely, these things are the product of continuous work.

The second thing that he learned that was of the greatest value to him (and sometimes the negroes are inclined to complain a good deal in this country and not count their blessings), is the English language, the greatest language of civilization, that later introduced him to all of our culture. The average negro of today can pick up a morning paper and read in this English language what is going on in the world today.

The third thing was the introduction to the Christian religion, and he accepted it wholly; the whole race adopted it. I have never heard of a negro who did not at least profess to belong to that class of people known as Christians. They accepted Christianity as the natural system of religion. To my mind those are the three great improvements that the negro made during the period of slavery.

II

Then comes a second period in connection with the American negro, that is fraught with many hardships to him, many puzzling questions to the white man and a time of trial and injustice on both sides. That period in Alabama we always speak of as the "Reconstruction Period." The negro was free, every institution in the South was upset, and the white man and the negro had to adjust themselves to new relationships.

I was born in Alabama. My grandfather was a heavy slave owner and I have been the personal friend of many slaves. I was there just about a month ago and those old negro slaves gathered around me, and they are some of my best friends.

In that period existed close personal friendship between many negroes and many former slave owners and children of slave owners.

I am not in any way defending slavery nor advocating it as a good thing, but the negro gained in slavery the three things that I mentioned to you. In this reconstruction period everything was upset and there were changes of all kinds that made it a difficult period for the white man and an exceedingly trying and difficult period for the negro.

In that period, if we let it run, and we cannot fix a date for the end of it—and I suggest about the beginning of this century, about 1900—during that period a good many things happened. The negro made some improvements that are very important. He began then to establish the three fundamental institutions.

I think we will all admit that the most fundamental institution in America today is the home. If we could make all of our homes in America ideal today we would solve most of the problem that looms up before all social workers.

preparing herself for a kindergarten teacher. That is one ideal Christian home.

It was my privilege a few days ago to have a young negro girl that I had known for about twenty years ask me to go to a title company and arrange for her to purchase a home. Her husband has been a soldier (still in the army), and she taught school, and he has been sending home his money and they put it together and they are buying a home. She bought Liberty bonds and now has turned them into her home.

Negro Homes

In this period the negro, who before that time had had a home provided by his master, began to establish his own home, and I am here to say to you that some of those homes have been ideal institutions.

Yesterday afternoon I sat in the home of a negro man, and his boy came in from the high school and brought with him his Annual, a splendid production of the negro high school. The man himself is a Christian, and you would be delighted if he would stand on this platform this morning and speak in my place. His wife is a cultured woman and she could delight your souls with music—you would call again and again for her to sing. The oldest daughter is

It is a fundamental institution for any people and the negro began here and there first in very scattered places to establish a home. Many of them purchase lots in the city, and thousands and thousands of them are purchasing land in the country, and they have established their homes.

Negro Schools

The second thing the negro began to establish was his own school.

During this reconstruction period there were a great many things done which I cannot mention to you in the course of an hour. The missionary organizations all through the North, including all denominations and national and various missionary organizations sent into the South missionaries. Many of them established schools and some of those schools have done fundamental work. Many of them had a mistaken idea.

I suspect if I were to come in here and try to run some of these classes I would make many mistakes. I have made many mistakes during the twenty-one years that I have devoted my life to the service in which I am now engaged.

These schools were known first as missionary schools, but a great many of them have taken on very large sounding names. The bigger name you give an institution the better it pleases a negro. We have in Louisville a negro school that has taken the name of "State University." It is a denominational school with a very small attendance and a low grade of scholarship. Nearly all of these schools take high sounding names, and many of them undertake to give to the negro just out of slavery, and a few years before that out of savagery, a classical education.

A classical education is a splendid thing. I have one myself. I went through the University of Alabama and when I got through I could not run a desk in the bank. I made a lot of mistakes and then went to a theological seminary and took the Hebrew and the Greek but they did not help me to do any one specific thing.

The negro himself began to establish schools. The State University that I mentioned to you is a negro school. It is financed by the Baptist negroes of the state of Kentucky:

The various negro denominations scattered throughout the South established schools, which are a fundamental institution in connection with any people.

It is a remarkable thing that during that reconstruction period those southern States which had been through the Civil War and suffered many hardships, established a public system of instruction for the negroes in the South.

Most of those states took that action about the year 1876. It was not uniform. Alabama started a certain way, Mississippi another and so on, but all of the southern States, in poverty, and with the annoying question of reconstruction and the difficult problem of race adjustment, established a system of public schools for the negro, but I want you to be clear on the point that the negro himself established the second fundamental institution for himself, the school.

The Industrial Idea

In that period there came another need that is very important—the development of the great industrial idea in the education of the negro.

I am not quite sure, but I think it was about the year 1876 that Hampton Institute was founded. General Armstrong, a son of a missionary, a general in the Federal army, was sent to Hampton, Va., to take charge of a group of negroes keeping the barracks that had been used by the Federal soldiers. They were issued rations from the Federal Government.

The first order that he issued was that nobody was to eat that did not work. A good many of them had not been working. The time had come, freedom was here, and the government was feeding them and they were not working.

General Armstrong issued this order and then he began a system of education that seems to me to be fundamental. A certain amount of cooking must be done and he established a cooking camp. They must be clothed, so he established sewing classes. It was necessary to have vegetables, so he started a garden. The wagons must be repaired, so he established a repair shop and a harness shop to repair the harness. It covered every industrial act connected with our daily lives.

The people who occupied those camps were the first pupils in the great industrial school at Hampton.

Hampton and Tuskegee

The pupils in that school did all the work of the institution, the cleaning, the making of their clothing, the raising of their vegetables. A great farm is operated, a dairy is operated, chickens are raised, school gardens are operated, and in connection with that is a literary course, fitting these people to be teachers of their own race.

As a result of that some years ago the Tuskegee Institute sprang into existence, with Booker T. Washington in charge in a log cabin in Alabama that used to be a chicken house. He established a school in Alabama to teach the negroes of Alabama the same fundamental facts in regard to the development of any nation. We must do the things of ordinary life every day whether we will or not.

Negro Churches

The third institution that the negro established in that reconstruction period that is fundamental to any race and the most important next to the home, is the religious institution, the church. The negro established his church.

You wonder how that could be. It was a tremendous problem. They had not a trained minister in the 4,000,000 of negroes. There might have been possibly one or two here somewhere in the North, but in those great masses of 4,000,000 people that had been turned loose there was not a trained minister. How could they establish a church?

Well, it was due to this fact: During slavery there were many conscientious Christian men. My grandfather was a slave owner, and I revere my grandfather and I stand here not to condemn him or anything he did. He lived in the country and had a Methodist minister to come to his community to preach to him for his salvation, and he had on his place a church that the same minister who broke the bread of life to him could break the bread of life to the slaves on his place.

There were many Christian men in the South that did that same thing. The thing that convinced me of the absolute sincerity of my father's religion was that being a rebel, a soldier in the southern army who had fought and lost, he took the communion himself and took it to the negroes in the church where he worshiped his God each week. And if you had wanted to start another war you could have started it then, and he would have fought you to the last breath if you had refused him the privilege to give the negro this bread of life.

There was built, later on, a gallery in the church, and some of them up to the time I can remember, still worshiped there in the First Presbyterian Church.

Friendship of Whites and Blacks

Out of my grandfather's slaves came two ministers, one a Methodist and one a Baptist. The Baptist minister used to wait on an uncle of mine when he was a boy, and every morning went behind him to school and took the horse back, and then he went for him again in the afternoon, and when they reached home my uncle would sit down and teach this negro boy all he learned in the morning, so the negro had learned to read as a pupil of my uncle.

He was a young teacher, but both were interested in what was learned in that little school house, and I heard that negro man preach one of the best sermons I ever heard on the subject of "Predestination."

There was another who was the carriage driver of my mother. My mother said that when she would go out to get into the carriage she would find Uncle Lois reading his Testament. He had learned to read it and at the close of the Civil War he became a minister.

Of course there was room for rivalry and some discussion on the plantation when the Methodist and the Baptist minister established different churches. Here and there, scattered through the race, were men who were really fitted. They were godly, upright men, and walked before God in that community as men of God, but the pathetic thing about it is that we did not have but so few of such men, and the tremendous task of establishing the negro church was a big one.

Boys Class in Daily Vacation Bible School—Caning Chairs

The result was a great many men who coveted the office of a bishop were unqualified to fill the place of a bishop but they held the office of a bishop and they held on to it. They established so-called churches, some of them. It is pathetic what was preached to the negro, but he established an institution that they all approved of, and the negro church was established in all the denominations that white folks have. They have every denomination that you have and a few more I expect, but they certainly have all you have. Those three institutions were established during what we might call the Reconstruction Period.

III

About the year 1900—it began back of that, but about the year 1900, along in there—there came an awakening of interest all through the country in the negro and in his institution.

During that period, from 1900 until now, many wonderful things happened. There are some new things, but the things that I have mentioned in the past are still going on. There has been in that time a wonderful development of the negro home. I think during the last year more negroes have bought homes than I have ever heard of before. They have made splendid wages during this war period and thousands of them have invested their extra earnings in homes. More and more that side of the question has been developed.

They have been improving their churches. The negro has invested more money in his church than in any other institution. I was astonished as I drove along through Alabama to see that while the negro was frequently living in a very small house his church, his place of worship, was the main institution of the whole neighborhood, and their churches are very well kept generally.

The churches are the best houses for miles around. They generally stand on a hill and they generally have a bell to summon the people of that community.

Their own individual schools have not been developed so much, and as to that, I have no right to express my personal opinion. I think the task is too big for that. I think the education of the negro is a national question, and certainly a state question, and not a denominational question, in my opinion. It is too big for that.

Three hundred years ago the negroes of this country could have been seated in this middle section. It was a small question. By 1865 it had developed to 4,000,000 people and was a tremendous problem. Today it has developed to 10,000,000 people and is a still bigger problem.

What the Problem Is

Let us look at it intellectually: In the beginning they knew nothing; it was a small question to educate twenty negroes. In 1865 a very few of them knew how to read and write. They had no intellectual development. Do you know today that we have more than 4,000,000 outside of that class? It is a bigger question for you and me today than it was for my father at the close of the Civil War in 1865. With all that I have mentioned in regard to the development of the educational institution there are more illiterate people today than there were in 1865.

You hear of the development of the school but the negro is increasing faster than our forces for elevating him are increasing. The negro is not diminishing in this country; he is increasing. We have educated about sixty per cent of the race.

In the beginning they knew nothing of religion. In 1865 they had increased to 4,000,000 people. What was the religious situation then? They were just about half and half. There were about 2,000,000 that were Christians. Now as a people they accepted Christianity, but they had not practically accepted Christianity, and only half of them were members of any evangelical church.

What about it today? In the census of 1900 we have about 10,000,000 negroes and five million negroes today outside of all Christian churches of all denominations, having included every denomination in the country. There are more negroes today outside of all Christian churches than there are inside of all Christian churches with all the money and effort that has been put forth to evangelize them.

Why is this true? Because the Christian church has never set itself to the task of evangelizing them. With 10,000,000 of them in this country the problem is getting bigger and bigger and bigger from every standpoint.

There have been wonderful developments in the last ten years. The Board of New York has conceived a plan of education that is fundamental in my mind. They offered to any one of the southern States that would accept it to pay the salary of a man to be under the supervision of the Department of Education of that State to supervise the negro rural school.

White Teachers Developing Rural Schools

The first State to accept was the State of Virginia. Most of the schools were little cabins in the country. A girl who had been trained to read and write, to sew, cook, wash, and she had been taught the Christian religion (you cannot very well get through Hampton without a good deal of Christian influence), was secured to introduce the practical things of life to these people. She taught them to raise the vegetables that they needed to eat; she taught them how to make their clothes, and how to wash them, the importance of personal cleanliness, of improving the appearance of the school house, and she with her pupils got together and whitewashed the school house and whitewashed the fence, and the school began to be an important center in the community life.

Another and another and another was secured and placed here and there. The General Educational Board furnished the money. Thirteen of the southern States now have a white man who gives all of his time to the development of the rural schools in the negro communities in our Southland.

I mentioned to you the lack of trained ministers. How on the face of the globe could 4,000,000 uneducated negroes produce a set of school teachers? Frequently a negro was assigned to teach school that could not read or write.

The southern States made a small appropriation and they undertook to establish what was known as the Community Training High School. The idea was instead of a one-room school house to have a four-room school house, put in four teachers, a normal course, industrial work, and agricultural training and development, the boys and girls put through the eighth or tenth grade and fit them to take charge of the little rural schools out in the country.

A woman of Philadelphia left two or three million dollars for this work. They decided to appoint a new kind of a teacher. They called for supervisors, largely graduates of Hampton and established it on the Methodist circuit rider plan. There is a little school house over here with a teacher that does not know much, and another five miles away, and so on, and they employed a trained teacher to go here and stay a day and help that teacher, and then move on to another school and help that teacher, etc.

Where the Responsibility Rests

The Y. M. C. A. has entered the field, the Y. W. C. A. has entered the field, and they are doing a splendid work. I am leaving tonight for Missouri to speak before the Y. M. C. A. They have taken up the study of a book, The Negro in the South, a book written for mission study classes. They are studying the question and taking an interest in the welfare of the negro.

I think the real responsiblity rests here with you and me. We profess to be followers of Jesus who came into this world to give life and to give it more abundantly, to give it not to you or to me, not to the white race or a peculiar people, but he sent us out with a message, "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature," and the negro is certainly one of God's creatures, and the institution that has showed less light and has stood most dormant is the Christian church.

The real solution of any problem is Christianity. If I could make every man, woman and child of the negro race a Christian and every man, woman and child of our race a Christian the problem would be solved, because we would all do right and love right.

Practical and Perplexing Questions

Answered by the Editors

W. J. V., Newton, N. J.: You speak of having been saved last November and uniting with the Lord's people, but that after a while Satan tempted you by asking how you knew the Bible to be true, and also by sending actual curses through your head. You say that although you are anxious to please the Lord yet everything seems a burden to you instead of a joy and you would like to get out of the experience as soon as possible.

Your trouble may be directly from Satan as you suppose, or it may not be. Possibly a secondary or contributing cause may be your physical condition, and it might be wise to consult a competent and, if possible, a Christian physician.

Then, too, perhaps your faith needs strengthening from the intellectual side, and we would advise a correspondence course of instruction in the Moody Bible Institute, say that in Synthetic Bible Study or Evidences of Christianity. Send a postal to the Institute asking for a prospectus of the course.

Finally, let us say that your absence of joy may be a test of faith from the Lord, who would not have our assurance rest on our feelings or emotions but on His sacred Word. His promise holds whatever our feelings may be, and when that fact really grips your heart and mind, deliverance will come from your present difficulties, we feel sure.

R. W., Madison, Wis.: In our judgment Romans 1:20, 21 includes the heathen of all generations.

As to Romans 11:8 while the blindness of the Jews is the natural result of their disobedience and sin, yet at the same time it is a divine judgment upon them. Compare Romans 1:26-28 and 2 Thessalonians 2:9-12.

W. M. McA., Mt. Vernon, Wash.: We think Zechariah 14:2, refers to the nations of the Roman earth, i. e., those nations occupying the territory once under the dominion of the Caesars. They will be federated again at the end of this age. Great Britain, of which you inquire, is one of them, if we except Ireland which never belonged to the Roman Empire. As for the United States, she did not belong to the Roman Empire either, but whether the League of Nations now talked about will bring her into relation with that federation at the end of this age we can not say.

The Background of Terrorism

"TO the Public:

"While the horror of the latest bomb outrage is still fresh in the minds of Americans, we would call attention to the menace of the growth of the spirit of violence, bitterness and unreason among our people. We sincerely trust that the criminals responsible for these outrages will be discovered and punished by due process of law. Terrorism must be given no room in our land. But to eliminate this menace it is not enough merely to join in the hue and cry against anarchy and Bolshevism; we must also study the economic and mental factors which make the background for this half-insane type of terrorism. A common resolve to abide by our time-honored principles of free discussion and the regular processes of constitutional government is the need of the hour.

"Unhappily, violence, recently employed in the name of patriotism, has been allowed to go unpunished by the authorities, and has even been praised by leaders in government and in the press. In New York on May Day peaceful meetings were attacked, The Call building was raided, and innocent men and women suffered serious injuries. Many voices openly praised such treatment of 'the Reds.' But condonations of violence lead to contempt of law and strengthen those who counsel revolution.

"To meet the situation we urge:

"(1) That all men and women of good will set themselves to influence public opinion through every available medium against lawless measures by whomsoever they may be employed.

"(2) That they resolve to see that fair hearings and just trials are given to men, irrespective of their political or economic opinions, so that it may be said that in America no man's case, be he an I. W. W. or a Bolshevist or the most reactionary conservative, is prejudged by an appeal to popular feeling; and in particular that they set themselves against the counsels of hate, whose effect upon the rising generation can be only to pile up future disaster for mankind.

"(3) Since, in the judgment of the Attorney General of the United States, existing laws against criminal terrorism are adequate, and since free discussion is essential for the exposure of economic and political errors, that the attempt be abandoned to coerce minority opinion so long as it does not promote disorder, or to defeat social change by repressive legislation.

"As ministers of the Christian church and as citizens of this liberty-honoring republic we plead for faith in reason, good-will and fairness to oppose the forces of bitterness and violence in our national life.

I Would Forget

By Louisa A'hmuty Nash

When o'er my spirit hovers
  A scene of angry words,
My lip impatient quivers,
  At which Thy sentry guards—
Be Thou the kind scene-shifter,
    And help me to forget it!

When the tale-bearer's flying,
  (The birds of ominous wing),
And of my friends are twitting,
  Of some maligning thing;
With love my heart keeps singing,
    That I may quick forget it!

If those I love lose patience
  And use harsh words to me;
O Thou, who didst keep silence—
  That shield I seek from Thee,
And with Thy thought's sweet cadence,
    I know I shall forget it!

An American Mother to Her Soldier Sons

This article is a composite of letters addressed by a mother to her two sons while in the army, but we publish it nevertheless, believing that it has about equal value for this reconstruction period. The author, we are at liberty to say, is Mrs. J. B. Spiers, Richmond, Va.—Editors.

"LADS-'O-MINE, you are gone away; gone as never before, to be tested and tried in new and unaccustomed ways. For who could have dreamed where the rent would come in the mantle of self-complacency in which all Christendom has been wrapt? It has been snatched away so suddenly and we who have hidden behind it so long, must look at last upon what it has concealed. To change the simile, this war is as an axe in the hand of God, which He is laying to the roots of the trees of national ideals; and every tree which does not bring forth those fruits of righteousness which alone can lastingly exalt a nation, shall be hewn down.

"It is a righteous war; although, to fight it, men like the prophet Isaiah have had to be called—men of 'unclean lips, who dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips.' But having their lips touched with fire from heaven's altar, they have by that grace gone forth to carry the message of freedom to them that are bound. It is a war of words and ideas even more than a war of men and guns—and we have a master of English prose for our commander-in-chief!

"Of the perils of the field of battle, of wounds, or of sudden or painful death, we must not be afraid—you nor I! I cannot imagine my boys failing to do their part, knowing what they are fighting for, and upheld by the national expectation. The 'all-together' spirit of group action which is so powerful in the army, as you have already learned, and which is also so strongly operative among the people at large, will sweep us along, and put in the background all personal doubts and fears and sacrifices. When the unessential things in life fall away, and all complexities simplify to a routine, even of hardship, danger or death, then God and heaven draw near to those who believe in them and bear up, as on angels' wings, even the most commonplace, to heights of heroism and endurance. Extraordinary occasions develop extraordinary powers and concentration upon a righteous task exalts even the souls of weaklings. It is this which is truly the 'glory of the trenches.'

"But I am sometimes horribly afraid; and since all my courage and my fears center in you, I must take you into the counsels of my heart.

"It is of another testing-time which somehow, except in times like these, we scarcely realize to be a testing-time at all, that I am afraid. The real test is not in the time of extraordinary perils, when the deeps in us call to the heights in us, and the God of our depths and heights becomes a conscious presence. The real test is in hours of relaxation, when all the bodily necessities are supplied, and mind and body are free to experience all the seductions of the senses—to crave excitement, change, pleasure! Then, if our spiritual nature has not been properly built up and strengthened, we become almost all animal, and forgetting—if we ever knew—the true meaning of life, and the responsibilities of our immortal destinies, we are liable to sell our heavenly birthrights for the merest mess of sour pottage. And if that were all! But in selling our own, we also sell the happiness of our nearest and dearest, and of those who will come after us.

"You see, sons, by misinterpretation of the counsels of God, and consequent miseducation, the prevailing idea of human nature has sunk so very low. We do not sufficiently realize that we are only truly human as we are half divine; only as we are wholly responsive to the ideal of the divinely human nature revealed to us in our Saviour; only as we subdue and master that animal part which so easily plunges us below the level of beasts—because we were created to rise so far above them! It seems that we could not be made to realize the cumulative effects of our worse than bestial ideas of human nature otherwise than by such magnified illustrations as the war is giving us.

"It is when I think of things like these that I am sometimes afraid. Because I am not certain that you have been taught these things, both by precept and example, as clearly as you might and should have been. If not, you might fail, now that this great test of soul-preparedness has come upon us unawares, like a thief in the night; with every temptation increased by the removal of accustomed restraints; with the contagion of group recklessness and license, urging you, perhaps, to 'eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow you die.' Just as if you could ever die! Just as if one single word, or one single act, could be of no consequence to yourselves or others. Oh, my sons! If you fail, it will be our failure—your father's and mine, and that of all teachers who have helped to mold your ideals, and have been unfaithful to that trust.

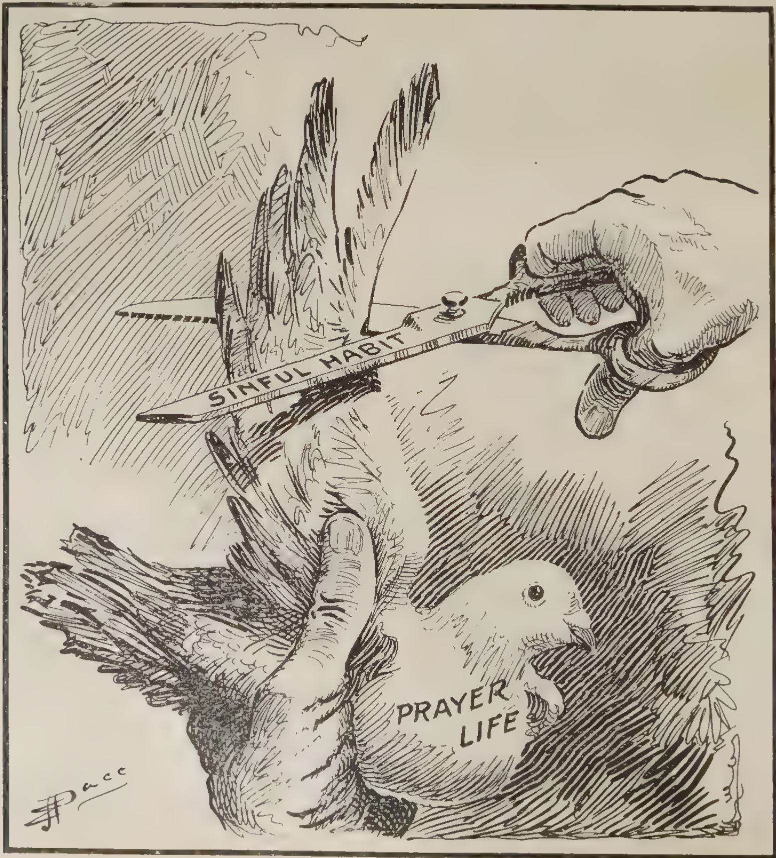
"These are the thoughts that come to me, my darlings, as I think of you, and ponder all things in my heart. But though they are thoughts so mingled of grief and dismay, the marvel is this: that I am nevertheless filled with a wonderful hope, because a bow is visible in the cloud - a divine covenant of mercy, shining in jewelled splendor above the storm-wrack of mortal passions, with promise of a restoration—of a new heaven and a new earth. The right will win! For while we of this generation may not have taught our children as we should, we are not ourselves wholly to blame; for neither did our fathers walk before God with perfect hearts, and we also have been victims of their neglect. Thus the responsibility for past and present faithlessness lies with all the unfaithful of Christendom since the ministry of Christ; and a divided responsibility for sin with the past, means a divided responsibility for repentance and reformation with the future. And still the appeal is rising from the crucified truth of the divine love for all mankind: 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!'

"One thing you must have learned in the army—the unity, the interrelation, the interdependence, of all its component parts. This realization needs only to be carried over into the civic and the religious life, at all times, and in every situation, to discount the deadly fallacy that you have the right, at any time or place, to let slip your highest standards of manhood and social responsibility. In moments of mental and physical relaxation, be most of all upon your guard against the Hun in your own breasts. Remember always that America stands in the eyes of the world as the champion of womanly purity, manly honor, civic integrity and liberty —of that liberty which never degenerates into license; the liberty to be sincere, to be modest, to be unselfish, individually and nationally; in things least as well as in things greatest. Do you remember the motto in your old school book? 'Perfection is a matter of trifles; but perfection itself is no trifle.' Scripturally rendered: 'He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much.'

"If you die for this ideal I remain a proud and happy mother; but more—a thousand times more—if you live for it; which is far harder. And somewhere, in God's keeping, there is waiting for each of you the woman, who will be your proud and happy wife.

"There is but one thing to fear—disloyalty to the universal welfare, which is synonymous with the will of God. That there are thousands whose hearts as well as lips have been touched with the heavenly fire of this ideal, is the only hope of humanity today. Take this word with you into all outer and inner battles: 'Let none that wait on thee be ashamed for my sake.' Let it be your motto, and it shall be also that of

"YOUR MOTHER."



China Inland Mission Conference

Reported by Rev. F. A. Steven, London, Ont.

THE fifth annual conference of the Mission was held at Niagara-on-the-Lake.

Six days, beginning Tuesday and ending Sunday night, gave sixteen meetings and about thirty addresses.

Principal McNicol, of Toronto Bible College, occupied three afternoons with addresses that were much valued, on "Christ in Creation," "on the Cross" and "in the Glory."

Dr. D. McTavish gave an address based on the words of Pharaoh-Necho to Josiah, "Forbear thee from meddling with God" (2 Chron. 35:22).

Most suggestive were the words showing the ways in which people meddle with God. Polygamy and divorce are man's interferences with God's plan for marriage. Men meddle with God's day of worship and rest. Men meddle with God's Word.

All such meddling is dangerous. Those nations which meddle with God's people, Israel, bring disaster on themselves. Elymas meddled with God's servant and reaped blindness. Peter meddled with God's purpose when he said to Jesus, "That be far from thee, Lord."

People often meddle with God's purpose, when they turn aside a beloved son or daughter from obeying His call to go to the mission field. "Forbear thee from meddling with God."

Rev. Andrew Imrie spoke once on "I Am Debtor; I Am Ready; I Am Not Ashamed," and once on the story of Jonah.

Rev. J. McP. Scott, D. D., spoke on "For We Are His Workmanship." One remark was, "If we are out of joint with the will of God that accounts for failure and unrest."

Rev. Henry W. Frost, Home Director for North America, gave the opening address on "For Our God Is a Consuming Fire." "The results of the war," he said, "include seven million killed and twenty million injured. Yet the spiritual wreckage will be greater than the physical. Loss of faith is a large factor."

He spoke also on Acts 15:15-18. "God always does as He pleases. He never asks anyone's advice, nor did Jesus when on earth. We do not judge an architect by the digging out of foundations, so God should not be judged by any one incomplete part of His plan."

Mr. D. E. Hoste, General Director of the Mission, who had recently arrived from China and is going on to England shortly, gave three addresses. One of these was on "The Kingship of Believers," and another on Paul's words to Timothy, "Be sound in doctrine, in faith, in patience."

The word rendered "sound" equals healthy or hygienic. Disease usually comes of germs. This is true in spiritual as well as in physical things. We should keep fit by physical exercise and proper rest and also by exercise in Scripture, in prayer and in active service.

The evening missionary meetings were in charge of Rev. E. A. Brownlee, Secretary in Toronto, and Mr. R. B. Whittelsey, Secretary-Treasurer in Philadelphia. The returned missionaries who spoke were: M. Graham Anderson and Mrs. Anderson, Miss King, Miss Kratzer, Mr. E. J. Bannan, Rev. and Mrs. L. McLeod, Rev. T. Cook and Miss M. E. Stander.

The Sunday afternoon gathering heard the farewell testimonies of three young ladies, Miss Chafee, of Stamford, Conn.; Miss Benson from the evening classes at the Moody Bible Institute, and Miss Grace Taylor, B. A., daughter of Rev. William Taylor, Superintendent of mission work in N. E. Kiangsi Province.

Besides these, Miss Garrett who has traveled independently in China spoke of the work being done by the women missionaries of the China Inland Mission.

The conference afforded a delightful time of reunion and of spiritual blessing for the missionaries and home workers, as well as for many friends of the Mission and members of the Prayer Union.

[The editors regret that the above was not received in time for the August issue, but its intrinsic interest warrants its publication a month later.]

There recently appeared in the "Westminster Teacher" a short symposium on "What It Is To Be a Christian." Some of the paragraphs were fairly clear, but three of them are open to very serious question. One says: "The distinguishing Christian element is the conviction that God is like Jesus Christ, and that men should be like Jesus Christ." The author of this paragraph also says that most Christians are "trying to find with Jesus Christ a road to the best world." Another writer has this paragraph: "No one can say for another man just how much he must believe and feel or determine before he can be called a Christian." This is in effect saying that every man must judge for himself as to what it is to be a Christian. The Word of God, however, is very clear on the subject: that a man must believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and accept Him as a personal Saviour. Another author says, "It is seeking to follow Christ and to live at his best. A Christ-follower seeks also to live the complete life." These statements of the three paragraphers can heartily be assented to by the Unitarians, and no geniune Unitarian can be a Christian. Some bearing the name of Unitarian will be saved because they are better than their creed.

Eagles Mere Bible Conference

By Mrs. M. A. Martin

THE third annual Bible conference conducted under the auspices of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, at Eagles Mere, Pa., closed Sunday, July 20, with five inspiring services. The Institute is to be congratulated on the increased attendance and interest shown this year over that of former years. It seems as though this mountain resort has a peculiar fascination for people, as the hotels and boarding houses contained visitors from almost every State in the Union.

The location is a beautiful one, 2,300 feet above sea level, its cup-like lake offering excellent facilities for boating and bathing and its hotel accommodations attracting many people who otherwise could not be induced to come. There were many on the grounds who came for rest and recreation. From the very beginning of the conference, however, it was evident that those gathered in the Raymond Hotel Auditorium had come for one purpose, only, and that was to study the Word of God. They brought their Bibles, note-books and pencils, using all three diligently throughout the conference.

The commanding feature of the work of the Moody Bible Institute is the place it gives the Bible and the teachers it sends out apt in explaining it to the people. This year Dr. W. H. Griffith Thomas, of Toronto, Canada, gave two series of addresses, one on the person of Christ and the other on Christian evidences; while Dr. James M. Gray, dean of the Institute, who presided at most of the sessions, gave an exposition of Paul's Epistle to the Colossians, in addition to addresses on the devotional life. In response to a rather insistent demand, he spoke once or twice on prophetic subjects dealing with the League of Nations and changes in the map of Europe.

From the side of practical work, the stress this year was laid on Sunday-school methods, with Mr. Hugh Cork, long identified with organized Sunday-school work, as chief teacher. His talks every morning brought out pastors and parents, as well as all of the other Sunday-school workers, and proved highly stimulating and instructive.

Gospel music gives a bright and joyous atmosphere to the life and work of the Institute, and explains, in part, the following of young people it commands. This year Mr. Homer Hammontree was the leader in charge at Eagles Mere. It is of interest to many to know that he has been singing in the military camps in connection with the great meetings conducted among the soldiers, by Rev. Melvin E. Trotter. They were ably assisted by a male quartet, graduates of the Institute, known as "The American Four" and who have achieved continent-wide fame. Mr. Hammontree is a soloist and during the conference sang several solos with marked spiritual power.

This brief report would be defective if it minimized the part taken by Mrs. Margaret T. Russell, of Mobile, Ala., a member of the Extension Staff of the Institute. Her vesper services at the side of the lake, her veranda talks to the hotel guests and her dining-room talks to the maids and other helpers in the hotels, and the mass meeting held for the young people on the closing day of the conference, were all greatly appreciated.

Dr. Gray regards the League of Nations now under discussion in the Senate as a dangerous experiment for the nation, but refrained from discussing it in order to focus attention on what the inspired prophets say concerning a league of nations that is yet to come, though he did not attempt to say when. This league will be constituted of the nations that once formed the Roman Empire, and at the head will be a ruler greater than the Caesars. An interesting feature of the disclosure was that neither Germany, Russia, nor Japan were contemplated in the league, which points to a possible alliance among them, such as that which rumor now gives currency.

The high water mark of the conference, however, was the exaltation of Christ in His character, His claims, His sacrifice, His death and His resurrection, as emphasized in the addresses of both Dr. Thomas and Dr. Gray. The latter showed that the Gnosticism of Asia in the first century was in essence the Theosophy, the ritualism, the spiritualism, the New Thought, the Christian Science of the present century and that right views concerning Christ and the believer's position in Christ were the only corrective of them to be found. Pastors present got a new view of their responsibility as preachers and teachers and many of them will return next year accompanied by their helpers, to again be refreshed in the study of the Word.

The conference next year will open on Sunday, July 4. A committee of one hundred, composed of those in attendance, will assist in the arrangement of the plans for the largest meeting, in every way, yet held under the auspices of the Institute, at Eagles Mere.

An outcome of the conference will result in Bible study classes being organized in the various towns of Pennsylvania, under the management of the Extension Department of the Institute.

Our Relation to Others—Towards Neighbors and Friends

Philippians 2:1-11

Verse 4 of our Scripture lesson should be read with verse 21 of the same chapter. Practically all the fret and friction, unneighborliness and ill-will are traceable for their cause to this 21st verse, "for all seek their own."

Christian neighborliness and friendship may be considered scripturally both from the negative and positive side. First, "Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory" (verse 3). Vainglory is self glory, self seeking, self exaltation, self praise, anything and everything that ministers to the fallen self life. The denial of this self life is among the first principles of Christian discipleship presented by our Lord in Matthew 16:24,25. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself," that is, let him turn his back upon self. This means more than self denial as ordinarily understood, it is rather the denial of self, that life which centers in self, not in "Christ and the church."

The self life is the old fallen life of "the first Adam." It must be supplanted by the life of "the second Adam," our risen Lord. Union with Him in death and resurrection is the divine method. "I have been crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." This is the utterance of liberated souls now become "more than conquerors through him that loved us."

The positive side of Christian neighborliness and friendship will be found in 1 Corinthians 13, a chapter that ought to be read repeatedly, and with special study of verses 4-7. Love "seeketh not her own." This is "the mind" "which was also in Christ Jesus," who came not to be ministered unto but to minister. He looked not "on his own things" but on "the things of others." To follow Him in this matter it is necessary not only to make Him our example by an inward resolve, but to be indwelt by His Spirit, the fruit of which is love.

The denial of self and the cultivation of love as described in 1 Corinthians 13 will enable us to meet all the responsibilities along the line of Christian friendship and neighborliness. There will be no effort to outshine others or to exalt self at the expense of others: no pride or assumed superiority so offensive to others; but by the operation of the Holy Spirit within there will be thoughtfulness and consideration for others in things great and small.

Luke 24:13-32

Too often the Christian life is reduced to a set of rules or a system of ethics. Both rules and ethics have place in the Christian economy, but they do not constitute Christian life. "He that hath the Son hath the life and he that hath not the Son (whatever else he may have) hath not the life"—1 John 5-12.

In Ephesians 3:8 mention is made of the unsearchable riches of Christ—the riches that are "past finding out," undiscoverable by reason or research apart from revelation. The climax of the unsearchable riches may be found in Colossians 2:27, Christ in you, the hope of glory. There is a faith that lays hold of Christ for indwelling (see Ephesians 3:17) and then looking out upon the future says, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phil. 4:13). This does not ignore the law of limitations, but it does emphasize the sufficiency of Christ to strengthen the believer for all things in the will of God.

Our Lord is indeed "the Great Companion." Well may we consider—"How to live with Him," or how He may live with us. Let it be clearly understood at the outset that Christ is not the companion of all, nor does he dwell within all hearts. He desires to, but there are hindrances. Once there was no room at the inn, now there is often no room in the heart, and he will not enter uninvited and undesired. If, like the two men on the way to Emmaus we "constrain him saying, Abide with us," He will come, for He is "the same yesterday, today, and forever." Our desire determines our capacity, and this in turn becomes the measure of God's gift, even the gift of Himself.

Notice the results of this companionship, this living with Him and He with us. First there is consolation, warm heartedness, inward glow, as he talks with us by the way (v. 32). Not only consolation of heart but illumination of mind. "He opened to us the Scriptures." This is the common experience of those with whom He abides.

Then in verses 33-35 there is conviction leading to confession. When they started their journey they were without hope or certainty, now a great conviction compels them to a full confession of what they had seen and heard. Thus their whole being shared in the blessed results of His companionship. Their emotions were stirred, their feelings kindled so that their hearts burned within them; their intellects were quickened by the opening of the Scriptures, and their wills stirred to action as a consequence.

So will it be with all those who live with Him.

Truthfulness

Ephesians 4:25. 2 Kings 5:20-27

The verse in Ephesians forms part of the writer's counsel concerning the walk of the Christian believer. Having put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and holiness of truth (v. 24), it follows that all the bad habits of the old life must be put away.

The chapter opens with an appeal to Christians to walk worthy of their calling. What that calling is can be seen in the first three chapters. Based on what God has done for His people, is the appeal to them to walk with Him. Our lesson verse is part of that appeal. Putting away lying we are to speak every man truth with his neighbor.

There are many incentives to truthfulness. Lying violates the moral order of the world. Business men have discovered the value of truthfulness in advertising. To gain the confidence of the public pays even in dollars and cents. Some one has well said that "falsehood is like a house built of bad material, which stands for a while but goes down at last."

There ought to be a strong conviction in our hearts that truthfulness pays and that falsehood brings punishment sooner or later. The divine displeasure has often been shown towards lying. Gehazi lied and was punished with leprosy. Ananias and Sapphira lied and were punished with death. Not always is lying so sternly and swiftly rebuked, nevertheless its results in the end are always disastrous.

With this as a settled conviction there will come the courage to speak the truth always. And with the courage there will be purpose, purpose of heart to be true both in word and deed.

"Truth does not consist in minute accuracy of detail," says Dean Alford, "but in conveying a right impression." It avoids exaggeration of statements and modification of fact. It refuses to deviate from the right, even for personal advantage.

"Dare to be true: nothing can need a lie,
A fault which needs it most grows two thereby."

The Christian Athlete and His Training

1 Corinthians 9:19-27

A mighty spiritual athlete gives personal testimony and counsel in these nine verses. For those who would "run that ye may obtain," the directions are invaluable.

Notice the great words such as "gain," "prize," "crown," "striveth," "light," "temperate," "subjection." All these are suggestive to an athlete on the field. There is something to be gained, a prize to be won, a possible crown. For this there must be struggle or striving, for this, one must be "temperate in all things," bringing into subjection all that might hinder in winning the race.

The application of all this to the spiritual realm is easily made. The Christian career is like unto a race in which a prize is given to the winner. The prize is an incorruptible crown given not to faith but for faithfulness. The apostle himself was striving for this crown and realized the ever present possibility of losing it. This fear finds expression in the 27th verse, "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection lest that by any means when I have preached to others I myself should be a castaway," that is, should fail of the prize. It would be well for every Christian to be possessed of this same holy fear. This is not the fear of losing one's soul in the sense in which this phrase is often used, but the fear of losing the reward for service well done. There is always a present reward in service well done, and many people object to the thought of future reward, nevertheless it is the clear teaching of Scripture that rewards await the faithful Christian in the ages to come.

In this matter we must make a clear distinction between "eternal life" which is the free gift of God to faith, and the doctrine of rewards for faithful service. "By grace are ye saved through faith and that not of yourselves—it is the gift of God—not of works lest any man should boast." The grace that saves us also teaches us and operates within us. Yieldedness to this inward operation, and "abounding in the work of the Lord," bring their own abundant reward.

The athlete goes on a diet, does not drink or smoke and keeps himself well in hand. The Christian athlete who seeks the prize from the hands of the Judge must bar every element of weakness, doubtful company, dancing, impure literature or pictures, anything and everything that would decrease his strength or divert him from his purpose.

Meditate on the words of verse 24, "So run that ye may obtain."

The New York Bible Society, through its general secretary, Dr. George William Carter, presented each member of the crew of the British dirigible R-34 with a copy of the Bible when starting on the return voyage to Scotland, July 9. A specially bound edition was given to the dirigible as a part of its permanent equipment.

Matthew 25:31-46

Golden Text:—"For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ.—2 Corinthians 5:10.

The subject selected by the lesson committee is "The Future Life," but at best such a statement would be the use of the term in an accommodated sense. According to legitimate textual and contextual signification it is the judgment of the living nations which lies still in the future (v. 32). The idea of a general judgment which is of such frequent occurrence in religious literature and teaching is a fundamental error. It is not once found in the Bible, neither the idea which it is intended to convey. Dr. Pentecost most truthfully says, "It is a mischievous habit that has led the Christian world to speak of the judgment as being one great event taking place at the end of the world, when all human beings, saints, sinners, Jews and Gentiles, the living and the dead, shall stand up before the great white throne and there be judged. Nothing can be more wide of the Scriptures." The Bible speaks of several judgments, differing in respect to the subjects to be judged, the place of judgment, the time of judgment, and the result of the judgment. This is not the judgment set forth in Revelation 20:11-14, but precedes that one by at least one thousand years.

I. The Judge (v. 31).

It is the Son of Man, the one who came and died to redeem the human race, which now being clothed with majesty and power will act as Judge. Those who accept Him now shall not come into the judgment (John 5:24).

II. The Time (v. 31).

This will be when the Lord comes in His glory, accompanied with a retinue of glorious angels. This will take place after He has gathered the elect remnant of Israel. There will be no resurrection in connection with this judgment.

III. The Place (v. 31).

The prophecy of Joel, 3d chapter, and Zechariah 14:1-5 make it to be in or near Jerusalem. The angel said to Mary, "Thou shalt call his name JESUS; he shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:31-33). Just as there was a literal place and a literal king there shall be a literal place of judgment and a literal Judge.

IV. The People Judged (vv. 32-45).

These will be the living nations upon the earth after the church has been translated (1 Thess. 4:16, 17). These are the nations to whom the gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached, just prior to the coming of the end. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24:14). This gospel is distinguished from the gospel of the grace of God which is now being preached. The preachers of this gospel will be the Jews (Rev.7 and Rom. 11). These are the brethren of the Lord in the flesh—they that move among the nations of the world with the startling message of the news of the Lord's approaching Kingdom. Some of the nations will gladly receive the message and most kindly receive the Kingdom messengers, giving them clothing, food, shelter, etc. Others will persecute them, thrusting them into prison, etc. Here the former will visit these messengers of the King and provide for their wants.

At this time the Judge will separate the nations, placing the sheep on the right and the goats on the left. The "sheep" are those who have given proper treatment to Christ's brethren. The "goats" are those who rejected and maltreated His brethren. If these three classes, the "sheep," "goats," "brethren," be kept separate all confusion will be avoided.

V. The Issue of the Judgment (v. 46, cf. vv. 34-41).

1. The sheep enter upon the inheritance of a prepared Kingdom (v. 34).

2. The goats go into an everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels (v. 46). This judgment shall determine their destiny.

The Holy Scriptures

Psalm 19:7-14; 2 Timothy 3:14-17

Golden Text:—"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."—Psalm 119:105.

I. The Characteristics of the Word of God (Ps. 19:7-11).

1. The Law of the Lord is Perfect (v. 7). The law here means the fundamental principles which God as a moral being reveals to the consciences of men as binding upon the soul. These principles are free from all omissions and redundancies, perfect as a moral code. It perfectly accomplishes its design, namely, the converting of the soul. The effect of the law of God is to turn men to God Himself, to righteousness and holiness.

2. The Testimony of the Lord (v. 7).

By testimony is meant the witness which God bears as to His attributes and against man's sins. This testimony is plain and infallible. Those who receive it are made wise. Those who with open and teachable minds receive God's testimony are wiser than the greatest intellectuals of the earth.

3. The Statutes of the Lord are Right (v. 8). His statutes are the principles given to us to fit us for the different relationships of life. These are just and equitable, because they are from the righteous God. They rejoice the heart, because the true heart rejoices in justice and equity.

4. The Commandment of the Lord (v. 8). This brings into view the personal God who stands back of His law to enforce its demands. This commandment is free from error and deceit, and it enlightens the eyes. The effect of God's law is to give man ability, not only to understand His love and salvation, but to be wise as to the things about him.

5. The Fear of the Lord is Clean (v. 9). The reading of the Word of God produces reverential fear in the heart of the reader. Those who have this godly fear have their hearts cleansed from sin. The life and relationship founded upon this fear abide forever.

6. The Judgments of the Lord Are True and Righteous (vv. 9-11).

By judgments is meant the sentences pronounced by God's Word. These penalties are absolutely true and righteous; they are conformable to the intuitive moral sense of man. These judgments serve as warnings; they prevent man's shipwreck upon life's sea and bring just return to those who obey.

II. A Prayer to God (vv. 12-14).

1. For Cleansing from Secret Faults (v. 12). Those who reverently study the Word of God realize in themselves the presence of hidden faults from which they need cleansing, and they cry out to God for this cleansing.

2. Kept Back from Presumptuous Sins (v. 13).

The sins which result from proud defiance of God's laws need to be eradicated by God's special grace and help.

3. Words Acceptable with God (v. 14).

The godly man is concerned with even his words and desires them to be under God's control.

4. Meditation of the Heart (v. 14).

III. The Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures (2 Tim. 3:14-17).

Inspiration means God-breathed. By the Scriptures is meant the Old Testament. If Paul's testimony be accepted, then the whole Old Testament is God-breathed, regardless of what the skeptical critics say. Because they are God-breathed they are profitable for

1. Doctrine, that is, Teaching.
2. Reproof.
3 Correction.
4. Instruction in Righteousness.
5. Thorough Equipment of the Man of God for His Work.

Review

Jesus our Saviour and King, or Parables of the Kingdom.

The method of review should be determined by the grade of the class. For the Primary the review should center in the topic "Jesus and the Children"; the Junior, "Choosing Jesus as Saviour"; Intermediate, "Accepting Christ's Program for our Lives"; for the Senior and adult grades the subject of the church, noting its membership, ordinances, worship, and service. A better way would be to study more fully the parables of the Kingdom as set forth in Matthew (13:44-50).

I. The Parable of the Hid Treasure (v. 44).

The usual interpretation of this parable making Christ the hid treasure for which a sinner must give up everything in order to buy salvation, must be rejected for the following reasons: (1) Christ is not hidden in a field, but has been lifted up and made a spectacle to the world. (2) Nobody has ever been obliged to buy the world in order to get Christ. (3) Salvation cannot be purchased, for it is God's free and gracious gift. (4) No warrant is ever held out to a man to conceal his religion after it is obtained.

1. The Field. This is the world (v. 38). Fortunately this landmark has been made by Christ himself.

2. The Treasure. In Psalm 135:4 we are told that Israel, the chosen people, is His treasure. The same truth is set forth in different places and ways (Deut. 7:6-8; 14:2; 26:18; 32:8, 9). When Christ uttered this parable the ten tribes were already concealed from human observation, and as to the rest of Israel their condition was a prophecy of that which was to follow. The Kingdom as to its relation and bearing is now hidden. Christ was primarily sent to the Jews; for their sake the field was bought.

3. The Purchaser; the Son of God (John 3:16).

None but the Son of God had such resources to buy the world.

4. The Purchase Price. This was the precious blood of the Son of God, which is worth infinitely more than silver and gold and the treasures of the earth (1 Pet. 1:13, 19; Isa. 53).

II. The Parable of the Merchant Man Seeking Goodly Pearls (vv. 45, 46).

1. The Merchant Man. He is actively engaged in search for pearls. In this search he discovers one pearl of great price. This merchant man is none other than Christ Himself. The whole activity of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, since the fall of man, has been seeking those who are lost.

2. The Purchasing Price. The merchant man sold all—impoverished himself in order to buy the pearl. The poor lost sinner could not buy Christ. His salvation is without money and without price. Christ did impoverish himself, turned His back upon the heavenly glory (Phil. 2:6-8) to purchase the one pearl of great price by His own precious blood (Eph. 5:25; 1 Pet. 1:18, 19).

3. The Pearl of Great Price. This is the Church. The merchant man will find other pearls of value, but the peerless gem set above all others will be the Church which He has purchased with His own blood.

III. The Parable of the Drag Net (vv. 47, 50).

This gives us a picture of the consummation of the Kingdom. No one can mistake the meaning here. Note

1. The Sea. This word when used in a figurative sense denotes peoples and multitudes (Dan. 7:3; Rev. 17:15).

2. The Drag Net. The word "net" in the authorized version is properly translated "dragnet."

3. The Net Drawn to the Shore When Full.

4. The Assortment Made by the Angels.

5. The Destiny of the Bad Fish, or Wicked Men.

John and Peter Become Disciples of Jesus
John 1:29-42

Golden Text:—"Jesus said unto him, follow me."—John 1:43.

I. John the Baptist Testifies to His Disciples Concerning Jesus (vv. 29-34).

1. Jesus as the Lamb of God (v. 29). "Lamb" was familiar to the Jewish mind. It denoted a substitutionary sacrifice for sin. Christ was the true Lamb to which every sacrificial offering pointed. He was the Lamb which Israel showed should be brought to the slaughter (Isa. 53:7), upon whom the Lord laid man's iniquity. Christ was God's Lamb, because He was the one set apart from the foundation of the world to make atonement for man's sins (1 Pet. 1:18-20). John invited his disciples to behold the Lamb of God.

2. The Baptizer with the Holy Ghost (vv. 30-35). The Spirit descended upon Him as Isaiah said (Isa. 11:2). John then knew for a certainty that he was the baptizer with the Holy Ghost. The same Holy Spirit will be given to all who ask Him (Luke 11:13).

3. Jesus is the Son of God (v. 34). Being the Son of God He is one in nature with God.

II. Two Disciples Following Jesus (vv. 35-37).

As a result of the Baptist's testimony, two of the disciples leave him and follow Jesus. At John's request they looked. This look was sufficient to induce them to follow Jesus. A sincere look upon Jesus is always sufficient. John did not become envious of Christ's success, but rejoiced in it (John 3:26, 29). All Sunday-school teachers should so witness that the pupils will look to and follow Jesus. This is the whole method—the sum and substance of salvation.

III. The Disciples Abiding with Jesus (vv. 38, 39).

Seeing the disciples following Him, Jesus made inquiry as to their object. Their reply showed the desire to go apart privately where they could disclose their hearts to Him. He invited them to His abode where for the remainder of that day they enjoyed sweet intercourse with Him.

IV. The Disciples Bringing Others to Jesus (vv. 40-42).

Having found by experience what fellowship with Jesus means, they go at once and tell others of their priceless treasure.

1. Andrew Brings Peter (vv. 40-42). Peter was Andrew's brother. A true brother who has found Christ will go and tell his brethren. The proper place to begin witnessing for Christ is among one's kinsfolk (Luke 8:39).

2. Philip Brings Nathanael (vv. 43-45). He witnessed to him concerning the Messiahship of Jesus. He told them that Christ was He of whom Moses and the prophets did speak. Christ is the sum and substance of the Old Testament.

The disciples invited others to come and see. They knew that if they would but put Jesus to the test they would believe. Christianity courts investigation (John 7:17).

Sunday-School News, Methods, Appliances and Questions

By Hugh Cork

THE PURPOSE OF THESE COLUMNS

With the aim of the Sunday-school in mind we have determined to set forth such Sunday-school news as will give spiritual inspiration and edification; to discuss methods and call attention to such plans, appliances and organizations as are producing spiritual results; to conduct a "Question Box" for those who meet difficulties which seem to hinder their progress in becoming workmen who need not to be ashamed. To this end we ask the co-operation of all Sunday-school workers.

THE AIM OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL

To bring souls to Christ for salvation; to develop souls in Christ for character; to train souls with Christ for service.

"FOR SUCH A TIME AS THIS"

After more than twenty years of service in interdenominational Sunday-school work which has taken me into every State in the Union and every Province of Canada, attending thousands of conventions, I feel I know the throbbings of the pulses of the teachers and officers in our Sunday-schools. I fear many teachers and officers, like Martha, are cumbered with much serving. We need to act the part of Mary who sitting at the feet of her Lord was made by Him our example.

Now after seven months at work in The Moody Bible Institute I feel it is one of the Master's footstools. In these troublesome, distracting days we need the spirit of Mary, and here is where we can find it. Moody under God prepared this place "for such a time as this."

Do you want your church and its auxiliaries to throb with new life and energy? Then send some of your young people here. Here negative testimonies give place to positive convictions, doubts are crowded out by the full assurance of faith, weakness of self is supplanted by strength in the Lord, irksome duties become blessed privileges, and the student from these classrooms goes out into the world exclaiming as did the Psalmist, "Oh, how I love thy law! It is my meditation day and night." If we could have one leader from each Sunday-school here for a course, I feel sure a new day for religious education would dawn in Sunday-school work.

SPIRIT OR METHOD, WHICH?

Both. In our Christian activities we are not only enjoined to be "fervent in spirit," but also "diligent in business," with all things "done decently and in order." Yet our greatest weakness in Sunday-school work is in not putting "first things first." "Seek ye first the kingdom of God" is often forgotten. Some of the most highly organized schools of the country show the smallest results in church membership and spiritual power while the schools whose first concern is to lift up Jesus Christ appeal more to the masses. In this connection it is interesting to note that in a long list of Chicago Sunday-schools published by the Cook County Sunday-schools showing their average attendance for May the Moody Church Sunday-school leads with an average attendance of 1,950. The second on the list is a school whose pastor is one of the Bible Institute faculty while the third school reports 551 average attendance, and the balance decrease to less than 50. This seems to verify the words of the Master in which he said, "And I, if I be lifted up will draw." Organize surely, but always keep the organization connected with the spiritual power plant.

WAS THIS CLASS IN YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL?

TEACHER—"Willie Jones, you may read the next verse."

WILLIE JONES (reads)—"Now the cities of the tribe of Benjamin, according to their families, were Jericho and Bethhoglah and the Valley of Keziz."

TEACHER—"Now, can any little boy tell me what lesson we learn from that verse?"

BOBBIE BUTLER—"Be good."

TEACHER—"That is right, Bobbie; you may read the next verse."

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF CHURCH EFFICIENCY

Rev. Otis G. Dale, D. D.

I. The Physical Basis:

A church, in outward form, is a voluntary association of the followers of Jesus Christ, for purposes of united worship and organized service—a human institution.

In deeper reality the church is the "Body of Christ," called out of the world, united by the bond of a common life, chosen and commissioned to carry out the purposes of the Head—a spiritual organism.

As the human body furnishes the means of expression of the life and purpose of the human spirit, so the Body of Christ, the church is the visible means Christ has ordained for the expression of himself in life and works, during the present dispensation.

As the "Body of Christ," the church has a threefold life, even as the human organism, namely: the physical, the intellectual, and the spiritual. The intellectual and spiritual phases of church life have been given a great deal of attention and study. Strangely enough, as individuals, we tend to give much more attention to our physical than to our spiritual needs, but as members of the Body of Christ we have a tendency to forget the physical needs of the church, while placing most of the emphasis on the spiritual.

As in the human body, the physical is the basis of the intellectual and spiritual life, so that a defect or disorder in the physical greatly affects our intellectual ability and spiritual development, so in the church, its intellectual life, and its spiritual health and development are dependent in large measure upon the condition of its physical life.

What is the physical life of the church? As a human body is an organization of bones, muscles, nerves, organs, glands, blood vessels, and a circulating life-medium, so the physical life of a church is the organization and correlation of building, equipment, officers, auxiliaries, system of business, and the "circulating medium," which is the blood of the church—not its life, but the medium that conveys its life to and from all its parts, and is essential to the expression of its life to the world.

This physical side of church life has been most woefully neglected, and such neglect is often more of a factor in a church's failure than is any spiritual defect. We have looked for a healthy and spiritual development in a starved, deformed, and often despised body. Neat and comfortable building, splendid equipment, compact and thorough organization, carefully coordinated departments, ample financial support and efficient business methods can never be a substitute for spirituality, but they furnish a sound physical basis for a healthy spiritual development and an efficient expression of spiritual power; a sound and healthy body is always a joy to the head—so to the Head of the Church.

Upon these considerations may be based a careful study of all that pertains to church buildings, equipments, organizations, business system, finance, etc.

QUESTION BOX

1. "How best use the opening service of the Sunday-school session?"

Keep in mind the session of the school has been convened to teach a specified lesson from God's Word. The teacher has been entrusted with the task of teaching that lesson. Everything else undertaken during the session must be an aid to the teacher's work. The fifteen or twenty minutes' opening service should be planned and carried out by the superintendent to create the proper atmosphere needed for the day's lesson. Therefore a superintendent should be as careful and studious in preparing for the opening service as the teacher is for the lesson period. All statements, announcements, hymns, scriptures and even prayers should be carefully thought out and properly given. The classes should be turned over to their teachers with the soil of their minds and hearts in condition to receive the precious seed. To do this the superintendent will need to spend much time each week in prayerful study and preparation.

2. "I shun doing personal work. Does this mean I have no aptitude? If not, how shall I learn to love it?"

Your question indicates you have never done much personal work. No greater joy comes to the Christian than talking to another about his risen, loving Lord. Ways of doing it are forgotten in the passion such testimony begets. This passion for doing it has as its underlying motives, love for the sinner, compassion for the lost, and anxiety for his safety. This passion for souls will be given by God in answer to the prayer which reminds Him that His Son said, "Tarry ye * * * until ye be endued with power." As to "How?" if in other things it is true "we learn to do by doing and by doing knowledge grows" it is even more so in personal Christian work.

3. "What are the marks of a successful Sunday-school chorister?"

It is without question that the Sunday-school chorister must be an out and out Christian, having the ability to select songs of true Christian calibre, with reference to the words employed as well as the character of the music. He should be a man who realizes the relation that the music bears to the rest of the service. Other qualities of equal importance are: pleasing personality; show vigor and animation; have a sense of humor; have innate musical ability; broad, fundamental knowledge of the subject besides initiative and the consciousness of the ability of leadership and organization.

Such a man is and would be of inestimable value in any church, and it is men of such ability that the churches have difficulty in finding, since so many have the musical ability but so few of these have the Christian characteristics which give intrinsic value to their work.—T. J. B.

4. "How shall we get more efficient Sunday-school workers?"

We shall never get the number and kind of Sunday-school workers we need until we get back to the scriptural way of finding them. When a worker was needed to fill the place of Judas whose place was made vacant by his betrayal the disciples prayed before they voted. "Show whether of these two thou hast chosen," and the result of the vote was God's answer. Jesus himself said that since the fields need harvesters, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he may send laborers into his harvest." Prayer will find more God-sent workers than any training course ever so well outlined and taught.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL NOTES AND NEWS

If God's Spirit should move upon the hearts of your pupils and compel them to cry out, "What must I do to be saved?" are you ready to give them an answer that will satisfy?

The reports of all North American Sunday-schools show that it takes four officers and teachers twelve months, teaching a Word that is quick and powerful, with the Holy Spirit to illuminate it, to produce one soul for church membership. Why?

The World's next Sunday-school Convention will be held at Tokyo, Japan, early in October, 1920. A movement is under way headed by such men as John Wanamaker, to have a great evangelistic campaign of the Orient to immediately follow the close of the World's Convention. The plan is to carry the evangelistic message to all centers in that part of the world through laymen and ministers who shall be in attendance at the convention.

We have asked Dr. Dale, formerly a director of religious education in a large church in California, but now a member of the faculty in the Institute, to give us the "Fundamental Principles of Church Efficiency." The "Physical Basis" appears in this issue. If the Sunday-school is in reality simply the church functioning in its teaching ministry, it is worth our while to study well Dr. Dale's efficiency suggestions. Look for the second, next month.

We are laying our plans to greatly enlarge and strengthen the Institute's Sunday-school Course. We shall make haste slowly, but watch for important announcements before long. We purpose to present a course for leaders in religious education with a faculty to teach it, second to none in America.

WORLD'S CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP CONFERENCE

The Third World's Christian Citizenship Conference which was to have been held in Pittsburgh, Pa., last summer but which was postponed on account of the war, will be held in Pittsburgh, Victory Week, Nov. 9-16, 1919, under the auspices of the National Reform Association.

An exceptionally strong program is already assured. Among the Americans who have agreed to speak at the conference are the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, formerly governor of New York, justice of the United States Supreme Court and nominee for the presidency of the United States; P. P. Claxton, U. S. Commissioner of Public Education; Frank J. Cannon, formerly U. S. Senator from Utah and the greatest living authority on Mormonism; Arthur Capper, Senator from Kansas; Henry M. Temple, U. S. Congressman; Henry Van Dyke, author, poet, ambassador to Holland; Gifford Pinchot, statesman and authority on conservation; Drs. James A. Francis, Charles F. Jefferson, Charles L. Stelzle, Samuel Zane Batten, Edwin C. Dinwiddie, Charles L. Godell and B. S. Steadwell, well known reformers, and Mrs. Ella A. Boole, first vice president of the W. C. T. U.

The purpose of the conference is to gather together representatives from various nations to compare views as to the moral interests of mankind and to aid in conserving the moral gains and repairing the moral damage of the war.

This conference is not an experiment. The first of the kind was held in Philadelphia in 1910 with an attendance of 1500 and seven countries represented on its program. The second met in Portland, Oregon, in 1913, with 15,000 people in attendance at some sessions, and seventeen countries represented on the program. It is proposed to make this third conference much larger and more representative in every way, particularly in view of the world's need in this period of reconstruction.

PRAYING CHANG

"To look at him Brother Chang would not be called a handsome man, or an especially promising catechumen. He is a peasant, minus his front teeth, is stoop-shouldered, undersized, partly deaf and halting in gait and speech. He is uneducated, and poorer than many Americans can understand. But there is now a smile on his face and a gleam in his eye that at once arrests the beholder and makes him look twice.

"This man learned the gospel when Miss Vaughan came to his village to hold a Kung Ki (Bible conference). She was accompanied by several of the women from our Women's Bible School, under the management of some of the Chinese leaders of our field, and largely supported by our Chinese Christians. Chang hung on the edge of the crowd of curious women, and learned some new things that he could not get away from. And the more he pondered this 'Jesus doctrine,' the more he believed it. His family and neighbors ridiculed and abused him for his faith. But a great peace had come to him; and 'the heavenly light' that now filled his soul he wanted them to experience. For this he began fervently to pray.

"To his mind it was all-important to get the men of the village in touch with the Christian leaders who could more fully explain the teaching. He had no money, no name, no influence—not even a cart or barrow on which to bring foreign guests, even if they could spend the time to come. So he prayed, in faith, steadily for a year.

"He prayed that on a given date Miss Vaughan with a band of Bible women might return; also that the 'foreign pastor' and several native evangelists might come—and they all came.

"He prayed for a crowd of heathen to leave their spring plowing and dragging and sowing to come and listen—and they came.

"No house or yard in the big market town was big enough to hold the crowd he wanted to see gathered; so he had prayed that a large 'revival tent' might come—and it appeared at the proper time and was set up. He could not furnish the tent with seats and convention accessories; so he prayed for them. And the people of his and a neighboring village brought all that were needed and put them at his disposal, even foreign lamps for the evening sessions.

"At the meetings it was soon realized that the preachers, because of the uncomfortable jam, would have to divide forces. So Miss Vaughan took the tent, which, daily, from early till late, was packed with women and babies. Some Bible women taught others who thronged the yard of Chang's mother. We men talked to companies on the streets, and to the constantly shifting throngs who came to the yards which were in friendliness loaned for our various headquarters.

"Some results:—There was a large company of women inquirers—some thirty. More than three thousand men heard the gospel, the local people themselves providing the money for the expense of the meetings.

"After we left, Chang was smitten with the need of a Christian school; he prayed for it and a teacher—and got both.

"Then his old mother, in answer to his prayer of faith, accepted Christ.

"A few months later his flaming zeal brought to his village a second series of meetings, in which many of us were greatly blessed. It was remarked by many as a curious fact that just before and after these two series of meetings the weather was unusually cold and windy and dusty. But later they learned that it was Chang who had especially prayed the Lord for the perfect weather that obtained during the meetings.

"I have since baptized a number of those for whom Chang prayed. All his family are now Christians or inquirers, and many outside are interested. Hopeful days are ahead for that village and that region. And all because one humble man has tried to live up to the light he had, that first dawned on him in a Kung Ki."—From China from Within, by C. E. Scott.

ENLARGEDNESS IN PRAYER

"Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it,"—Ps. 31:10.

I. The Manner of Prayer. "Open thy mouth."
  1. From a consciousness of need. There must be heart-hunger and thirsting, a sensibility of our wants.
  2. With deep humility and self-abasement.
  3. With holy pleadings and importunity of spirit. Abraham, Jacob, Solomon, the woman of Canaan and the Lord Jesus did so.
  4. In the exercise of believing confidence. Faith gives potency to prayer; without it God cannot be pleased, much less accept our prayers. Faith honors God.

II. The Extent of Prayer. "Open thy mouth wide."
  1. Ask largely for an abundance of blessings.
  2. Ask incessantly. Praying always cannot weary Him.
  3. Make your requests all-inclusive. For body, soul, family, church and the world.
  4. Ask for the riches and fulness of every blessing sought. Not the drops, but the shower—not for the dawn, but the noonday splendor—not little, but the riches of His grace.

III. Promise Given to Enlargedness in Prayer. "I will fill it."
  1. He can do it.
  2. He delights to do it.
  3. He is pledged to do it.
  4. He has never disappointed His people.
  5. He has often done much more, but never less than He promised. Solomon asked for wisdom, received wisdom, riches and honor. The palsied man received healing and forgiveness of sin. The malefactor prayed to be remembered, had a place promised him in paradise.

ATONEMENT IN THE TWO TESTAMENTS

The difference between the atonement, as set forth in the Old Testament and as presented in the New, says D. C. I. Scofield, is that in the former case the sheep died for the shepherd, in the latter the Shepherd died for the sheep.

PRAYER HEARD

Ejaculatory prayer is like the rope of a belfry—the bell is in one room and the handle or the end of the rope which sets it ringing, in another. Perhaps the bell will not be heard in the apartment where the rope is; but it is heard in its own apartment. Moses laid hold of the rope and pulled it hard on the shore of the Red Sea, and though no one heard or knew anything of it in the lower chamber, the bell rang loudly in the upper one till the whole place was moved, and the Lord said, "Wherefore criest thou unto me?"—J. J., in Record of Christian Work.

TO SET YOU THINKING

The quaint inscription on an old slab in the ancient cathedral of Lubeck is very impressive:

"Thus speaketh Christ, our Lord, to us:
Ye call Me Master, and obey Me not;
Ye call Me Light, and see Me not;
Ye call Me Way, and walk Me not;
Ye call Me Life, and desire Me not;
Ye call Me Wise, and follow Me not;
Ye call Me Fair, and love Me not;
Ye call Me Rich, and ask Me not;
Ye call Me Eternal, and seek Me not;
Ye call Me Gracious, and trust Me not;
Ye call Me Noble, and serve Me not;
Ye call Me Mighty, and honor Me not;
Ye call Me Just, and fear Me not;
If I condemn you, blame Me not."

THE IMPORTANCE OF STUDYING THE SCRIPTURES

Matthew 22:29

Studying the Scriptures is important because—

1. Without it there can be no correct conception of that most important of all things, salvation. 2 Tim. 3:15.
2. Without it there can be no assimilation of that nutritive food which promotes spiritual growth. 1 Peter 2:2.
3. Without it there can be no appropriation of that enriching property which produces spiritual fruit. Ps. 1:2, 3.
4. Without it there can be no guarantee of success in warfare, work or worship. Josh. 1:8.
5. Without it there can be no rightly dividing of the Word of truth to those we try to teach. 2 Tim. 2:15.
6. Without it there can be no rooting and grounding in the truth which forestalls false teachers and erroneous doctrines. Col. 2:6-8.
7. Without it there can be no Christlike loyalty to the Scriptures as the standard of authority. Matt. 26:53, 54.

—R. G. Pearson.

Unbelief says, "How can such and such things be?" It is full of "hows"; but faith has one great answer to the ten thousand "hows," and that answer is—God!—C. H. M.

JIMMIE'S TEXT

"'Faith is the substance of things hoped for,'" repeated Jimmie slowly, as he endeavored to fix the words of the text in his mind; but his eyes would travel toward the window, and he wondered what the dog was doing, and he just could not remember what the rest of the verse was.

"There goes Robbie!" he suddenly exclaimed. "Can't I call to him to wait?"

"No, dear, you haven't learned your text yet," said mother, patiently. "Miss Aiken would be so disappointed if you didn't learn it, and I know you would be sorry to be the only one in the class who could not say it."

With a long sigh Jimmie began again, but Fritz would bark and he must look out of the door to see where the dog was; the cat had to be petted and his chair placed in another position. So learning the text was very slow work, even with mother to prompt him.

"I do not believe I can ever learn it," he declared as he squirmed in his chair, "I don't know anything about 'faith' anyway, and it won't do me any good to learn it," he whined.

"Indeed, you do know a great deal about it," declared mother, positively. "Your life is largely made up of faith."

"Why, how, mother?" And the little boy sat up very straight and looked at her in astonishment.

"Will you please telephone Mrs. Walter that I will bring her book home this evening?" she asked, seeming not to have heard the question. Away Jimmie hurried for he very much enjoyed using the phone, especially if he could talk to Mrs. Walter.

"What did you expect when you took the receiver down?" asked mother, when he came back into the room.

"That Central would ask what number I wanted, and that Mrs. Walter would answer her ring," was the somewhat puzzled reply.

"Could you see Central or Mrs. Walter?" she asked.

"Of course not," he replied.

"That was faith, 'the evidence of things not seen.' You could not see either of them, yet you believed they were at the other end of the line, and would answer. Because we have faith our prayers are answered, for prayer is like a telephone line reaching from our hearts to that of the heavenly Father.

"When we get on the train to ride to the city, we have faith in the man on the engine, in the train, and in the road, that we will reach the city which we can not yet see.

"When father promises you a new suit of clothes, you believe him, even before you see the clothes. So, you see, there is a great deal of 'faith' in our lives, and I hope my little boy will long remember this text, for it will often prove very comforting."

"Thank you, mother, for 'splaining it," said Jimmie soberly. "I think I can learn the verse now."—D. W. Rubens, in Herald and Presbyter.

"HE KNOWS, HE CARES"

A young woman was going to entertain a number of her friends in rather cramped quarters in the city, and had not all the conveniences. She went to a kind friend up the street, to borrow one or two necessary things.

"Is that all you want?" asked the friend.

"Yes, I think, everything," said the inexperienced one.

"But you will need this, and that, and the other," said the experienced woman, naming the articles.

"I was so thankful afterward," said the young hostess, "that I went to some one who knew just exactly what I needed better than I did myself, and was willing to supply it."

It is almost an illustration of prayer. We go to God, asking certain things. We need not be afraid that we shall not get all we need. Our needs are usually much more numerous than we ourselves are conscious of. But in His experienced wisdom, He knows that wherefor we ought to ask even better than we do ourselves, and in the richness of His fatherly love, He supplies the known and the unknown lack. —Onward.

THE COMFORT THAT FAITH BRINGS

The other evening I was riding home after a heavy day's work. I felt weary and sore depressed, when swiftly, suddenly, as a lightning flash, came: "My grace is sufficient for thee." And I said: "I should think it is, Lord"; and burst out laughing. I never fully understood what the holy laughter of Abraham was until then. It seemed to make unbelief so absurd.

It was as if some little fish, being very thirsty was troubled about drinking the river dry; and Father Thames said: "Drink away, little fish, my stream is sufficient for thee." Or it seemed like a little mouse in the granaries of Egypt after seven years of plenty, fearing it might die of famine; and Joseph might say: "Cheer up, little mouse, my granaries are sufficient for thee." Again, I imagined a man away up on yonder mountain, saying to himself: "I fear I shall exhaust all the oxygen in the atmosphere. But the earth might say: "Breathe away, O man, and fill thy lungs ever; my atmosphere is sufficient for thee."

Oh, brethren, be great believers! Little faith will bring your souls to heaven, but great faith will bring heaven to you.—C. H. Spurgeon.

H. D. Kennedy conducted a union campaign in Peterboro, Ont., his home town, and it was very encouraging for him to receive a unanimous invitation from a committee representing all the evangelical churches of the city. The meetings continued every night for almost five weeks. The pastors gave their hearty co-operation and the churches got a spiritual uplift. Mr. G. W. Mulligan conducted the singing and was assisted by various choirs, so that the musical part proved a real success.

Following work at Camp Hancock, near Augusta, Ga. and the supply of the Greene Street Presbyterian Church, Augusta, Rev. John H. Elliott, D. D., for two years principal of the Australasian Chapman-Alexander Bible Institute, Adelaide, South Australia, and more recently gave six months or more service under the Y. M. C. A. War Work Council, accepted an invitation to become acting pastor of the North Avenue Presbyterian Church of Atlanta, Ga. At the conclusion of his work there he accepted the unanimous call of the College Park Presbyterian Church to become its pastor (College Park is a suburb of Atlanta, Ga.). During the four months Dr. Elliott was with the North Avenue Church his work has greatly prospered. The audiences have increased and many have united with the church. He will be able to give a limited amount of service in Bible teaching, Bible conference and evangelistic work. His address will be The Manse, corner Main and John Calvin Streets, College Park, Georgia.

"The Swedish Evangelical Free Church of the U. S. A., holding its thirty-fifth conference at Holdredge, Neb., June 18-22, 1919, wishes to express a hearty appreciation and thankfulness to The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago for all the help, kindness and love the school of the said denomination has received in the past from the Institute."

PROFESSOR McINTYRE'S LECTURES

Professor Edwin Vail McIntyre, an organist of wide repute and director of music of the First Presbyterian Church of Oklahoma City, Okla., gave a series of lectures and an organ recital during the last two weeks of July. The organization and conducting of choirs, choir repertoire, the organ in the service, the construction and care of organs and kindred subjects, proved interesting and helpful to the student body.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT NOTES

Miss Elinor Stafford Millar has arrived safely from Australia, and a number of engagements have already been booked for her season which opens October 1. Her services are appreciated by organizations as far apart in their class and method as Young Women's Christian Associations and City Rescue Missions. Her addresses at conventions and conferences are particularly helpful and her drawing-room meetings most effective.

"Salvation," "The Believer's Priesthood," and "The Lord's Return and the Kingdom" constituted the main teaching given by Rev. George E. Guille in the sympathetic atmosphere of the Gull Lake Bible Conference at Midland Park, Augusta, Mich. He, with Rev. John C. Page, were also on the teaching staff of the Lake Orion Bible conference.

Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe gave, with much blessing, an exposition of Philippians at the Montreat (N. C.) Bible conference, in connection with which he also preached to a colored congregation.

Dr. Henry Ostrom conducted tent evangelistic meetings in Chicago during July and most of August. The first campaign, at Crawford Ave. and Division St., attracted large audiences, deepened the interest in the community and was fruitful in results. The second was arranged by Bethany Reformed Church of Roseland, Ill., and there is evidence of increasing blessing as we write.

That Mr. C. E. Putnam most effectively uncovered the errors of Christian Science in connection with the tent meetings held recently by Evangelist L. B. Compton at Champaign, Ill., is apparent from the daily press comment. He did this by diligently comparing Mrs. Eddy's writings with the Bible, his favorite method, and a task for which exhaustive study, a logical mind, and a right estimate of values has well fitted him. From Champaign he went to the Gull Lake Bible Conference, held at Midland Park, Augusta, Mich.

Dr. Henry Ostrom, Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe and Mrs. Margaret T. Russell will assist Dr. Gray in teaching at the Castine and Camden, Me., Bible conferences.

Mr. John R. Riebe occupied the pulpit, morning and evening, at the First Baptist Church of Western Springs, Ill.

THE REDECORATED AUDITORIUM

Following the fire last spring which damaged the Auditorium to an extent that made extensive repairs necessary, it was decided by the Trustees of the Institute to effect a number of changes, structural and decorative, that had long been desired.

As one approaches this historic building of so many sacred memories, a striking change is to be observed in the entire block from the Auditorium to the Women's Building. It is now painted in the same color scheme, indicating to even a stranger that all the buildings are under one management.

Entering the Auditorium, the first impression is of the spaciousness and beauty which have been effected by the new decorations. The pews and seats formerly in mission style are now finished in light oak. The walls, ceiling and dome are in light tan and gold, and the ceiling under the gallery, cream.

The organ has been entirely renovated, all rubber cloth parts replaced with leather, and an electric fan installed.

The choir platform has been changed to curve on either side, and new stationery opera chairs installed facing forward in a semi-circle.

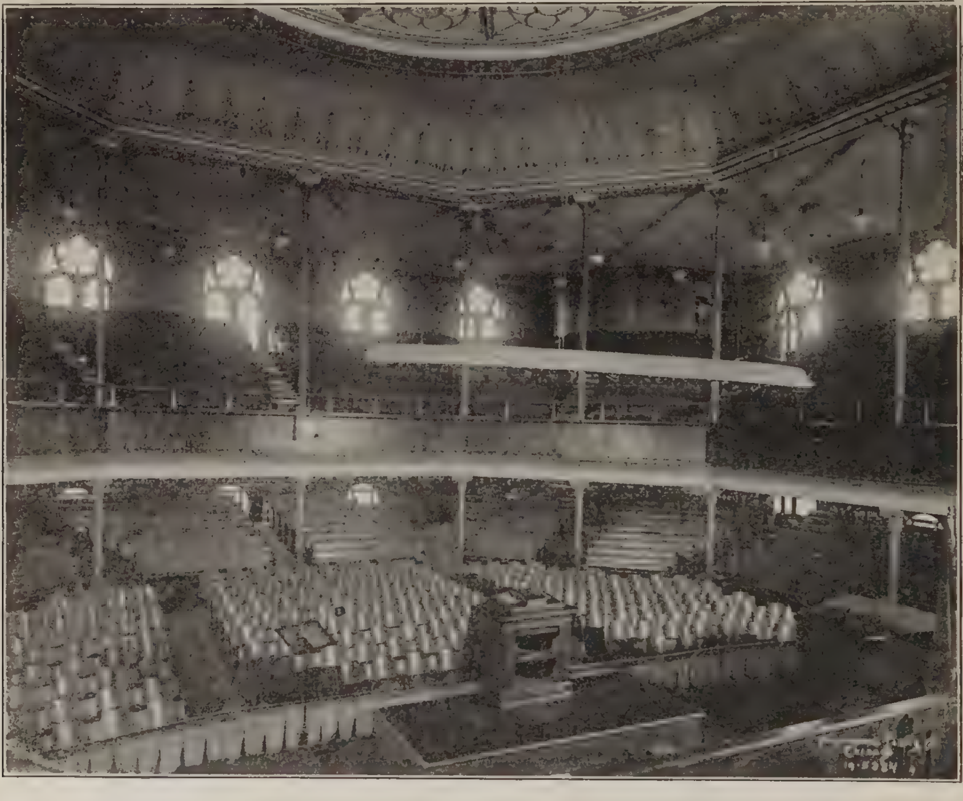
On the speaker's platform is a new pulpit set in oak, Mr. Moody's old pulpit and chair having been taken to the Moody Tabernacle when the Institute bought the building from the Moody Church.

On the platform stands a concert grand piano, for use at special conferences, and at the term-end recitals, which are now held in the Auditorium; and over the platform is hung a circular sounding board decorated in harmony with the rest of the room.

A telephone connects the speaker with the new well-equipped bookstand in the southeast corner, under the tower.

A handsome velvet screen in soft-toned green has been hung across the front of the platform and new cork covering is on the floor just in front, and in the aisles.

The lighting throughout is indirect, both suspension fixtures and invisible lamps being used.



The Auditorium

Adequate ventilation has been provided, the fresh air being pumped in through two windows and washed and cooled before entering the building.

Exit lights, kept constantly burning, have been placed at all doors.

In all the planning for the "new" Auditorium, efficiency has been an object held only second to beauty. With this thought the speakers' room, north of the platform, has been furnished to combine the purpose both of a speakers' room on the occasions of special conferences and graduating exercises, and of a class room. The chairs and lectern are in oak and upon demand are easily carried to the platform.

The corresponding room to the south of the platform is now used both as the choir-room and for classes. On Tuesday and Friday evenings it is suitably arranged for a writing and rest room for the men students of the Evening Classes, and a room on the second floor of the Guild House, which has been connected with the Auditorium by a passageway, is used by the women students for the same purposes.

Floors have been removed between the two rooms northwest of the gallery, throwing them into one splendid room for class use, and made suitable for demonstration lectures by the installation of an inclined floor. This room is used by the classes in the Home Nursing Course.

The partitions of the gallery in the northeast corner have been removed, and the rooms heretofore occupied by the sexton have been completely freshened, the stairway changed, and the vestibule lighted by putting in windows.

New lights have been installed in all the stairways of the building from the street to the top.

JUNIORS ENTERTAIN THE SENIORS

A reception given by the Juniors of the Institute in honor of the Seniors, was held Monday night, July 28, in the Women's Building. The Juniors and their guests gathered for supper and later proceeded to the roof garden for a fellowship meeting and a musical program. After some gospel songs and prayer Mr. Gosnell spoke most happily and helpfully on some of the practical problems of the Christian worker.

Owing to the recent and sudden death of our dear fellow student, Lydia Steen, the customary jokes at the expense of the Seniors were omitted from the program. It included vocal and instrumental numbers by members of the class and two exquisite piano solos by Professor McIntyre, a guest of the Institute.

An original feature of the program was a toast to the Seniors, composed by Nell Malen and Ruth Lamberton of the Junior class and sung by Miss Lamberton and the class. Each Senior was presented with a copy of the song and after refreshments the party came to a happy conclusion.

Two Institute Women in France

TWO INSTITUTE WOMEN IN FRANCE

The picture here reproduced shows two former students with a number of soldiers of the 37th Division in Berterchamp, France, who are waiting to have their uniforms altered. Mrs. C. D. Cottingham on the left, and Mrs. Harold Smith on the right, both of '18, went out under the Salvation Army, and found many opportunities to reach the men for Christ. Two evenings each week they held services which were more largely attended than the two weekly moving picture shows given in the same place. As many as sixty knelt at one service, and among those who accepted Christ were many who went to the front not to return.

STUDENT VOLUNTEER PICNIC

The picnic ground at Mayfair on the Fourth of July was the scene of many gay holiday groups but none more happy than the hundred and more volunteers and friends from the Institute. The heat drove some to shady spots to read or rest or visit. Others ignored or forgot the weather in the enjoyment of baseball and other games.

In the afternoon many gathered to listen to the missionaries of the party. Miss Johanna Wunderlich and Mrs. George Albrecht from India, and Mrs. E. J. Pace from the Philippine Islands, related experiences of their life on the field. Mr. and Mrs. Shelley, of Washington, D. C., sang.

At six o'clock supper was served and then came the hour always looked forward to as the best of the day. In the glory of the sinking sun, His praises were sung from glad hearts. Prayer was offered for the needs of those present, and for former students scattered to the ends of the earth.

A Class in Sewing

Mr. Carl Smith, President of the Student Volunteer Band, led the service and introduced the speakers. Dr. J. T. Spangler, Professor of Philosophy and Religious Education at Lebanon Valley College, Annville, Pa., gave a message from Matthew 11: 4-6. Rev. E. J. Pace, Acting Director of the Missionary Course, read and expounded Ephesians 1: 3-14. The service closed with prayer, and then joining hands to form a mammoth circle, all united in singing, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds" and the Institute "Fellowship Song."

TENT AND OPEN AIR INCIDENTS

The case of a young woman whose mother burned seven Bibles she had taken home affords a striking illustration of the way in which God is blessing the Institute's tent work this summer.

Riding to and from her work she was attracted by the tent sign at the corner of Crawford Ave. and Division St., and on Sunday evening, July 20, went to the meeting.

Recognizing Mr. Meeker as the pastor of the church in which she attended Sunday-school fourteen years ago, she accepted an invitation to sing in the choir that night.

At the close of the service Dr. Ostrom showed her the way of salvation, and left it to Mr. Meeker to talk with her further. To him she related that she had desired while very young to be a Christian and had also purposed to be a foreign missionary, but her parents were hostile and bitterly opposed her becoming a Christian.

After a little earnest persuasion, in which she was told how Christ had suffered for her, she was soon upon her knees, in tears, crying "Lord Jesus, I give myself to Thee, a sinner." Over and over the prayer went up and the surrender seemed complete.

Mischievous boys had frayed and torn the sign that led this young woman to the place where she found her Lord, but His promises had been claimed as it was placed there, and left in His care, and this is only one of many instances in which God honored His Word as faithfully preached in this "Summer-time temple."

Mr. Meeker relates an instance of the fruit-bearing service the open-air workers are doing.

One night, early in June, while preaching from a gospel auto at the corner of State and Quincy streets, he was led to speak of Albert Johnson, of a police officer. Mr. Meeker had been with Johnson frequently during his four months in prison, and stayed with him to the end.

The incident made a deep impression on a man standing near the auto, heavily under the influence of liquor. There was an intense longing in his face as he stood there with his hungry eyes fastened on the speaker, and he was one of the first to raise his hand for prayer when the invitation was given. Personal workers talked with him and learned that he had been on the way to the lake to end his life. Half a block away, he heard the speaker's voice and curiosity for the moment replacing the purpose of suicide, he was soon one of the crowd listening to the gospel.

Soon after the service Mr. Meeker, with a student, took him to the office of the Night Church near by and dealt with him faithfully. God's Spirit touched his heart as they knelt together, he made a heart-broken confession of sin and weakness, and rose sobered, and with a look of gladness in place of desperation and despair.

On leaving he expressed his determination to connect himself with some mission or church, and spend the rest of his life for Jesus Christ.

THE DOMESTIC SCIENCE CLASSES

The accompanying pictures show something of the equipment and the practical nature of the work and instruction in domestic economy, in the Department of Domestic Science and Manual Arts, in charge of Miss Leah May Gaymon, with Mrs. Myra A. Rugg as special instructor in sewing and cookery.

The first floor front room of the building at 812-14 N. La Salle St. is a model dining room, with a complete dining room suite, including a full set of pretty china dishes, snowy table linens, coffee urn, etc., necessary for serving a full course dinner, a breakfast, a buffet luncheon or refreshments for a church social. The food prepared in the kitchen is thus served in a proper manner, the members of the class taking turns in acting as hostess, waitress and cook. Next to the dining room and leading to the kitchen is a commodious serving room with all necessary equipment.

On the floor above this department are the private offices of Miss Gaymon and Mrs. Rugg, also well equipped rooms for the manual arts and sewing classes. These instructions and equipment are available for the Evening Classes as well as for the Day students. The classes, filled to overflowing each term, show the unusual interest manifested in this branch of the Institute curriculum, which is designed to help in gaining access for the gospel in homes in our own land as well as on mission fields.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

Every disabled soldier and sailor should know that the Government is resolved to do its best to restore him to health, strength, and self-supporting activity. That until his discharge from hospital care the medical and surgical treatment necessary to restore him to health and strength is under the jurisdiction of the military or naval authorities. That the vocational training which may be afterwards necessary to restore his self-supporting activity is under the jurisdiction of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

That if he needs an artificial limb or other orthopedic or mechanical appliance the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance supplies it free upon his discharge and renews it when considered necessary. That if, after his discharge, he again needs medical treatment on account of his disability, the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance supplies it free.

That any man whose disability entitles him to compensation under the War-Risk Insurance Act may be provided by the Federal Board with a course of vocational training for a new occupation. That the Government strongly recommends each man who needs it to undertake vocational training and put himself under the care of the Federal Board, but the decision to do so is optional with each man.

That if his disability does prevent him from returning to employment without training and he elects to follow a course of vocational training provided by the Federal Board, the course will be furnished free of cost, and he will also be paid as long as the training lasts a monthly compensation equal to the sum to which he is entitled under the War-Risk Insurance Act or a sum equal to the pay of his last month of active service, whichever is the greater, but in no case will a single man, or a man required by his course of instruction to live apart from his dependents, receive less than $65 per month, exclusive of the sum paid dependents; nor will a man living with his dependents receive less than $75 per month, inclusive of sum paid to dependents.

That if his disability does not prevent him from returning to employment without training and he elects to follow a course of vocational training provided by the Federal Board, the course will be furnished free of cost to him, and the compensation provided by the War-Risk Insurance Act will be paid to him, but no allowance will be paid to his family.

That in addition to the above the family or dependents of each disabled man will receive from the Government during his period of training the same monthly allotment and allowance as that paid prior to his discharge from the Army or the Navy. That upon completion of his course of training he will continue to receive the compensation prescribed by the War-Risk Insurance Act so long as his disability continues.

That in nearly every case, by following the advice and suggestions of the Federal Board, he can either get rid of the handicap caused by his disability or acquire new powers to replace any that may have been lost. That if he is willing to learn and to take advantage of the opportunities to increase his skill offered him by the Federal Board he can usually get a better position than he had before entering the service. That if he fails to take advantage of these opportunities he will find himself badly handicapped when he is obliged to compete with the able-bodied men who come back to work after the war.

That the Federal Board, through its vocational experts, will study his particular disability and advise him as to the proper course to pursue and give him free training for the occupation best suited to him. That on the satisfactory completion of his training the Federal Board, through its employment service, will assist him to secure a position. That public authorities and other large employers will in many cases, at least, give the disabled soldiers and sailors preference when filling vacant positions, provided they possess the training necessary to fill them.

All disabled soldiers, whether in or out of the hospital, should address their communications either to the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Washington, D. C., or to the district office of the Federal Board of the district in which he is located. The district offices of the Board are located at the following points respectively:

SPIES AT WORK FOR BUDDHA

Buddhists singing the doxology with the name of the "Great Gawd Bud" substituted for that of the Christian Deity; Buddhists preaching from the commandments and ascribing their teaching to Buddha; Buddhists conducting spirited revivals after the "Billy" Sunday model; Buddhists copying occidental methods of pedagogy and introducing them into their priests' schools—these all go to show that Christian missionary work in Japan has had several queer results that western teachers did not look for. The modernization of the Buddhistic church is being rapidly effected through the work of hosts of religious spies, according to a letter which has just been received at headquarters of the Methodist centenary movement from Sumner R. Vinton, one of the leading missionaries of that denomination in the mikado's realm.

"There was a beautiful Japanese girl," writes Mr. Vinton, "who professed conversion in one of our Sunday schools. She was one of the ornaments of our church. Six months later she disappeared. Then we discovered she had been sent to learn our methods. She had committed our best hymns to memory. Today she is back with her kindred imparting what she learned for the glory of Buddha.

"The Japanese now have regular Buddhist institutes for training men with all the methods used in our American Christian training schools. They study in these schools the same services and Sunday-school activities that we use in our own church."

ADAPTING THE DOCTRINES

From time to time great emphasis is laid in certain quarters on the necessity of adapting the doctrines of the gospel to what is called "the modern mind." It is, therefore, refreshing to read these fine words from that true warrior of the Cross, the Dean of Canterbury, Dr. Wace:

"I am impatient of all this talk of adapting the doctrines of the church to modern ideas. What we want is the explanation and enforcement of the truth of the Holy Scripture upon modern minds. It is the Gospels and Epistles, the apostolic teaching in its plain meaning and its apprehension by the heart and the soul, that people want and that they will always respond to if it is brought to them. I often think when I have to go to a church to which I am a stranger that I know nothing about the congregation except one thing, and that is, that they are all sinners, and are all conscious of it, and all sorry for it, and all want to be helped out of it. Those are the thoughts—the modern thoughts—that touch all people, and you will find them touched in the words of our Lord and of the apostles, and that is all you want to bring home Christianity and the gospel to the minds of this generation."

Some time ago a Japanese evangelist, who was preaching the old-fashioned gospel, was told that his message was a hundred years behind the age. He replied: "Not at all; it is nineteen hundred years behind." He evidently determined to keep strictly to the "old paths."

APPROVES PRAYER HEALING

Discussing the work of James Moore Hickson, a layman of the Church of England, who is conducting a mission for healing the sick by prayer and the laying on of hands at Trinity Chapel, 18 West Twenty-fifth Street, N. Y., Dean Robbins, rector of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, said recently that Mr. Hickson had his entire sympathy and interest.

"What Mr. Hickson is accomplishing is nothing new in the church," said Dean Robbins. "It is something that has been going on for a long time in England. Mr. Hickson himself has been doing this work ever since he was fourteen years old, and his thirty-five years' experience have yielded some remarkable results.

"I met him only a short time ago through Dr. Manning of Trinity Church. What he accomplishes he does by prayer and faith. He has my entire sympathy and interest."

SOUL-WINNING TRACTS

There is need, now and then, to remind ourselves of the important fact that great results are frequently achieved from most humble beginnings. Here is an instance:

One day a little boy belonging to a Sunday-school in Philadelphia met one of his friends, to whom he mentioned his expectation of a visit to his relatives in the country.

"Well," said his friend, "and what are you going to the country for?"

"Oh, I shall run about and play in the fields and enjoy myself very much."

"Well, so much you are going to do for yourself. What else do you expect to do?"

"Why, I can help the farmers perhaps."

"Well, so much for yourself and the farmers. But what, my little friend, do you expect to do for your heavenly Father?"

"What, me!" replied the child, in astonishment. "What can such a child as I do for God?"

"You can do much. Now, I'll give you a bundle of tracts. Take these, and when you go into the country, distribute them."

"Oh, to be sure, sir, I can do that.' And he received the tracts.

Now, here was the seed sown. Let us see the result. The boy thus armed, went into the country as he anticipated. After being there a day or so, a boy living in the neighborhood asked him if he would help gather the cows together and bring them home.

"Oh," thought the juvenile missionary, "here will be a good chance to give one of my tracts." So off they started for the cows.

The child (for he was no more) took out one of the silent preachers, saying, "Here is something for you."

"What is it?" looking it over; "what is it?"

"It is something good to read," said the lad.

'But I can not read. Never mind, I'll take it home; they can read it there."

Some days after, the country boy met his city friend. "Well," said he, "that little book you gave me made a great stir at our house, I tell you."

"Did it though? How do you mean?"

"Why," replied he, "they read the tract, and then they read the Bible, and when Sunday came, they made me get out the old carriage and clean it up, and then we all got in who could, and the rest got on before and behind, and rode off to church. That tract's done great things, I tell you."

Subsequently it was ascertained that this one tract was the means of converting twenty-four souls.—Selected.

OPEN FOR ENGAGEMENTS

Address, 153 INSTITUTE PLACE, CHICAGO

At a meeting of the Hebrew Christian Alliance and Prayer Union in London, May 15, Rev. A. W. Payne, a frequent visitor at the Institute, said:

"I have been associated for a good many years with work among Israel, but I have never realized, as I do at this moment, that it is the day of our visitation. What wonderful things have happened, even since the war. The Holy Land and the Jewish question have come to the front, and this very Hebrew Christian movement is one of the outcomes, not altogether, but in its new life, from the war. I wonder if you have been struck, as I have, in going down one of the busiest streets of the greatest city in the world, and seeing the names—Gaza, Jericho, Beersheba, Jerusalem, Damascus. Never in the history of the world has there been the combination at Jerusalem that there is at the present moment, the British flag, the Triple Cross, and the Jewish national flag. The two are significant of a great deal. What is the particular opposition of the Jew? It is to the cross. What is the particular lack of the Jewish flag? It is the blood, the red. I happen to be going, a Britisher, to represent the American Church in Jerusalem. I feel as though I was a sort of alliance myself, and I will do all I can to help the true alliance.

"Jesus is the Christ of God, the very Lord of Hosts. He is the only rightful Ruler of Israel and all nations, and there never will be peace for this world until Jerusalem has peace; there never will be a settlement of our difficulties and questions until the crown rights of Jesus are given Him by His own people.

Will You Subscribe for a Missionary?

This picture was drawn by our artist to represent a missionary in Africa who receives The Christian Workers Magazine regularly every year from our "Missionary Fund." He wrote to us that he carries the magazine with him on his preaching tours and reads and interprets parts of it to the natives. He has to explain the pictures, also, to the children.

Just now missionaries tell us it is almost impossible to subscribe for themselves from their small allowances because their money depreciates so much by exchange. When a missionary asks us to send the magazine under these circumstances we do so, and depend upon our subscribers to contribute to our missionary fund for this purpose. Would you not like to become responsible for one or more missionaries every year? To supply a missionary with reading matter is just as important as to supply his bread and butter. And they want The Christian Workers Magazine. Send remittances marked for "Missionary Fund."

Salvation from Start to Finish

Praise God for such good books! A man borrowed "Salvation from Start to Finish," opened it and read as eagerly as one would eat who had been without food for some days. He said: "Not for five dollars would I part with it for what I already have read."

It proves that good people are just hungering, starving and dying for soul food which they do not get from the pulpit.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE

Vol. XX OCTOBER, 1919 No. 2

ONE October morning we were traveling in a train across the prairies when the sun was just rising. At first a narrow ribbon of red appeared bordering the horizon, but gradually it broadened and mellowed, until by and by the orb of day majestically emerged above it, his dazzling brightness filling earth and sky.

The sight was unbearable, and as we pulled down the shade, verse 11 of the 84th Psalm flashed into mind with the emphasis indicated by our italics: "The Lord God is a sun and shield; the Lord will give grace and glory."

With the sun we need the shield from the sun, and with the glory in Christ which we shall behold and which shall be ours, we need the grace to sustain us in its contemplation and enjoyment.

The "covering cherub" of Ezekiel 28 was upon the holy mountain with God and walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire, but iniquity was found in him. He had the glory but not the grace. "Thy heart was lifted up because of thy beauty, thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness." The sun arose upon him but without a shield he was shriveled by its glory. Cast out was he from the mountain of God and destroyed from the "midst of the stones of fire."

Wherefore, if with Moses we cry, "I beseech thee, show me thy glory," let it not be until there has been said unto us as unto him, "Thou hast found grace in my sight and I know thee by thy name." (Exodus 33:17, 18.)

Whole Grains Made Bewitching

Puffed to airy, flimsy bubbles eight times normal size.

Made into fragile, toasted tidbits with a nutty taste—delightful food confections.

Children revel in Puffed Wheat and Rice. Yet these are whole grains made wholly digestible — the greatest grain foods in existence. Every food cell is exploded, every atom feeds.

Bring the Milk Dish Back

One great Puffed Grain service is to bring the milk dish back. For luncheons, suppers and at bedtime float Puffed Wheat in milk.

Think what a combination. Milk is a premier food, rich in vitamines. Every child should get at least a pint a day.

Whole Wheat supplies the 16 elements which everybody needs. It is rich in minerals. In Puffed Wheat every food cell is exploded so that every atom feeds.

Here it comes as thin, crisp, toasted bubbles, four times as porous as bread. It is made by Prof. Anderson's process—shot from guns. There is no other way to serve whole grain in such inviting, such hygienic form.

REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D. D.
Author of "Synthetic Bible Studies," basis of the Synthetic Course.

6,548 Correspondence Students Were Enrolled

during the 12 months ending August 31, 1919, in the Correspondence Department of The Moody Bible Institute, an increase of 1,111 over the total enrolment for the previous year.

Praise God! Nothing is more needed in America today than Bible study—and for the great majority of those who desire a thorough knowledge of God's Word the most satisfactory method is by correspondence.

ITS ADVANTAGES ARE:

1. There are no limitations as to age or class.
2. It is available for any one within reach of the mails.
3. Each student is a personal pupil, not a mere unit in a class.
4. Examinations are written, not oral. "Writing maketh an exact man."
5. The study does not seriously interfere with the student's regular vocation.
6. The time, place and amount of study are under the student's control.
7. Students begin or leave off at any time to suit their own convenience.

TO REALLY KNOW THE WORD OF GOD is to be possessed of an education, an equipment, of illimitable value, out of which springs the fullest and best possible development of all one's powers, in whatever vocation one's lot may be cast.

It gives that knowledge of God and man without which real success in life is never attainable. It gives uplift, inspiration, refreshment, strength, courage, wisdom, breadth of vision, spiritual enthusiasm, and power with God and men.

Bible trained workers are sorely needed and in great demand in our own land and across the seas.

Get ready! Enroll NOW for a Correspondence Course. Fill in and mail the accompanying coupon and full particulars concerning all our courses will be sent to you. The prices are very low—much below cost, and the instruction is unsurpassed.

"I am very glad," writes a student of the Synthetic Course, "that I had the courage to begin when the outlook was not favorable for the continuance of the course, for it has been of great value to me and I have thoroughly enjoyed it. It has been a most delightful study from Genesis to Revelation. I gladly recommend the Synthetic Course to every Sunday School teacher and every lover of Bible truth."

Another says, "I have noticed a big improvement in my church work, especially Sunday School and Christian Endeavor, since I began this course" (Synthetic).

"I am deeply grateful for the help this course is giving me in my work," writes an Episcopal clergyman. "It is a wonderful help and I thank God from the bottom of my heart." (Scofield Course.)

Another clergyman (Disciple) writes, "I enjoy the work very much and I am getting more out of it than any other Bible study I have pursued, not excepting my work in college."

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO
ST. JOHN.

WRITER. The fourth Gospel was written by the Apostle John (John 21 24). This has been questioned on critical grounds, but on the same grounds and with equal scholarship, the early date and Johannean authorship have been maintained.

Date. The date of John's Gospel falls between A.D. 85 and 90. Probably the latter.

CHAPTER 1.

The deity of Jesus Christ (Cf. Heb. 1. 3 12.)

His pre-incarnation work. (Cf Heb. 1 2.)

IN the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

2 The same was in the beginning with God.

3 All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made.

4 In him was life, and the life was the light of men.

5 And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not.

Ministry of John Baptist.

6 There was a man sent from God, whose name was John.

7 The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe.

8 He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light.

Jesus Christ the true Light.

9 That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

10 He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

Gr. Logos (Aram. Memra, used in the Targums, or Heb. paraphrases, for God). The Greek term means.

Grace. Summary: (1) Grace is "the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man . . not by works of righteousness which we have done" (Tit. 3. 4, 5). It is, therefore, constantly set in contrast to law, under which God demands righteousness from man, as, under grace, he gives righteousness to man.

3 VALUABLE BOOKS 3

DANIEL'S PROPHETIC IMAGE, and the Stone Which Smote It. By A. Sims. The most striking feature of this prophecy is its remarkable fulfillment (in part at least) in the world-wide conditions of the present day. Studied in the light of the recent war it shines with surpassing clearness and power. No part of the prophetic Scriptures seem more applicable to the present time than this one. Paper covers, 15 cents.

THE GREAT TRIBULATION. By A. Sims. Answers such questions as what will be the nature of the awful calamities of that time? Who will go through them? How long will that dark period last? New edition. Paper covers, 10 cents.

THE COMING CRASH, between Capital and Labor. By A. Sims. Startling evidence of the alarming but ever growing hostility between the gigantic trusts and labor unions of these last days, and the terrible woes predicted in the Word of God, towards which these organized forces are rapidly but surely drifting. Paper covers, 10 cents.

With all this, the Sunday School Times also offers you the most successful methods of natural efficiency in Sunday-school and church work; a corps of a dozen trained specialists writing for you every week on the International Improved Uniform Lessons, and so many other remarkable features that it will take a whole series of advertisements to tell about them.

NEED "THE BIBLE TO-DAY"

Will You Subscribe for a Missionary?

This picture was drawn by our artist to represent a missionary in Africa who receives The Christian Workers Magazine regularly every year from our "Missionary Fund." He wrote to us that he carries the magazine with him on his preaching tours and reads and interprets parts of it to the natives. He has to explain the pictures, also, to the children.

Just now missionaries tell us it is almost impossible to subscribe for themselves from their small allowances because their money depreciates so much by exchange. When a missionary asks us to send the magazine under these circumstances we do so, and depend upon our subscribers to contribute to our missionary fund for this purpose. Would you not like to become responsible for one or more missionaries every year? To supply a missionary with reading matter is just as important as to supply his bread and butter. And they want The Christian Workers Magazine. Send remittances marked for "Missionary Fund."

Israel Approaches Armageddon

The darkest hour in Jewish history is near. The day of Jacob's trouble will plunge the nation into an abyss of anguish beside which the recent war will be but a shadow. In that day it will be too late for any Jew to be saved through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ—the door will be shut.

Don't you think that fairness to the nation requires us to give the Jews the Gospel message now, while it is yet time? Ought we not to show a heart of pity for this poor benighted people, by showering upon them now an overwhelming Gospel testimony? And will not such an act on our part hasten the coming of Him whom our hearts long to see soon?

We ought to have greatly enlarged resources. Won't you co-work with us? You can't preach to the Jews; but you can pray for them; and you can give of your means to help forward the work. We need so much your prayers, your sympathy, your help. May we have them?

Your gift, be it a thousand dollars, or one dollar, will be indeed welcome, and will of course bring you our literature. Or we will gladly send you literature free, at your request.

Revelations of a Great Agnostic

WE HAVE been reading the autobiography of Herbert Spencer, the man who did as much as, if not more than, any other in his generation to put into human thinking the erroneous deductions of Charles Darwin and others based on the comparative limited data they had gathered in the field of natural science.

When still a young man of thirty-one or thirty-two Mr. Spencer put forth his first essay on "The Development Hypothesis."

What was back of that essay? Not scholarship in the customary sense of the word. He was a brainy man to be sure, a man of thought within his limited compass, but he never attended the schools, either primary or advanced. Rather indeed, he boasted of the fact, taking pride in classing himself with self-made men like Edison, and Ericsson and Sir Benjamin Baker, the last-named having designed and executed the Forth Bridge, the greatest bridge in the world, altho he had received no regular engineering education.

As a boy Mr. Spencer had private teachers for a while, and then went to board with his uncle, an Anglican clergyman of Hinton, England, near Bath, from whom he obtained, in a rather desultory way, all the preparatory knowledge he ever had. Throughout boyhood, as in after life, he could not bear prolonged reading. He never passed an examination, and declares that he could not have passed such examinations as are commonly prescribed. In Euclid, algebra, trigonometry and mechanics he might have done fairly well, he said, but in nothing else. He had always a repugnance to language learning.

At sixteen, Spencer went to work as a civil engineer, in which he was successful, though admittedly indolent and erratic in his way of doing things. Subsequently, when out of a job, his mechanical genius led him to experiment on various inventions, two or three of which were patented and brought in enough money to reimburse him for his time and outlay. Then followed a period of subeditorship on a weekly financial paper, during which period it was that he ventured forth as a magazine writer on topics social, educational, governmental, psychological and philosophical.

This was the man who began to set himself up against God. To him the inspired prophets and apostles, and the divine teacher, Jesus Christ, meant nothing. The great army of able men who had preceded him, to say nothing of his contemporaries, who believed in a personal Creator and a divine revelation, were unworthy of his serious consideration.

He read books, a good many of them novels, but works of a deeper nature which he perused added little to his stock of learning. He seems anxious to have his readers understand that he had little respect for other men's ideas. Anything like passive receptivity was foreign to him, the fabric of his conclusions had in all cases to be developed from within, he said; they refused to be built, and insisted upon growing. He must be his own god as well as some other things.

He took up Kant's Critique of Pure Reason, but stopped short after rejecting its primary proposition. Systematic works of a political or ethical kind, written from points of view quite unlike his own, were either not consulted at all, or else glanced at and thereafter disregarded. Up until he was thirty or thirty-one, he had read no books on either philosophy or psychology, and had only gathered in conversations or by references some conception of the general questions at issue. He had taken up John Stuart Mill's Logic only to dissent from it.

He must have been a man of native greatness, some one says, or else he could not have accomplished what he did and attained such eminence in the so-called thinking world. There is no denying this, and what we have repeated concerning him is not at all in disparagement of the man on the natural plane of things, but only to set him in a light contributory to a truer estimate of his oracular declarations about religion and divine things.

This brings us face to face with the real cause underlying that first essay on "The Development Hypothesis," which cause was, as we regard it, an innate objection to all authority, human or divine, on earth or in heaven.

The principle of obedience was altogether foreign to Herbert Spencer's thinking. Subjection to his parents, teachers, employers was never rendered with any grace. Disputatious and conceited to the point of abnormality, it is one of his virtues that he admits and takes pains to make known. Splendid analyst of character that he was, he does not spare himself. He tells us that his personal judgment was always asserted in defiance of authority. He irritated his uncle teacher by his obstinate defence of his unbelief, and the latter wrote his father: "The grand deficiency in Herbert's natural character is in the principle of fear. By fear I mean both that 'fear of the Lord' which 'is the beginning of wisdom,' and that fear of parents, tutors and others who may be over him."

His arrogance and pride shocked even Miss Evans (George Eliot), whose attainments in the same direction ought to have rendered her shock proof.

When walking with him on one occasion, she expressed surprise that considering how much thinking he must have done, there were no lines in his forehead.

" 'I suppose it is because I am never puzzled,' I said.

"This called forth the exclamation—'O! that's the most arrogant thing I ever heard uttered.'

"To which I rejoined—'Not at all, when you know what I mean.'

"And then I proceeded to explain that my mode of thinking did not involve that concentrated effort which is commonly accompanied by wrinkling of the brows."

This man who was "never puzzled," and whose thinking was not accompanied by a "wrinkling of the brows," was unable to respond to his father's appeals on the subject of religion. In childhood the learning of hymns begat no sympathy with the ideas they contained. Worship yielded no pleasure. Adoration of a personal God, the utterance of laudations, and the humble professions of obedience never found any echoes in him. The supposition that the Cause from which have arisen thirty millions of suns with their attendant planets took the form of man in Jesus Christ, was too astonishing for him. He repudiated the idea of the imputation of Adam's guilt, the penalty of eternal torment, the plan of salvation, etc.

But he affirms that back of this state of mind so far as revealed religion was concerned, there was his deeply rooted consciousness of physical causation.

This seems to have been no puzzle to him and to have caused no wrinkling of the brows. He "knew by intuition the necessity of equivalence between cause and effect, and perceived, without teaching, the impossibility of an effect without a cause appropriate to it. * * * The acquisition of scientific knowledge had co-operated with the natural tendency thus shown, and had practically excluded the ordinary idea of the supernatural"!

A breach in the course of causation was a thought never entertained by him; in other words he found no place in his unpuzzled mind and behind his unwrinkled brow for such a pettiness as a divine Being above and beyond the universe who called it into existence.

At the mature age of twenty-four he already felt, "in a vague way," that there must be a basis for morals in the nature of things, in the social relations of men to one another, rather than in the declared will of God. And at twenty-seven, his "rationalistic convictions had been slowly and insensibly growing for years, caused by perception of the radical incongruity between the Bible and the order of nature"!

In one sentence he sums up all his philosophy and all his religion: "I hold," he says, "that we are as utterly incompetent to understand the ultimate nature of things, or origin of them, as the deaf man is to understand sounds, or the blind man light."

In what thorough agreement with the Bible is he at this point, and yet how it would have surprised him to be thus informed! The Bible says: "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 2:14).

It happens that the reading of Herbert Spencer's autobiography followed rather closely that of The Letters and Reminiscences of Alfred Russel Wallace, a contemporary of Spencer and as our readers know the co-discoverer with Darwin of the law of natural evolution. Had it needed anything to quiet any rising doubt as to the truth of revelation, the lives of these two men would have supplied it.

Wallace, like Spencer, was what is called a self-made man. He was not privileged with the early training ordinarily predicated of those who have attained eminence in the spheres of science and philosophy. He began to earn his living at the same period of life and in precisely the same way as Herbert Spencer.

Like Spencer, he was a man of thought and genius, and dismissing the Creator and the Bible from his mind, he sought to discover for himself how he and the rest of the cosmos came to be.

He traveled not a little, but in somewhat restricted territory, picking up plants, and dissecting insects and studying nature in other ways, adding to the sum of human information.

He suffered hardship and privation also, and we admire him for his courage and assiduity and his modesty too, and the cleanness of his life, and the hearty and self-sacrificing interest shown, especially in his riper years, in the moral and material welfare of his fellow men. If he had stopped there, and if he had not attempted to undermine the faith of men in the God who made them and to whom they were personally accountable, and who loved them even unto Calvary. If he had not assumed on the basis of his scanty knowledge of the universe and with the limitations of his finite mind to account for the origin of things and to lead men away from the foundation of their hope, we could have nothing but blessing to heap upon his head.

But as it is, even he, towards the end, had to confess that there was something beyond the physical universe to the elucidation of whose mysteries he had devoted his long life. What this something was he could not say, and finally we find him fumbling in the darkness of spiritualism to discover it.

We were impressed with the self-confessed errors, mistakes and guesses of these men. Spencer writes an essay or a book putting forth some profound utterance, and then hears or thinks of something else which, if only heard or thought about before, would have modified what he wrote.

Wallace had a prolonged correspondence with Darwin, and letters not a few were taken up with guesses and deductions that might be gathered from the anatomy of an insect, the shape of a leaf or the color of a bird.

They were conscientious men, industrious, well-meaning, wide-awake to things about them, gifted, kind, helpful, wishing to contribute to the world's welfare as they understood it, but of God they knew nothing and were blind leaders of the blind.

We cannot close this estimate more fittingly than to quote what was intended as a witticism of Professor Huxley at the expense of Spencer.

On a certain occasion he was one of a circle in which tragedy was the topic when Spencer's name was mentioned in connection with some opinion, whereupon he remarked:

"Oh, you know Spencer's idea of a tragedy is a deduction killed by a fact!"

Many a deduction of Spencer was killed by a fact while he lived, but when he died and in all his spiritual nakedness stood before a holy God whom on earth he never sought to know, what a tragedy he had to meet!

Editorial Notes

The Trial of Our Faith

From the private letter of a young pastor to his father we are permitted to make the following extract:

"It is no wonder the early Christian martyrs so readily gave themselves up to die. If I correctly discern the signs of the times, the days of persecution are coming back to us. The Bolshevists have already denied the Russian clergy the right to vote, and confiscated their churches; Hungary has turned her churches into dance halls and theaters and prohibited preaching; the powerful labor party of England has ignored the clergyman as a professional person in its vast program.

Already in this country ministers are losing their churches for opposing such heresies as Kent's Shorter Bible, and many are called "cranks" for believing in the premillennial coming of Christ. An orthodox minister is a "marked" man today among his fellow ministers.

"If the conditions that now obtain in continental Europe and Asia Minor spread to America, and except by God's grace they will, then we too, must answer the question, 'Who say ye that I am?'

"Eight hundred thousand Armenians were slaughtered in the last four years because they refused to deny their Saviour; Koreans by the hundreds have been slain and imprisoned by the Japanese, supposedly for political reasons, but, as every one knows, primarily because they are Christians, and Japan knows that Christ came to set men free by the truth.

"But thanks be to God we can say with Paul, 'I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.' God's safe deposit vault for the souls of His own children is one where 'neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal.' "

Was It An Answer To Prayer?

Chicago was disgraced by a race riot last summer when both white men and negroes were shot and beaten to death, and when for three or four days a state of siege existed in certain negro districts menacing the population with semi-starvation as well as other troubles. On one of these days, a negro woman called up the Moody Bible Institute by 'phone to say that she was in much fear and distress by day and by night, unable to leave her apartment to obtain food the supply of which was running low; and what caused her even more anxiety, she was prevented from keeping an engagement to preach at a neighboring camp-meeting. She was an evangelist who had once been a student at the Institute, whose prayers she now earnestly desired on her behalf.

Supplication was made for her by both faculty and students during the day, and one of them on retiring at night felt a special burden of prayer for her, asking that she might be blessed with sleep, of which she had been greatly deprived since the rioting began, and pleading for the fulfilment in her case of the two-fold promise in Proverbs 1:33: "Whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil."

In the middle of the night, or rather toward the small hours of the morning, happening to awake, her case was again put upon this brother's heart and mind, and he arose and falling upon his knees, once more pleaded Proverbs 1:33 on her behalf.

The following day, she again called up the Institute by 'phone to report that she had obtained food, and was even in hope of getting out to the camp-meeting, and then she added, "Oh, I have a new experience! When I went to bed last night I didn't know anything about the soldiers being put on guard here, but anyhow I slept so sound and peaceful that this morning my eyes are swollen!"

Community Service

The Christian Workers Magazine has sometimes been accused of lacking in appreciation of Social Service as a means of bettering human conditions, but such is not the case. We heartily believe in Social Service in its place, our objection being directed only against substituting it for salvation, making the church an agency for Social Service instead of a power house for the gospel.

For example, an experiment being tried in Chester and Bethlehem, Pa., awakens our strong interest. It is a Community Service, in which the churches do not figure as such. Their membership, no doubt, is carrying a proper share of the responsibility but the Service is vested in a committee of men and women, representatives of labor, business, education and government.

Quoting The North American of Philadelphia:

"Community singing was the first means adopted to get the people of Chester together. Then followed sane Americanization among foreign workers, development of school centers, with frequent 'family gatherings'; work among the colored population, under direction of a Hampton graduate; Italian organization among the 11,000 residents of that nativity; formation of women's groups to supervise social activities which will prove decent recreation for leisure hours; promotion of community clubs where the free and easy spirit of the saloon will prevail, minus the spirits, and a training class for play leaders.

"In Bethlehem results have been equally satisfactory. Thus far they have proved the value of this effort to replace the idleness born of loneliness with profitable pleasure bred by natural brotherhood.

"Every one familiar with our centers of population can appreciate the importance of any effort in this direction. If for no other reason, this work should be extended because of its assistance in filling the place left vacant by the abolition of the saloon."

The President and The Pope

Our May issue contained an editorial with this heading, in which we quoted from the Rev. R. A. Torrey, D. D. and in which he quoted from The National Catholic Register.

The accuracy of his quotation from the Register is now challenged, and as he is absent in China, we have tried to run down the matter through the Bible Institute at Los Angeles, of which he is the Dean.

The Rev. T. C. Horton, D. D., superintendent of the Institute, informs us that the article from which Dr. Torrey quoted appeared originally in The Word and The Way of Kansas City, Mo., whose editor reports that it came to him in the form of a newspaper clipping from a correspond ent whose name and address he gives, but which it is unnecessary for us to publish.

We do not know that the article stated anything that was untrue with reference to the influence of the Roman Catholic hierarchy in the politics of this country, but we regret to have given currency, however innocently, to a presentation of the matter which in itself may have been incorrect.

We apologize to all concerned in a manner as public and formal as that in which the offense was committed.

Dr. Kelman in New York

We doubt if Dr. Kelman's welcome to this country will be increased in warmth by the rather tactless reports in British papers as to his motives in coming here. One reason that led him to accept the call of the Fifth Avenue Church was that he might proclaim "the broader and more human side of Christianity" to which "the war had opened the eyes of the churches of America," and for which he thought there was need. Another is intimated in the remark of an editor, that "his presence in New York will in itself be a guarantee that the League of Nations will not be allowed to dissolve in smoke."

As to "the broader and more human side of Christianity," the churches of this country and of the world have had their fill of it, and it is that which helped greatly to bring on the war and which explains in great part our present state of social, industrial and political confusion.

What we now require is the narrower and more God-like side of Christianity which exalts a personal Creator to whom humanity is individually responsible, and a risen Redeemer who is able and willing to save all who will come unto Him by faith.

And as to the League of Nations, its wisest friends in this country would say that its prospects become darker as it is feared that foreign emissaries are here seeking to influence public opinion in its favor. It would be all the more damaging also, if these emissaries were Christian ministers on the pay-roll of American churches.

We doubt not that Dr. Kelman will improve an early opportunity to correct these impressions, unless he shall deem it wiser to live them down by maintaining silence on purely American affairs.

His task is not an easy one, and his bed will not be made of roses. We wish him well, and pray that he may be given great wisdom and grace, and know the daily strength of "walking in the comfort of the Holy Ghost."

This Issue

This issue, as usual, is filled with good things, but there are two articles which we hope none of our readers will miss. They are entitled, "Passing of the Nebular Hypothesis" and "An Open Door and Many Adversaries." Their titles are very dissimilar, but the subject matter of one fits into that of the other as the hand and the glove. The one strengthens the foundations of our faith and the other stimulates its activity. Young people especially should read them.

Those who were blessed last month by Mr. Gosnell's exposition of "Simon Peter's Fall and Restoration" will turn eagerly to his present contribution on the subject of the thief on the cross. Next month will appear an old fashioned Thanksgiving sermon and a great article by Rev. Robert McWatty Russell, D. D., on "Christian Education, Its Relation to Modern World Life."

A Golden Prize

I will give ten dollars in gold as a prize for the best essay on the subject of "THE INCOMPATIBILITY OF CHRISTIANITY AND WAR." The essay must consist of testimony, argument and conclusion, and be limited to 2,000 words, and the first of November as to time limit. The award will be made by a disinterested commission and the essay published in "The Christian Workers Magazine."

As this is a question of vital importance to our salvation and to the welfare of the world, transcending the League of Nations in its relation to the peace of the world, I prayerfully ask the readers of this Magazine to give it practical consideration. Address, D. C. MOORMAN, Roanoke, Va., R. F. D. No. 3.

The Lord's Coming and the Supreme Theme of the Bible

By the Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D., Toronto, Canada

THE supreme theme of the Bible is, beyond all question, the will of God as therein revealed. From first to last the dominant and dominating thought is the knowledge and obedience of what God has revealed and recorded as His purpose for men. This divine will has several aspects and each of them has a direct and definite relationship to the coming of the Lord. If therefore we can discover what God intends for this world, it ought not to be difficult to learn what is His truth concerning His Son as the One in whom all the divine will is to be realized.

The Purpose of the Gospel

Now, first, from the standpoint of the world, the divine purpose can be summed up by the term "world-wide evangelization." It is God's will that "all men should be saved and come into the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2:4) and this means what we call foreign missions. But at this point arises the great, indeed, fundamental difference between those who hold the premillennial and postmillennial views of the Lord's coming. The former maintain that with all the preaching of the gospel the world will not be converted before Christ comes. The latter reverse this order and as Dr. Snowden says, hold that "the world will be Christianized by the present means of extending the Kingdom of God, and that then Christ will come and bring the world to an end and inaugurate the eternal Kingdom" (p. 94).

Dr. Snowden further adds, and it is very satisfactory to have the issues so plain and stated: "This is the decisive point of difference between these two theories and by this point they stand or fall" (p. 94). This is indeed the crucial and fundamental difference and premillennialists gladly face the issue and maintain that the postmillennial view as here stated is entirely opposed to the divine program and plan as plainly set forth in Scripture.

Is America Christianized?

First should be noted Dr. Snowden's word "Christianized." What does this mean? How much does it include? Does it mean the definite acceptance of and obedience to Christ? If not, what is it worth? The question is particularly pertinent in the height of modern problems. Is Europe "Christianized"? Is America "Christianized"? To ask these questions is to answer them. And yet Christianity has been in the world for nearly nineteen hundred years—Dr. Snowden includes "secular agencies" among the divine providential methods for "building His Kingdom in the world" (p. 112). But is there not some confusion here? Can we find any trace in the New Testament that the apostles regarded or taught others to regard these "secular agencies" as part of their plan for evangelizing and disciplining men? Dr. Snowden is eloquent about commerce, inventions, discoveries, science and art in relation to the progress of the Kingdom (pp. 113-115), but it is to be feared that these agencies are not necessarily to be regarded as subservient to that gospel which is "the power of God unto salvation."

A writer in The Presbyterian a few months ago put the matter thus:

"We are pointed to the triumphs of the brain and brawn of men in their grand achievements for human weal in the almost boundless realm of intellectual and physical activity—research, discovery, invention, mechanics, education, social welfare, material well-being, compassing land and sea and air. It would take pages even to name them. Their true value should in no wise be depreciated. This earth is certainly a more comfortable place to live in. But may not that which is productive of human weal be also worked for human woe? Does research eventuate in religion? Do palaces produce piety, factories faith, motors morals, railroads righteousness, comforts Christlikeness? There is no essential 'goodness' in these things: the moral quality is in those who use them. 'Better' does not apply."

The Ministry of German Science

There is no question that the moral value of these things depends entirely on the moral character of those who use them. Have German commercial developments, German science, German philosophy and German inventions (or rather, adaptations of other nations' inventions), and even German art, been instrumental in ministering to the moral and spiritual, the Christian progress of the world? What about "Christianizing" in this connection?

But even Dr. Snowden has to admit that the various agencies he records will not be adequate to the full realization of the Kingdom of God without the coming of Christ. He recognizes that sin will not and cannot be destroyed by any of the methods favored by postmillennialists, and yet if the intervention of Christ in judgment on sin is necessary for its final defeat, this is a significant admission which practically concedes the principle underlying the premillennial position.

The Future of the Jews

Another point of great importance in connection with the divine program for the world is the place of the Jews. According to Dr. Snowden it would seem that the promises to, and revelations about, Israel are to be spiritualized and absorbed in the church of the present dispensation. One of the great objections of men of the postmillennial school, and of Dr. Snowden among them, is to the "Jewish" character of premillennialism (pp. 89, 126, 150, and Chap. 10). Now the real question is, whether all the references to the glorious future which are couched in admitted Jewish terms can be interpreted spiritually of the Christian church. Has God's Word, after all, failed? And is His promise to Israel of none effect? See Romans 9:6; 11:1. Does not Romans 11 depict a future for the Jews which cannot fairly be applied to the church now or then? Are the Jewish hopes wholly baseless? Can such passages as Ezekiel 36; Jeremiah 31; Zechariah 9 to 12, and many more be applied to the present dispensation? These and other passages were certainly not fulfilled in the return from Babylon and on no proper canon of interpretation are they capable of application to the Christian church. And so premillennialism does not hesitate to say boldly that it is essentially and joyously "Jewish" in so far as it looks for the proper fulfilment of God's Word to Israel. It does not believe in spiritualizing the Old Testament or even such a New Testament passage as Romans 11 in such a way as to "give all the blessings to the church and leave all the curses to the Jews." When Christ was asked (Acts 1) about the restoration of the Jewish Kingdom, He did not deny the fact, but only rebuked the disciples in regard to the time, and the discourse in Matthew 24 clearly indicates a Jewish element that is still future. The idea that all the references in the Old Testament to the Jews and their Kingdom are to be interpreted spiritually of the Christian church is the utter despair of true exegesis.

Premillennialists Not Pessimists

In regard to the charge of pessimism laid at the door of premillennialism, the simple answer is that it is not true. There are two lines of teaching in the Bible and these are supported by all that is seen in life today, on the one hand, the church (the body of Christ) was never stronger, or more widely diffused; on the other, the world as a whole, considered, as St. Paul says as "this present evil world" was never worse than today. Sin changes its forms, but not its hideousness in the sight of God. The references to "the world" in Scripture with moral attitude to God are just as true today as ever, for "the world," as such, is still an "enemy of God." And as a thoughtful writer has well said, " 'Better' is the comparative of 'good' and is itself a thing of degrees. How can that grow 'better' which is not even 'good' but bad and only bad to begin with?" A theologian who ought to carry weight with Dr. Snowden (Dr. Kuyper of Amsterdam) has said that "nowhere are we offered the slightest ground for expecting that conditions on this earth move towards a higher state of happiness. . . . The end of the course of events on this earth will be increasing alienation from God, a progressing defection from the gospel." If, therefore, premillennialists are asked about the future, they reply in well known words, "It is as bright as the promises of God." They are under no illusion, still less delusion, that the world, as such, is or can be "better," that politics are purer, business more moral, homes and lives in general more Christlike. They believe that Professor McConnell in the Howard Theological Review for April last expressed the truth of the premillennial position when he (himself not a premillennialist) wrote these words:

"Much of the so-called pessimism comes from the smug complacency in the presence of social evils which sometimes passes for Christian optimism. It is hardly fair to charge (pre) millennialism with pessimism. A premillennialist whose views are to be taken seriously cannot be called a pessimist. All the holders of Biblical apocalyptic views (premillennialists) have been alike in their belief in a good time coming."

Dr. Snowden's Book Weak

There is a great deal more that could be said if space permitted, to show the impossibility of Dr. Snowden's view, and I am bound to confess that I thought the postmillennial position far stronger than this book makes out. If, as may be presumed, and as, certainly, friendly reviewers contend, this is the best that can be said for the postmillennial interpretation of Scripture, all that I can say is that on grounds of Scripture authority and exegesis, as well as of actual experience of life today, the premillennial view is infinitely truer to the proper place, power and meaning of the Bible, to the facts of history, through the ages, and to the realities which surround us at the present time.

Some years ago a prominent Welsh clergyman, Dean Howell of St. David's, who more than anyone was the human instrument in bringing about the Welsh Revival of 1904, wrote these words to another Welsh minister:

"May I say that it is very slowly and even reluctantly that I have become converted to premillennarian views. Time was when I strongly opposed and preached against them, in the earlier years of my ministry; but a closer study of the subject, and what appeared to me the concurrent teaching of the New Testament Scriptures, and of church history, forced me into a different attitude. I became convinced that it supplies the key to the interpretation of large portions of the New Testament, to the history of the present dispensation, and to the existing conditions, both of the church and the world. I am as strongly opposed as ever to the charlatanism of not a few would-be interpreters of prophecy, who have done the subject infinite harm, and who have associated it in the public mind with so much that is fanciful, sensational, and empirical. But I am not the less convinced that it is the teaching of the New Testament, and that in its practical effects it is calculated to uplift and spiritualize religion, and to give vividness and reality to Christian faith."

These are the words of one of the holiest, sanest, most balanced and most thoroughly informed men that ever lived, and they bear their own testimony to the Scriptural character and the spiritual inspiration of the premillennial position.

Dr. Duffield's Five Points

On the general subject, I close by quoting some of the statements made by Dr. Duffield of Princeton, as reproduced in that valuable work, The Lord's Return by Silver.

"(1) Were the doctrine of postmillennialism true it would undoubtedly be prominent in the New Testament and especially in the Epistles.

"(2) The uniform and abundant teaching of the New Testament as to the condition of the church and of the world during the present dispensation—that is, until the advent—forbids the expectation of such a millennium.

"(3) The advent itself, not the millennium, is prominently presented in the New Testament as 'the blessed hope' of the church.

"(4) The Saviour's repeated command to "watch" for His coming because we "know not the hour," is inconsistent with the idea of a millennium intervening.

"(5) The doctrine of millennium before the advent . . . is a modern novelty, suggested but one hundred and fifty years ago by Whitby and avowedly by him as 'a new hypothesis' (Hodge)."

Passing of the Nebular Hypothesis

Or, Evolution Deprived of Its Astronomical Foundation

By Rev. Clarence H. Benson, Buffalo, N. Y.

MANY believe that the so-called discrepancies between the teachings of science and those of the Scriptures are the weakest argument for the plenary inspiration of the Bible. To my mind it is one of the strongest.

There is no controversy between science and Scripture. In reality the controversy exists between superficial scientists and stammering students of Scripture. Earnest, unprejudiced minds have not encountered insurmountable difficulties. Time has answered and will answer all problems. Indeed, there would be no difficulties and discrepancies if men would be content to base their arguments upon facts instead of mere hypotheses. Much injury and injustice has been done to the Scriptures by unscientific reasoning upon the flimsy foundation of unproved theories.

Christianity and Fact

Christianity is the only historical religion. By this is meant that it is the only religion founded on a long series of facts and so inseparably bound up with these facts as to stand or fall with their truth or falsehood. A religion that deals with such tremendous values as immortality, eternity and glorification, cannot risk the introduction of the fictitious or imaginary element. Facts and nothing but facts will be tolerated by those that seek the reality of these things.

It is then a most serious charge to intermingle fallacies and follies with what the Bible itself declares to be a fact, and the evidence of history and experience has substantiated this declaration. Not that the Bible does not welcome criticism. The invitation is to be found upon every page. But surely it is presumptuous in dealing with facts as well established as the Bible evidences of Christianity to rest antagonistic arguments upon a mere hypothetical basis.

Lord Kelvin's Caution

The Bible makes its own challenge as to its truthfulness and upon this we must rest: "If thou say in thy heart, How shall we know the word which the Lord hath spoken? When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him."

The Bible has nothing to be afraid of from all the investigations of science as long as we deal in facts and not in fancies, and the so-called scientists speak positively and not presumptuously. But when it comes to the realm of the theoretical, the speculative, the intuitive where one man's guess is as good as another—it is the height of the ridiculous to hope by such unsupported evidence to successfully rule out facts of long standing.

Lord Kelvin, the greatest of modern scientists, says, "I marvel at the undue haste with which teachers in our universities and preachers in our pulpits are restating truth in the terms of evolution while evolution itself remains an unproved hypothesis in the laboratories of science."

Lord Kelvin might have well added in terms of Scripture, "When a theorist speaketh in the name of science if the thing follow not nor come to pass that is the thing which science hath not spoken, but the theorist hath spoken presumptuously, thou shalt not be afraid of him."

Evolution Meeting Its Acid Test

The doctrine of evolution has been formulated almost entirely upon advanced theories in biology, geology and astronomy. But time is proving the acid test of all hypothesis. Already Professor George McCready Price in his excellent book "Back to the Bible," has successfully demonstrated that the theories of uniformity and successive ages can no longer provide the geological argument for the doctrine of evolution in contradiction to the testimony of the Scriptures. In the passing of the nebular hypothesis, the doctrine of evolution is likewise deprived of its astronomical foundation. It is with this that I wish to deal.

II

Astronomical Accuracy of the Bible

The Bible is a marvel of astronomical accuracy. Without making any claims for scientific exactness it nevertheless speaks truth scientifically as well as historically.

Job said, "He hangeth the earth upon nothing." Where did Job get that idea if it was not revealed to him by divine inspiration? Certainly not from his contemporaries who believed that the earth rested upon the back of a tortoise.

Isaiah wrote, "He sitteth upon the circle of the earth." But what scientist believed in his day that the earth had an orbit?

Again we read, "He walketh in the circuit of the heavens," and we marvel at the predestined truth that thousands of years later was to be proclaimed by scientists in the "grindstone theory" of the universe.

"The host of heaven cannot be numbered," said Jeremiah. Hipparchus counted 1,022 stars and Ptolemy 1,026 but they did not prove the inaccuracy of Scripture because centuries later the telescope of Galileo began to multiply the estimates of the human eye. Years after the age of Galileo improved glasses revealed 125,000,000 stars. With the highly sensitive plate astronomers at last believed that all the stars could be catalogued when lo! the spectroscope revealed the presence of millions of dark stars hitherto unknown which shut out the light of multitudes of distant orbs so that the problem is now truly beyond the comprehension and computation of man.

There was reason, then, that God should challenge Abraham. "Tell the number of the stars if thou canst" and that these orbs should be likened to the dust of the earth for multitude.

Deborah prophesied, "The stars in their courses fought against Sisera." But who ever supposed that the stars had courses?

To the eye of Job, Arcturus, Orion and the Pleiades, which he mentions, would not appear to have moved in all these years. Nevertheless we have recently learned by the spectroscope that all stars have a motion. In fact no celestial world is at rest. God only can construct a perpetual motion machine and His Word alone bids it to cease.

Paul writes, "One star differeth from another in glory." How did he know? For centuries science has never acknowledged a difference. But now with the spectroscope and micrometer, astronomers detect a difference in size, difference in motion, difference in constituency, difference in age in the individual members of the celestial family.

Where Astronomers Stop

So far we have been dealing with astronomical facts as they have fitted into the facts of the Bible. Astronomers can speak positively if not authoritatively as to the calculation of eclipses, the charting of stars and even the distance of the sun and the nearest celestial bodies. In all this they are demonstrating in the realm of fact. But they are not able to demonstrate by observation or establish by mathematics the origin of the universe. This is venturing into the realm of the unknown. The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, "Who is he that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Gird up thy loins like a man for I will demand of thee and answer thou me. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?"

We do not wonder at Job's silence. He realized that now he was entering that realm where measuring rod and mathematical reckoning cannot follow. He was venturing into the unknown where fact must be substantiated by fancy.

Still men have not hesitated to relate their dreams of the origin of creation especially such men as were anxious to find a satisfactory substitute to the revealed fact, "In the beginning God created the earth."

III

La Place's Theory

It was the great astronomer La Place that first suggested another explanation than that recorded by Genesis as the origin of the universe.

The nebular hypothesis which he set forth in 1797 was independently substantiated by the great philosophers Swedenborg and Kant.

They conceived of a universe evolved from nebulae, rather than created in its perfect form. It was suggested that the solar system was at one time a vast nebulae extending out to the present orbit of Neptune and that by revolution and contraction and ejection the present solar system was developed.

The facts that the planets, Satellites and sun for the most part, revolve in the same direction, that the planets and sun are losing their heat and that the celestial hemisphere is clustered with nebulae provided a strong argument for this "detached ring theory" of the origin of our present system. It was supposed that the vast original nebula by contact with meteoric matter or by contraction of its own immense body so accelerated its rotation as to throw off a nebulous ring from its outer edge. This ring continuing to rotate in the direction given it by the rotation of the central mass, finally condensed into a planet, rotating on its axis and revolving about the sun in the same direction as the ring had revolved.

The satellites of the planets were thought to have been formed by the same process from the planets while these were in plastic state. Saturn, with its wonderful system of rings and moons, was explained as a minute object lesson of a planet in course of evolution.

Its Plausibility to Darwin

So plausible was this creative plan that astronomers with one accord adopted it as the most reasonable explanation of the origin of things, while Darwin eagerly seized upon it for the astronomical foundation of his doctrine of evolution.

The church became so alarmed at the supposed strength of an unscriptural cosmogony that she did the only thing that could be done by one who is reluctant to surrender the positive for the presumptive. She compromised. The nebular hypothesis did not attempt a satisfactory explanation of the origin of primitive matter so the church had God create the original matter and the astronomers work it up into suns and systems by means of the nebular hypothesis.

But the account in Genesis does not say that God created a nebulous matter. "In the beginning God created the earth." Why should not a perfect God create a perfect earth in the beginning?

In my former contribution to The Christian Worker's Magazine entitled, "The Earth as the Center of the Universe"* the readers may recall that I held that the earth was created perfect, La Place and Darwin notwithstanding, and that it became void and a waste by a great catastrophe elsewhere suggested by Scripture.

Indeed, it was not necessary for the church to compromise fact with supposition. While for over one hundred years the nebular hypothesis has been generally accepted by astronomers and has provided the ammunition by which Darwin assailed the early chapters of Genesis, no less authority than the Encyclopaedia Britannica says: "It is emphatically a speculation. It cannot be demonstrated by observation or established by mathematical calculation."

More than that. It has never been altogether satisfactory even as a hypothesis, and the evidence of the years has accumulated against, rather than in its favor.

How Astronomical Knowledge Has Increased

When La Place set forth his remarkable hypothesis a century ago astronomers possessed a comparatively limited knowledge of the celestial hemisphere. Neptune had not been discovered. The satellites of Mars and Uranus were unknown. The marvelous mysteries of the spectroscope and the highly sensitive plate had not been unlocked.

With improved instruments and increasing knowledge difficulties in the acceptance of the nebular hypothesis rapidly increased. The moons of Uranus and Neptune were found to be revolving directly contrary to the rest of the solar system while Phobus, the inner satellite of Mars, and the inside ring of Saturn proved to be revolving faster than the planets themselves.

Astronomer and Geologist Agree

Many unsatisfactory explanations have been made of these exceptions but in recent years mechanical difficulties have been revealed which were not at first fully recognized. The astronomer Moulton, and the geologist Chamberlin, have independently demonstrated that if the solar system be converted into a gaseous spheroid, so expanded as to fill Neptune's orbit and so distributed as to conform with the recognized law of gases, even with the present momentum of the solar system, it would not have a rate of rotation sufficient to detach matter from its equator. Moreover such a rate could not be acquired until it had contracted well within the orbit of Mercury.

By mathematical investigation it has also been shown that there are grave mechanical difficulties in the contraction of a ring into a spheroid as simply and as promptly as supposed by La Place. Even if a nebulous ring were thrown off it is not at all certain that it would condense into a planet. On the other hand from our present knowledge of gases we know that the tendency would be to disintegrate rather than to condense.

The Origin of Systems

To make the abandonment of the nebular hypothesis complete Chamberlin and Moulton have now put forth the planetissimal hypothesis as a far more satisfactory substitute.

Putting together our recently acquired knowledge of spiral nebulae, the presence of numerous dark suns and the observation of new stars and their nebulae, these two men have worked out the origin of systems by the collision or near approach of two dark suns, the reaction of which is the spiral nebulae with which the heavens are covered.

It is now conceded that the heavens are studded with wandering dark suns whose light has become extinct and whose presence is only manifested by the cataclysm occasioned by their approach to a luminous or extinct sun.

The recent study of the new stars that occasionally flash forth with sudden brilliancy and die away to obscurity has suggested this origin. In all cases these new stars have been accompanied by a spiral nebula which would result by the near approach of two such bodies. The force of gravitation would subject them to an enormous pull upon each other and even if they did not approach within the fatal limit of being literally torn to pieces from the effects of this tidal force, they would change their character entirely and form into a rotating spiral nebula with two arms projecting from opposite sides of the spiral. Scattered through it are more or less condensed spots which the continuous spectrum of the spectroscope reveals as solid rather than gaseous, and suggests as individual planets of the parent body.

Agreement With the Bible

But the strength of the planetissimal hypothesis is its accord with Scripture. It recognizes the original existence of solid as well as gaseous matter and provides for the preservation rather than the evolution of suns and systems.

In the words of the astronomer Lowell: "The original 'fire mist' with which as a stock in trade La Place thriftily endowed his nebula to start with—the necessity for which has been likened to our supposed descent from monkeys—is in truth as misty a conception of the facts in the one case as it is a monkeying with them in the other. Darwin's theory distinctly avers that we were not descended from monkeys, and La Place's fire mist under modern examination evaporates away."

I believe that in the beginning God created a perfect earth. The ruinous conditions mentioned in the second verse of the Bible could well have been brought about by the passing of an ancestral sun through the confines of the solar system.

Lowell has pointed out that the retrograde rotation of the satellites of Uranus and Neptune are but the survivals of an old order. The present solar movement to which the most of the system is obedient was probably introduced by the visit of an ancestral sun.

The period of reconstruction would fit well into the account of the first chapter of Genesis. In his late book The Evolution of Worlds, Lowell sets forth the early stages of the earth wrapped in swaddling blankets of cloud without sun or stars or seasons. Thus for a period "there was light" upon the earth although its surface like that of Jupiter and Saturn today, was invisible to the sun and stars, all of which is in accord with Genesis.

Forthcoming Signs in the Heavens

But while the Holy Spirit has not seen fit to reveal the method by which the earth became "without form and void," much more astronomical information has been given us as to the sign in the heavens that shall follow the great tribulation and immediately precede the second coming of our Lord. There are portions of Scripture to which recent astronomical discoveries will give new interest and enlightenment.

In Joel we read, "The sun shall be turned into darkness and the moon into blood before the great and terrible day of the Lord come."

Matthew tells us that it is "immediately after the tribulation of those days that the sun shall be darkened and the moon shall not give her light and the stars shall fall from heaven and the powers of the heaven shall be shaken."

Luke says, "There shall be signs in the sun and in the moon and in the stars and upon earth distress of nations; men's hearts failing them in fear for looking upon those things which are coming on the earth for the power of heaven shall be shaken."

Also we read in the Revelation, that as a climax of the terrible days of tribulation before the coming of Christ that the sun became black and the moon as blood and great hail fell out of heaven.

Possibilities of a Burnt Out Sun

It is not impossible that even now there is one of these burnt out suns traveling at ten miles per second in the direction of our system.

Many times the size of our planet, its coming would be detected by the perturbations of our outer sentinels, Neptune and Uranus, fully as soon as the reflected light of the sun would render such a celestial monster visible. At the distance of Jupiter it would be many times the brightness of Venus. One hundred and fifty days later it would reach the orbit of the earth and our destruction or preservation would depend largely upon what point of the orbit we occupied. Twenty-seven days later the two suns would collide or pass in proximity to each other. Even if they should only come in close contact vast portions of their surface would be torn away, new planets would be formed and the entire solar system would be deranged.

A Cataclysmic End of the Age

Such a cataclysm would not only change revolutions and rotations but would produce the climatic changes that would render the earth a paradise during the glorious millennium depicted by poet and prophet.

Or a more serious catastrophe, a thousand years later, might provide for Peter's conflagration and the new heaven and the new earth of which he speaks, and which John confirms in the last two chapters of the Revelation.

At any rate it is evident that science and Scripture agree in a cataclysmic termination of the age. Both allow sufficient time for its manifestation to create universal consternation. Both suggest some gigantic object shutting out the light of the sun. Both speak of planetary and meteoric showers. Both admit planetary perturbations without annihilation.

Of course we understand that this "sign in the heavens" is not for the church. It will be the last sign to an unregenerate and wicked world.

The church will not then be upon the earth.

The only sign that Christ has left to the church is the sign of the unexpected thief, the unlooked for Lord. There need be no signs to the bride dressed in her wedding garments and eagerly awaiting the bridegroom.

But in that period of great tribulation so clearly revealed in the book of Revelation there will be mighty signs in the heavens just as truly as there were signs upon earth and these can be brought about through natural means, as our new hypothesis allows, or by the direct intervention of God.

Personally I prefer to think of God using the natural means, as in the plagues of Egypt, leaving the direct intervention to the final revelation of His power and glory.

The Dying Thief

By Rev. L. W. Gosnell

An Address on Luke 23:39-43

"AND one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us. But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done nothing amiss. And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, Today shalt thou be with me in paradise."

The highway robbers of Christ's day were often popular heroes, Jewish Rob Roys, full of zeal to deliver their people from the Roman yoke. The two crucified with Christ may have been companions of Barabbas. One of them cries, "If thou be the Christ (i. e. the Messiah), save thyself and us." He was doubtless thinking of the Jewish hopes that the Messiah would save Israel from her oppressors. But the other, who seems to have reviled Christ just a little before (Matt. 27:44), turns to rebuke his companion and shows that a change has been wrought in him which continues to astonish all who read of it.

Several points are to be noted in connection with the penitent thief.

I

The Strangeness of His Conversion

1. This malefactor was an unlikely person to be converted. The disciples had forsaken Christ but this sinful man joins himself to Him. He was the first of a long line of trophies from among the foes of Christ. The chief persecutor of the early church became its chief apostle, and the power of the cross over Christ's enemies abides. One of the most devoted servants of the Lord Jesus I have ever known, a man beautiful in his humility and gentleness, was converted while serving a life sentence for murder and on the very day he had planned suicide!

2. The cross was an unlikely place for conversion. The cross has been glorified in our eyes but in those days it was no more attractive than a gallows is now. God, however, is no respecter of places when the salvation of souls is involved. John Wesley declares that at one time he would have thought it a sin to seek to save souls outside a church building! But when the churches were closed against him, he was driven to the fields. Men gathered to hear him, coming sometimes from their work in the mines with faces begrimed. But he tells how the Spirit of God wrought in the fields, so that men's hearts were melted, and the tears of penitence would course down their cheeks leaving ofttimes white channels in the soot. He learned that any place can become holy ground. Samuel H. Hadley, the noted mission worker, began his journey heavenward from the back room of a low saloon.

3. The dying hour was an unlikely period for conversion. This story forever rebukes the thought that acceptance with God depends upon a round of works or upon sacraments; the thief had time or opportunity for neither. The lesson is still needed. Wesley was for years a professing Christian and even an ordained minister before he learned it. He tells how he was thrilled in first preaching salvation by faith alone, to a condemned prisoner, and his joy when he heard the man say: "I am now ready to die. I know he has taken away my sins and there is no more condemnation for me."

C. H. McIntosh, author of the helpful Notes on the Pentateuch, writes as follows on the penitent thief: "Whither could he turn! His hands and his feet were nailed fast to a malefactor's cross. It was useless to talk to him about doing or going. His hands, while he had the use of them, had been stretched forth in deeds of violence; and now they were nailed to the tree, and could do nothing. His feet, while he had the use of them, had trodden the terrible path of the transgressor; and now they were nailed to the tree and could not carry him anywhere. But, reader, note that although the poor thief had no longer the use of his hands and his feet—so indispensable to a religion of works—his heart and his tongue were free; and these are the very things that are called into exercise in a religion of faith as we read in that lovely tenth chapter of Romans, 'With the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.' "

II

The Elements in His Conversion

1. It began in the fear of God. He asks his companion: "Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?" His heart was solemnized by the fear of death. Today, however, we are told, "Nobody fears God any more." It is true we should magnify the love of God, shown to us in the cross. But that very cross warns us there is something in God to be feared for in the cross was manifested, in Christ, the wrath of God against sin. There is a "dark line in God's face" and those who live in sin and reject the Saviour will find the wrath of God abiding on them. "There will be weeping and gnashing of teeth." We live in a frivolous, self-satisfied age, which is not marked by the fear of the Lord. What judgments may God send in mercy to arouse it! Alas, that even sometimes His judgments fail to arouse men, just as one of the robbers was unmoved even by all he beheld on Calvary!

2. It was accompanied by a frank confession of sin. Speaking of their condemnation, he says: "We indeed justly, for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss." How refreshing to hear such an open confession! "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper and whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall find mercy." Hawthorne's story impresses the lesson that it is better to wear the scarlet letter on the breast, known and read of all men, than in the heart, eating out the vitals.

Doubtless the sight of that innocent sufferer by his side, crying, "Father, forgive them," made the thief feel his sins as never before. This man, he felt certain, had done nothing amiss and this, by contrast, made his own vileness seem the more vile. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan was brought up in a minister's home and says he was never afraid of Moses' law. He would have been inclined to say with the rich young ruler, "All these things have I observed from my youth up." But when he got a true view of Christ, not only free from guilt but altogether lovely, he could only cover his mouth and cry, "Unclean."

3. It was marked by an unusual faith. "And he said, Jesus, remember me when thou comest in thy kingdom" (R. V.). To the multitudes, and even to the disciples, the inscription declaring Jesus to be King of the Jews must have seemed a mockery indeed. The life of Christ appeared a complete failure and His claims exploded. Yet, in that hour, there was begotten in the heart of this rough fellow a faith that saw the Kingdom beyond the cross. He believed Jesus was the Messiah and that He would reign some day upon the earth—that this dying man must be raised from the dead and take His throne!

His faith was akin to Abraham's, who believed God who quickeneth the dead, as set forth in Romans 4:18-24:

> "Who against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations; according to that which was spoken, So shall thy seed be. And being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb; he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was able also to perform. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness. Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him; but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead."

His faith was of the kind which has always saved men and saves them now, as Romans 10:9, 10 makes clear:

> "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

III

The Result of His Conversion

It brought this word from Christ: "Verily, I say unto thee, today shalt thou be with me in paradise."

It should be noted that some would put the comma after "today," but we think they are mistaken. The word is admittedly emphatic but loses its force if the punctuation is changed as suggested. Dean Alford says on this matter: "Considering that it not only violates common sense but destroys the force of our Lord's promise, it is surely something worse than silly."

How significant every word in this saying of Christ!

"Today." He would not need to wait for some far off day when the Kingdom would come but His blessing would begin at once.

"With me." Dr. A. Plummer, the well-known scholar, brings out the force of these simple words in this comment: "Not merely in my company (Greek, σύν εμοι) but sharing with me, (Greek, μετ εμου). The promise implies consciousness after death." He had only asked that the king remember him when He should come in His Kingdom. As for asking a place on the right hand or the left, such a thought probably never entered his mind. But, lo! the King tells him he shall walk in companionship with Himself!

"In paradise." We can do no better than quote here the choice language of Bishop Moule: "Paradise is an oriental word meaning a royal pleasure-ground, a royal park or garden. It calls up ideas accordingly of all that is fair in the way of cultured nature. It suggests to us the loveliness of wood, and lawn, and flowers, and waters and also of the company which possesses and enjoys the charming scene, the friends, the guests, the family, of the king. They are there for delightful rest, or for delightful exercise. They have come from the battlefield, or the council, or the journey, to walk, to recline, to converse, to listen, where all is beautiful with a large, ordered, stately beauty. And all this is taken up by the Lord Jesus, in His use of the word paradise, to set forth one side of the believer's unseen life after death. After the manner in which spirits enjoy and spirits see, the departed Christian 'walks by sight' (cf. 2 Cor. 5:6, 9), in a scene of glorious and restful beauty, in the garden of his king." It only remains to add that the promise that the thief would that day be in paradise involved that eventually he would be raised from the dead and have a place in the Kingdom when Christ comes to usher it in.

Have the words of Christ to the dying thief any special interest for us? Assuredly, for just as he went with Christ to paradise that day, so believers now "depart to be with Christ," (Phil. 1:23), and when they are "absent from the body" they are, at once, "at home with the Lord" (2 Cor. 5:8, R. V.). The location of paradise has changed, it seems. In the Old Testament it was a part of Sheol, or Hades, the underworld of the dead; whereas it is now in the third, or highest, heaven (2 Cor. 12:2-4). But the glory of it, both for the dying thief and for us consists in this fact—Christ is there!

"My knowledge of that life is small;
  The eye of faith is dim;
But this I know, that Christ knows all,
  And I shall be with Him."

Pastor D. M. Stearns, of Germantown, Philadelphia, the well-known Bible teacher, passed through an experience which brought out the comfort found in the thought that Christ's followers go to be with Him when life closes. While living in New Brunswick, in 1873, God took to Himself Dr. Stearns' little daughter. He was disconsolate and used to go daily to the cemetery to mourn. In his grief he would thrust his walking stick through the sandy soil till it touched the little casket, as if he might find comfort in such contact. Indeed, his grief was so oppressive that he feared he would have to give up his work. But God graciously sent him relief. One day as he stood in the cemetery he began to say, "With Christ in paradise." He kept repeating the words as he walked home and their real blessedness dawned upon him. "Why," he said to himself, "what more could I ask for my loved one than this?" In the comfort of this thought he was able to resume his work with a joyful, though chastened, heart. What more, indeed, could we ask for our loved ones, or ourselves, than this: "With Christ in paradise?"

IV

How strange that men turn the grace of God into lasciviousness! They will argue that if the thief was saved when dying so may they put off repentance till their death-beds. But are we even sure we shall die peacefully in our beds? Even if this were certain, can we be confident that our hearts will still be receptive to the gospel? There is an old saying worth remembering: "True repentance is never too late; late repentance is seldom true." And there is another notable saying: "One thief was saved so that none need despair; but only one so that none might presume." Even if assured we would be saved in our dying hour, who would miss the joy of a life spent in the service of Christ?

If I Were A Wizard In Words

By Peter H. Van Wynen

I'd give you some lines that resembled a flower
That gracefully clings to a trellis or bower;
And charm you with rhythm of magical power,
  If I were a wizard in words.

I'd render some phrases resounding as thunder,
And flashing as lightning that tears clouds asunder,
And then flies to earth, while exciting great wonder,
  If I were a wizard in words.

But yet, if I had such a great comprehension,
And powers of speech to attract your attention,
And pride smothered love, I would not merit mention
  Though I were a wizard in words.

Faith Illustrated in the Temptation of Christ

By Rev. John H. Hunter

Address to the Students of The Moody Bible Institute

Rev. Mr. Hunter is now an officer and teacher of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, formerly having borne the same relation to The Moody Bible Institute.—Editors.

Rev. John H. Hunter

I BRING you a greeting from the school on the coast. We have our monthly hour of prayer the first Tuesday in every month just as you have, and never a prayer hour passes that we do not pray by name for the Faculty and students and Trustees of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. When Dr. Torrey says, "What are you going to pray for?" and they see me rise they smile, for they know the first thing I am going to ask them to pray for is The Moody Bible Institute.

In our class room we have a missionary map of the world, and on that map we have lines of red ribbon leading out from a button that is sewed on near Los Angeles to the different countries in which our students are gathered—Africa, India, China, Korea, Japan, South America, North America and Mexico, and when I ask the students to pray for The Moody Bible Institute the next thing is to ask them not to forget the students in the foreign field.

I

It seems good to me to be here and look into your faces this morning. You are not so different from what you were when I left, seven and a half years ago, though you are all changed. If this auditorium was just a little different shape I would hardly know but that I was looking into the faces of our own students in Los Angeles.

Thank God for the spirit in these two institutions. I said to Mrs. Hunter, "The student body has changed at The Moody Bible Institute and the old church has left its building and gone to the Moody Tabernacle, but it is exactly the same spirit"; and I added, "You can transport this thing to the Pacific Coast and have the same thing there, and the sum of it all is we are all centered around, whether here or yonder, home or abroad, this old Book and the fundamental principles that it teaches."

I am glad to see all these new buildings, these that have come into your possession since I went away.

D. L. Moody's Power

I will never forget the first day that Dr. G. Campbell Morgan came to Chicago. It fell to my lot to bring him over here to this old church, now your Auditorium, and he stood here and turned over the pages of the old Bible and said, as his eyes filled with tears,

"Is this really the very place where Mr. Moody used to preach and the very Bible that he used?" I said "Yes" and then he bowed his head and lifted up his heart to God in prayer.

Mr. Morgan and I have seen this old building in the days gone by crowded with weeping men and women as the power of the Word of God came from the lips of Mr. Moody. That Holy Spirit who came upon him and filled him is the same Holy Spirit who wants to come into your life and fill you today.

Someone said to Mr. Moody when a young man, "Moody, the world has yet to see what God can do with a man wholly surrendered to His will." Mr. Moody registered a silent vow that by the grace of God he would be a man in whom God could have His way.

If Mr. Moody were looking into your faces this morning I think this is what he would say to you—I have heard him say it again and again: "Stay here as long as you need to stay, and never go away until you have been filled with the Holy Spirit."

We believe in studying the Bible or we would not spend so much time on it, but you know just studying the Bible, if it ends with studying the Bible, does not amount to anything, and if the time ever comes (and I know Dr. Gray or Mr. Moody would say it too), when these Bible Institutes simply turn out men and women who know doctrine, who can point out every heretic, but who are not filled with the Holy Spirit and have not a passion for the salvation of the lost, then the time has come when we better shut the door and write over it, "The glory has departed."

I would not spend my time in Los Angeles, nor would I have spent my seventeen and a half years here just to turn out a lot of folks that knew the Bible from cover to cover. The object is to spread the tidings, to bring men and women definitely to the Lord Jesus Christ, and when the Bible Institute ceases to function thus then the time has come to bury it.

The Bible Institute is what you young men and women make it—it is that which determines whether this Bible Institute is worth while or not. It is not what you know, but what you are.

Mr. Moody's Fifth Gospel

Mr. Moody used to say that there are five gospels: The Gospel according to Matthew, the Gospel according to Mark, the Gospel according to Luke, the Gospel according to John, and the gospel according to you.

The gospel according to you is the gospel that is being read more widely than any of the four books. Folks do not carry about a New Testament to read what Matthew, or Mark, or John had to say, but they are watching you every day to see what the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is in your life. They want to see Jesus Christ in you. The trouble with the church today is we are talking so much and living so little; we are talking about the miracles Jesus did 1900 years ago, but folks are not seeing the Lord Jesus do miracles in our lives in transforming us in His life. By the grace of God you and I must live the book.

II

There are three things I want to say to you from the fourth chapter of Matthew today that have been very helpful to me personally.

You remember chapter three is the account of the baptism of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the testimony of God the Father, and the testimony of God the Holy Spirit, when He descended in the form of a dove; then in the fourth chapter, immediately after He was baptized and had come up out of the water He was led by the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted by the devil. He was in all points tempted as we are and yet without sin.

Temptation: The Lord Jesus Christ had temptation, and so has every one of us. Now that you have turned your back on the business of the world and come to The Moody Bible Institute, have you got away from temptation? Oh, no, the form of the temptation has simply changed. Men and women pounding typewriters and working in business offices and behind counters sometimes envy you. They say "If I were only in a Bible Institute and away from the atmosphere of this office it would be easy to live a Christian life." How little they know about it! The temptations that came to you and me in business were different temptations; they were temptations that we did not have to stop and think whether or not they were temptations.

Subtle Temptations

Oh, how much more subtle the temptations that come to us in a Bible Institute—temptations of little acts of dishonesty, to unfaithfulness, temptations to jealousy, to little acts of meanness, temptations to bitterness in our hearts toward one another, temptations to pride, the thing that cast Satan from glory to the depths of hell! "I can sing a solo little better than anybody else in The Moody Bible Institute." Have you ever felt that way about it? Temptation to be proud because "I preached at the tent and my! how the people came to be saved—and I was the fellow that did the preaching!"

These temptations are ten thousand times worse than anything in business, harder to meet, harder to fight.

Victory Through Faith

Our Lord Jesus Christ met temptation, and here are three points about the temptation of our Lord Jesus Christ that I want to pass on to you. In every one of these temptations the victory was won through faith. "When he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungered. And when the tempter came to him, he said, 'If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.' But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Just a little while before, God the Father had spoken out of heaven, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," and now the tempter says "If—if—if thou be the Son of God." That takes us back to the third chapter of Genesis —"Hath God said?"—casting a doubt into the minds of our first parents. How the devil is trying to cast a doubt into the mind of Jesus Christ Himself. "I know God said you are His son, but if you are His son"—the temptation to doubt the word of God—"If thou art the Son of God command that these stones be made bread," and Jesus answered and said, "It is written man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

His faith is rooted and grounded in "Thus saith the Lord," "It is written," grounded and anchored in what God had said and what God had said in the Book, "It is written."

Faith Is Independent

Notice the independence of faith. "Command that these stones be made bread." The Lord Jesus said, "Bread is not necessary if God has not provided it for me," and His faith in God made Him absolutely independent of bread to sustain His physical life. Bread sustains our life because God has arranged that it should do so, but if the God who has made this body of mine, and who has made the wheat to grow in order that my body may be fed, chooses to do so He can feed my body and sustain my body just as well without bread as with it, and if God wants to sustain my life without bread then it is my business to trust Him to do it.

Faith is independent of what we seem to think is absolutely necessary to human life. What a rebuke to the materialism of today! You often hear, "A fellow must live." Well, must a fellow live? The Lord Jesus Christ must die—not must live, and it is not absolutely necessary that you and I should live, but I tell you what is absolutely necessary, and that is that you and I should trust God.

Do you think any man ever starved to death yet, who turned his back on a wrong way of living and said, "I will trust God?" No! God's representatives are not all dead yet; he has a host of ministering spirits and they will minister to us; and if God does not supply the bread depend upon it God will take care of us some way or other.

Faith makes us absolutely independent of what the world thinks is absolutely necessary. Your first business along this line is to trust God no matter how things go. If there is wrong in your life God may withhold the bread in order to bring you to your senses; He may see something wrong in your life that He wants you to put away, and it may be that you need to search into your life and see if everything is right between you and God, and He will never, never, never fail you until He fails Himself. When will that be? Never.

Faith and Common Sense

The second thing in this temptation: "The devil taketh him up into the holy city and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple, and saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written He shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone. Jesus said unto him, It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

What aspect of faith have you here? This man that said just a minute ago, "I will go without bread; I will throw common sense to the wind, and I will not make the stones into bread to sustain my physical body, but trust God," now says that He expects God to take care of his body.

When I do a foolish thing, that is not trusting God but tempting God. When the devil cannot get us on the one line, then he comes and suggests that we put God to the test and ask God to work a miracle when a miracle is not necessary.

There are men and women who think they are honoring God by setting aside common sense. An old Scotch minister was called one Sabbath afternoon to visit a dying woman in the slums. She was not a Christian, but he talked with her and won her for the Lord Jesus Christ, and the time passed so rapidly that he lost track of it, and suddenly heard the bell of his church ringing for the evening service, and so with a hasty prayer he left.

It was an outside stairway, and he never noticed that the railing was torn away, and getting too near the edge, fell to the bottom where there was a heap of rubbish. When he picked himself up and felt himself all over—not a bone was broken, and he walked to his church and threw away his sermon and preached on this text: "He shall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways lest thou dash thy foot against a stone."

Although he did not see them, I believe the angels were there and spread their pinions underneath him. I believe they would do that for us tomorrow were we in the line of duty and our lives ought to be preserved.

However, this minister did not put out cards saying that he would try it again the next Sunday. When you ask God to perform a miracle for you you are tempting God.

Faith Is Loyal

Third: Then he showed him all the kingdoms of the world, and said: "All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me." Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

That is the loyalty of faith, the undivided allegiance of faith. The devil is not getting folks to deny God but getting them not to be too much in earnest about it. Satan says, "Let me have a little share in it too."

Independence of faith separates us from everything the world thinks necessary; the balance of faith keeps us from expecting God to work unnecessary miracles, and yet trusting Him if it is to be done, and the loyalty of faith refuses to let the world, the flesh and the devil have any abiding place in our lives.

A Call to Separation

By Anne Morris

Long ago in old Judea,
Lone upon fair Olivet,
Gazing down upon the city
One in bitter anguish wept.
Yearning hands outstretched to save it,
"Love, forgiveness, all I bring,"
Scorned, rejected, basely slandered,
Jerusalem crucified her King.

Now the church He bled and died for,
Like the city long ago,
Hand in hand with worldly pleasures
Walks and talks and lives so low.
Social service, money grabbing,
Get the crowds no matter how,
Suppers, sales, be gay and jolly,
We are crucifying Jesus now.

In tears He pleads our freely giving,
Lives and service, money too,
Keep ourselves from earth unspotted,
That's the call to me and you.
O beloved, hear the knocking
At your heart's fast closed door,
"Leave the world and its attractions,
Love Me more. Love Me more."

An Open Door and Many Adversaries

By Rev. R. V. Bingham, of the Sudan Interior Mission

A Missionary Address at The Moody Bible Institute

I COULD not resist the temptation to come before you to thank you for your interest and prayers for the Sudan and those who have gone to the field from your Institute, and to express gratitude for the help given through your Missionary Union, and at the same time bring to you a message that I hope will bear materially in bringing others to our field.

How Missionaries Are Made

There is an idea that missionary work depends largely upon education, but I am convinced that missionaries are not made by education nor by information, but by inspiration and revelation.

The Church Missionary Society, many years ago, with the idea that all the church needed was education, undertook one of the greatest educational campaigns known in missionary experience, and they opened up with "The World in London."

They conceived the idea of bringing representative missionaries and natives for the actual reproduction of missionary scenes. They spared no pains or expense, feeling that they were going to have adequate returns and that it would be the inception of a great movement. They closed the year more heavily in debt than they had ever been before; they had to close their training institutions and keep home trained believers who were anxious to get back to their field of labor.

The London Missionary Society undertook to do the same thing, and they closed the year with a similar experience. God would teach us that it is not education, but inspiration, revelation and revival that must give birth to the missionary movement.

I would take for my opening word a text found in the last chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, where Paul says, "A great door and effectual is open to me and there are many adversaries."

I would also like to read a few verses from the fifteenth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans.

The Story of Norman Davis

You had here in the Institute a month or two ago, a former graduate, a young man who has been four years in our field.

When that young man concluded his university career they did everything in their power to get him to accept a home call, and at his ordination his own pastor made the saddest confession I ever heard a pastor make. He said "I have done everything I can to get him from the idea that God wants him in the heart of Africa; it seems to me he is throwing away his talent."

He is an orator; he has held some of the largest congregations in this country and carried one of our largest churches right through the summer months, but he is in the heart of Africa, and it was this chapter that gripped him, not what I said about the Sudan, but what I said about this chapter.

It is in this chapter that Paul opens up to us the strings of his heart emotions, the inspiration of his life.

I think Christ there had done a wonderful work of grace in the heart of Paul before he ever saw those passages of Scripture in the Old Testament. The very fact that Paul discovered that all through the Old Testament God had not only a message and a covenant for his people Israel, but that He brings a blessing upon the heathen, shows that a wonderful work of grace had taken place in his heart and that he had a revelation of God's purpose concerning the heathen, which he could only have had by divine revelation.

Paul's life was lived on the plan of Christ. He had one simple idea of what the Christian's work was and what the call of the missionary was, and that was to simply carry out what Jesus Christ had laid down for Christians. He had commanded that the gospel be preached from Jerusalem through Judea and to the uttermost parts of the earth, and so we find Paul going from Jerusalem round about.

If you go on you find he is telling these Christians, "I am going to Spain (and Spain was in those days the uttermost bound of the known world), and I want you Christians to help me on"; so you see he believed in working absolutely and literally on the plan of Christ, which is the plan of the enlarging sphere—taking a center and ever pressing on until by God's grace the uttermost bound of the earth is reached.

More Room Wanted

That was the plan on which Paul moulded his work, and he used a very strange expression—"But having no more room in these parts" (Rom. 15: 23). There was not a church throughout the whole country that would not have liked to call Dr. Paul; he was a man that any church would have honored in having for their minister, their pastor, lots of room between the church at Jerusalem and the church at Ephesus. Hundreds of churches had been formed and yet Paul says "No more room for me there."

He means that he has not the heart to stay where there is lots of opportunity for people to be saved, who want to be saved, and he cannot stay in one center when Christ says "Go on, and on, and on to the uttermost bounds of the earth," and he sums that thought up in the twenty-first verse when he says "Yea, making it my aim that they who have not heard shall understand."

It was that verse that gripped Norman Davis; it was that verse that led him through his college career and led him to lay down all the enticements of the home field and planted him out in the Sudan.

I walked with him a thousand miles four years ago in Africa, and you get pretty well acquainted when you have slept together under the heavens and trudged along those narrow paths.

One day we came to a little town in the most God-forsaken part of the country we had ever been in. The only water supply of that town was a big mound of earth which the natives had built and into which, during the five months of rain, the water poured and washed down to the center and rose up again. At the close of the rainy season they had four or five feet of water, and then during the seven months of dry weather every man, woman and child, pig, goat, and everything else, climbed up the sides and drank of it. It got "muddier and muddier" and thicker and thicker, until the kind of soup your mother used to make was not "in it."

Davis took sick with the dysentery; his very life was ebbing out day by day until the doctor said one day, "Mr. Bingham, I do not think he can possibly pull through, but I do not think he realizes just where he is, and I think you ought to tell him the real situation."

I got alongside of his bed after prayer, and told him frankly the situation, and he looked up into my face and smiled, and said, "Brother Bingham, from the day God called me I have never doubted that call, and He called me to the Sudan; I came in obedience to His command; I am here where I am by His appointment, and I think God knows His own business best, and if He wants to take me home I will be, in Him, perfectly satisfied."

Making a Life Aim

Well, God raised him up, but it is a great thing to get your life centered around a divine call and be gripped with a revelation from God.

This passage furnishes to you an opportunity of making a life aim, for Paul says (in the Revised Version), "Making it my aim."

Is your aim settled yet? If you have any of the Spirit of God in your own heart the one thing that will make you sick and sad is the utter aimlessness of the young life of today.

I know lots of societies that are nothing more than matrimonial bureaus—just to come singly and go away doubly.

You get a Young People's Society like one I knew, and they got this aim before them, and inside of two or three years from that Young People's Society (and it was not such a large society) nearly a score of the young people had gone out to all parts of the world. They took this aim.

I do not know how many of you are Student Volunteers, but I want to recommend to you the serious consideration of this aim as a life aim, "Making it my aim to preach the gospel, not where Christ was already named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation; But as it is written, to whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard shall understand."

If you remember nothing else today I hope that verse will just stick and ring in your ears until you say, "Yes, I will take that aim."

The Unbeaten Walk

It is the aim of the unbeaten walk. It is going to separate you perhaps from your home; you will perhaps walk along with Him to those to whom no one has gone—or it might be in the homeland here. It may take you into the unbeaten walk to those who perhaps unless you go will never be reached.

This verse also gripped my life, and for twenty-five years I have needed no other inspiration than the Holy Spirit and that Scripture to hold me to one great task of making Christ known where He is unknown. It makes no difference where I walk, it is the one plan of my life to see that those who have never heard shall have the opportunity.

Some of the Adversaries

"A great door and effectual is opened unto me and there are many adversaries."

Perhaps you cannot conceive of those two things going together—an open door and many adversaries.

Lots of folks say when the adversaries come up, "There is no need to go on trying; there is no open door now." Paul had the two things together.

There are lots of young people who take the Student Volunteer pledge who have before them a great open door, and they give it all up because there are adversaries in the way.

At a convention I attended some years ago they had a lady there from India, who said, "I want to be practical in my talk this morning. Missionaries, before I left India, said, 'When you go home be sure and get in touch with the Student Volunteer Movement and see if you cannot get us a lot of missionaries.' I asked them how many of them had been Volunteers and one hand went up. I asked how many had been to college, and I suppose about 100 to 150 rose up as having been to college. I asked, 'How many were in the second year of college?' About fifty rose. How many in the third year? Twenty-five. How many in the fourth year? Only one.

"Explain to me the discrepancy; 150 in first year conditions and one in fourth year conditions. The devil had put in adversaries that had blocked many from getting to the field."

I have known folks to put in an application to a Board and would throw up the whole thing (although they said they had a definite call) because they were not accepted. A man who had the joy of baptizing 2,232 in a field in India was twice turned down by his Home Board and it was his third application that got him out to India.

There are many adversaries. You must be prepared to go through difficulties. I have known lots of young people sidetracked by the home church. A Moody Institute student that applied to our work said to me years afterwards, with a cloud on his face, "I made a tremendous mistake in my life when I withdrew my application from your society and took a tempting offer. I got out of God's plan." If you had heard the story of the intervening years you would have felt heartsick for that young fellow out of God's plan, sidetracked by a second best thing for him when God gave him a call to the other.

Some get sidetracked through engagements. I know two Moody Institute girls in the field today who would not be there, in all probability, if they had listened to the proposals that were made to them. One of them said to me (she is now married out on the mission field), when I asked her why she rejected the proposal of a certain young man, a very fine young man, "God called me for Africa, and when I was going through the Institute I saw in my classmates girl after girl who professed to have a similar call, and then I saw proposals come from certain directions and I saw that call effervesce and they turned from what they proposed to be. I then vowed before God that I would not let anything come between me and God, that I would get to my field first and know that there was nothing to hinder me from being a missionary before I would listen to any such proposal."

Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Rice—of the Sudan Interior Mission—Dressed in Native Costumes

She is a noble woman; every one of our missionaries love her today; she has God's best for her life. She has a husband, just a splendid couple together. God knows, loves, cares; and He always gives the best to those who leave the choice to Him. He does not rob us of everything; He loves to throw into our lives the best we can take.

They Could Not Be Turned Down

Twenty-five years ago there were 60,000,000 of people where I am, and no missionary there. Now there are about 50,000,000 of people and perhaps a couple of hundred missionaries.

Three of us young fellows, impressed with this need went from Board to Board offering our services, but we met with the statement on every hand that it was a closed door.

My companion, Walter Gowans, used to say, "No door can remain closed before a praying and persistent church, or before men and women who listen to the call and obey the command of Him. 'All authority is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations.'"

In spite of the fact that the Boards would not send us we went, twenty-five years ago, trusting God, to see if we could not get into the Sudan.

There were many adversaries. When we landed the missionaries on the coast besought us to settle down and help them in their work. They said, "You will never see the Sudan; your children will never see the Sudan; your grandchildren may."

Yet we did see the Sudan and I am not a grandfather yet. And so while they pleaded with us, and were very kind to us and invited us to join their work, we felt that God wanted someone to blaze the way into the Sudan.

There was nothing to transport our goods but native heads, and they were afraid to go beyond their own tribe for fear of being made slaves; so at the end of the day they would put down their loads and go home, and leave us by the roadside. And it would be perhaps two or three weeks before we could get another party to help us along. It took us twelve months battling in this way to make about 700 miles, and we can cover the same ground today in two days.

Changed Conditions

The climate wiped out expedition after expedition. Of the party of six that landed for that coast district, ten days after we arrived four died before reaching their appointments, and one solitary man walked in where they were expecting all these other new workers, and he died within a year.

My two companions reached the Sudan, but only to find a grave in the first twelve months

Yes, we had difficulties, but God has enabled us to overcome that difficulty of the climate as well as the transportation difficulty. We can not only reach any portion of the Sudan, but can have a pullman if we can pay for it. We can live in Africa today.

Two Moody Institute students have just completed fifteen years in the Sudan and are looking forward to years of usefulness there. It is a changed condition.

The Language Problem

Then there was that terrible language problem. We have a little of almost every brick of Babel in the Sudan. We are working now in eight different languages and would take on three or four more this year if we could get the workers.

Go and signal to a black man or woman that you will make them a present if they will sit down by you. One friend said, "I went through every conceivable antic to try to get that dummy to say something to me." That fellow has the New Testament in the language today and stories in the Old Testament and a dictionary.

He made progress, but it is a tremendous difficulty. For instance, "wa" means giving, "wa," to be, and "wa" our pronoun us.

When you have different syllables, and every one takes a jump up or a drop down and you have to get it just right, you have got to face something.

It has broken the heart of more than one. Two young Scotchmen just about gave it up. An older missionary before had given it up and was trying to reach the people through an easier method which he had picked up on the outside. I said, "Look here boys, you do not mean to tell me that those black people yonder have got more brain than you have and that their tongues can twist around things that you cannot get around. If you are going to be missionaries to this tribe you have got to get their language; and there is no use doing the thing second-hand; you must put yourself into it and persevere and persevere."

They went to work, and they wrote me a year ago that they had their first portion of Scripture ready in the language.

The Story of Jonathan Goforth

One of the men, Jonathan Goforth, has now received from his own Board, at the request, of missionaries of all societies, a call to give himself to evangelistic work. He said to his wife, "I think I shall have to quit and go home; I can never get this language; I have tried, and tried and tried."

He was a graduate of Knox College, of Atlanta. At the very hour that he came in feeling that it was utterly useless, a little prayer band had met in Knox College, and somehow or other they could not quit at the appointed hour, but lost track of the time, and kept on praying for Jonathan Goforth. They did not know why, but it was right at the time of this crisis.

Jonathan Goforth is there today I believe, because the little prayer circle did not go, but prayed through for him at the other end.

You will have difficulty, but God has helped us so that today we have got the first portion of Scripture, and I do not know of any greater joy than the joy of having given some nation, some tribe, this precious Book, and to hand it down if the Lord tarry from generation to generation, making possible their understanding of these precious truths that brought joy to our own hearts.

I do not wonder that that saintly Presbyterian missionary and preacher, Dr. Paton, when he saw his first pages off the press, his little hand press in the South Sea Islands, actually danced around his press beside himself. It was the Presbyterian dance, but he had a right to dance.

Volunteers Needed Today

We want men and women to go out to the Sudan today. There are many tribes that are still waiting for the first missionary. John Hale and Howard Beecham after being with the other missionaries for a short time, said, "We feel that we would like to go to our tribe."

We sent one of our older missionaries to get them settled and, thank God, two years ago they landed, and settled down where people went right on to the grave without ever owning as much cloth as you could cover your hand with, and inside of fifteen months they had done an unprecedented thing. They had the whole of the Gospel of Mark translated into that ancient language and it is now ready for the press, and they are working on the Gospel of John.

Tribe after tribe like that, and yet they are ready to take in your message when you have got the message ready, translated in their language.

I would like to ask your prayers for the Sudan. I would like to ask your prayers especially for laborers. There are especially governmental difficulties at the present time, but we want you to pray especially for men in our field. The sisters are rising up to the task but we cannot send them as pioneers, and at the present time we have not the men. Station after station has to be vacated while the missionaries are at home. We need men for the old stations and for the advance work. I went for three months into the regions where the name of Christ had not been named and I could have gone on for another six months without meeting the first station on the other side of the Sudan.

Pray the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into the Sudan.

A College Professor's Appreciation of The Moody Bible Institute

(We have obtained consent to publish the following letter from its author as well as from the member of the Faculty of the Moody Bible Institute to whom it was addressed.

Considering its source it has value in testifying to the consistency of right educational methods with spirituality of conduct.

The spiritual refreshing received by this College professor during his brief visit to the Institute will be a means of blessing to the students coming hereafter under his care.

Pastors and missionaries by the score who have lived in the Institute for a few days have been similarly blest and in like manner have become a means of blessing to many more.

Churches, boards and colleges desiring to send their representatives to this Elim for a little while, may feel free to correspond with the Business Manager on the subject. We have little doubt that he would be happy to welcome them as guests.—Editors.)

"MY VISIT to the Moody Bible Institute was the sweetest experience, of the kind, of all my life.

"It surely was a great change from the atmosphere of a college, with too much of the modern spirit, to such an environment as you constantly enjoy.

"I now appreciate the enthusiasm of friends who had come into contact with this Christ-dominated life.

"I was looking forward to a delightful time, but it was far beyond my expectations, so wonderfully profitable and uplifting.

"I can only thank God and take daily courage.

"I may say that I observed things as a college man, and was greatly interested in your educational method, its simplicity and effectiveness. Your students surely get things. And not of least interest to me was the manner in which all was built upon, and related to, the Bible.

"I could not help noting the fine exhibition of the value of a Christian personality in teachers. Such individuality, I discovered, furnishes the variety needed to give balance to the instruction of youth.

"I trust it was not an impertinence on my part to study your organization and administration.

"The more I studied these features, the more marvelous did they become to me. Their completeness and effectiveness are wonderful. It shows in the conduct and order of the students and in the systematic procedure in every feature of the Institute's life. There were times when it was nearly beyond my belief that there could be such order and quiet among more than six hundred active young people.

"But supreme is the spiritual life and atmosphere; the Bible central in your educational scheme; the absolute insistence on all the fundamentals of Christian doctrine; the recourse to prayer and the childlike faith in God for every need; the supreme love of the Lord; the one continuous devotional activity; and, as I got it from the lips of students, the blessed hope.

"On these are based your beautiful Christian fellowship, with the Lord Jesus Christ as the common bond. I am happy that once in my life I have had this blessed experience.

"I may refer to a few particular experiences. First, the monthly prayer hour. I never witnessed before anything like it. It was so spiritually beautiful, soothing and helpful. I shall treasure it through the years.

"Next, the picnic of the student volunteers (July 4). A day of the finest Christian fellowship and ending in a superb devotional service. It was a splendid way in which to celebrate the nation's natal day.

"Most gladly and far more intelligently than before, shall I pray daily for God's richest blessing on the Institute in its work, and in the plans for larger work still. And most gladly shall I direct young people to the Institute for training for Christian service."

Literature of the I. W. W.

The following excerpts are found in a copy of The Federal Reporter 255, and are part of the proceedings of a case in the U. S. District Court in the State of Washington. The case was that of an Englishman and a Russian for deportation on the ground of advocating and teaching unlawful destruction of property (sabotage). The charge was sustained, and the defendants testified that they believed in and distributed such literature as the following. We print it in all its hellishness just as it appears in the Court proceedings, as we desire our readers to be fully informed as to what this thing is which Satan has introduced among us in these latter days. It is the judge (Neterer) who is speaking.—Editors.

THE doctrine and practices of the order, as disclosed by the attached literature, may be indicated by short excerpts from The I. W. W., Its History, Structure and Methods, by Vincent St. John and others:

"As a revolutionary organization, the International Workers of the World aims to use any and all tactics that will get the results sought, with the least expenditure of time and energy. The tactics used are determined solely by the power of the organization to make good in their use. The question of "right" and "wrong" does not concern us. . . .

"Failing to force concessions from the employers by the strike, work is resumed and "sabotage" is used to force the employers to concede to the demands of the workers.' "

Sabotage is defined by several I. W. W. writers:

The New Unionism, by Andre Tridon:

"We may distinguish three forms of sabotage.

"(1) Active sabotage, which consists in the damaging of goods or machinery. . . .

"(3) Obstructionism, or passive sabotage, which consists in carrying out orders, literally, regardless of consequences."

The Voix du Peuple:

"The first thing to do before going out on strike is to cripple all the machinery. . . . Are bakery workers planning to go on strike? Let them pour in the ovens a few pints of petroleum, or of any other greasy or pungent matter. After that soldiers or scabs may come and bake bread. The smell will not come out of the tiles for three months. Is a strike in sight in steel mills? Pour sand or emery into the oil cups.'

Sabotage, by Emile Pouget:

"If the workers disable the machines, it is neither for a whim, nor for diletantism, or evil mind, but solely in obedience to an imperious necessity. . . .

"To list out the thousands of methods and ways of sabotage would be an endless rosary. The shoe workers have an infinite variety of tricks. So have the bakers. To the timber workers it cannot be difficult to use the ax so that the tree or log is split in all its length. To the painters, also, it must be easy to dilute or condense their colors as best they see fit."

Sabotage, Its History, Philosophy and Function, by Walker C. Smith;

"Sabotage is a direct application of the idea that property has no rights that its creators are bound to respect. . . .

"The question is not, Is sabotage immoral? but, Does sabotage get the goods? . . .

"A bar of soap in the boiler would keep the soldiers at home, or else force them to march to the strike. If this were not possible, there are water tanks where the tender must be filled, and the saboteur can "let the gold dust twins do the work." . . .

"Sabotage is discredited by those who believe in property rights. It is the weapon of those who no longer reverence the thing that fetters them. Its advocacy and use helps to destroy the "property illusion." The parasites, who have property, oppose sabotage, while the producers, who have poverty, are commencing to wield that potent weapon."

Excerpts from Industrial Workers of the World:

"The I. W. W. opposes the institution of the state.'

"What is this sabotage that so worries politicians, preachers, profit grabbers, and parasites generally? It is a realization on the part of the working class that property has no rights that its creator is bound to respect. It means that the workers know that might makes right, and that they are possessed of a tremendous might in the productive process. It means that they are conscious of the fact that any action which weakens the employer and strengthens the worker is justified. . . . A slashed warp, a loosened bolt, an uncaught thread, a shifting of dyes, will make Billy Wood see the "justice" of the men's demands quicker than all the votes cast since Billy Bryan commenced to run for office.

"Sabotage is an individual act performed for a class purpose. It may be denounced as "anarchy," but that scares no workers in these rebellious days. . . .

"These migratory workers have lost all patriotism—and rightly so. Love of country? They have no country. Love of flag? None floats for them."

CHRISTIANS AT WAR

By John F. Kendrick

(Tune: Onward, Christian Soldiers)

"Onward, Christian soldiers! Duty's way is plain;
Slay your Christian neighbors, or by them be slain;
Pulpiteers are spouting effervescent swill;
God above is calling you to rob and rape and kill.
All your acts are sanctified by the Lamb on high;
If you love the Holy Ghost, go murder, pray, and die.

"Onward, Christian soldiers! Rip and tear and smite!
Let the gentle Jesus bless your dynamite.
Splinter skulls with shrapnel, fertilize the sod;
Folks who do not speak your tongue deserve the curse of God.
Smash the doors of every home, pretty maidens seize;
Use your might and sacred right to treat them as you please.

"Onward, Christian soldiers! Eat and drink your fill;
Rob with bloody fingers, Christ O. K.'s the bill.
Steal the farmers' savings, take their grain and meat;
Even though the children starve, the Saviour's bums must eat.
Burn the peasants' cottages, orphans leave bereft;

"Onward, Christian soldiers! Drench the land with gore;
Mercy is a weakness all the gods abhor.
Bayonet the babies, jab the mothers, too;
Hoist the cross of Calvary to hallow all you do.
File your bullets' noses flat, poison every well;
God decrees your enemies must all go plumb to hell.

"Onward, Christian soldiers! Blighting all you meet,
Trampling human freedom under pious feet;
Praise the Lord whose dollar sign dupes his favored race;
Make the foreign trash respect your bullion brand of grace.
Trust in mock salvation, serve as pirates' tools;
History will say of you: 'that pack of G—— d—— fools.' "

Bolshevism and Christianity

(From The Literary Digest)

" 'BOLSHEVISM and the Christian religion can not both survive,' affirms the report of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Bolshevism. An examination of this report, says the Minneapolis Tribune, will convince the American Christian that 'Russian Bolshevism triumphant in this country would be followed by the confiscation of 203,432 church edifices; by the suppression of all denominational Sunday-schools, seminaries, and colleges; and by atheist dictatorship domination over 41,926,854 church members.' What the Bolshevik government has done to show its hostility to the Christian religion is thus summarized from the Senate report by the Minneapolis paper:

" 'It has confiscated all church property, real and personal.

" 'It has established the right of anti-religious propaganda as a constitutionally recognized institution.

" 'It has suppressed Sunday-schools and has expressly forbidden the teaching of all religious doctrines in public, either in schools or in educational institutions of any kind.

" 'It prohibits religion from being taught or studied except in private.

" 'It has abolished all recognition of a supreme being in governmental and judicial oaths.

" 'It has disfranchised expressly all clergy and servants and employees of church bodies and has deprived them of all right to hold public positions.

" 'Under the old imperialistic regime—sinner that it was—it became the practice by both custom and decree that every newspaper and every periodical published on Easter Sunday throughout the Russian Empire carried the commemorative head-line, 'Christ is Risen.' On Easter Sunday of 1918 the Bolshevik publications substituted the legend:

" ' "One hundred years ago to-day Karl Marx was born." ' "

WAS THIS ANSWER TO PRAYER?

Superintendent Edward C. Clark of the City Mission, Buffalo, N. Y., was recently needing $250 for his work, and he and his co-workers prayed for this sum. Opening letters very shortly after that time, he came across a poorly addressed envelope. When he opened it he found a package of greenbacks, and on counting it found that it amounted to $279. Mr. Clark says he has no idea who sent it. The envelope used by the sender was the regular Buffalo Savings Bank envelope, Main & Genesee Sts., and contained the words, "For the help of the needy with God's blessing." Mr. Clark thinks this amount was drawn from a savings account at the bank, for the bills were all new and clean.

Our Relation to Others Toward World-Wide Brotherhood

Luke 10:25-37

Neighborhood and brotherhood are not synonymous terms. At a meeting of ministers, a Presbyterian pastor in referring to a Unitarian minister said, "I call him not brother but neighbor and seek always to act towards him as such."

Brotherhood implies one common life derived from one common source. The Christian brotherhood is composed of all the members of "the household of faith," all who through faith have been born again, born into the family of God. (See. Gal. 3:26 and John 1:12, 13). The Lord Jesus Christ is their life (Col. 3:4). The old things have passed away and all things have become new (2 Cor. 5:17). Old distinctions cease to be. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male or female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus (Gal. 3:28). This oneness in Christ constitutes the only brotherhood that is worth while. It alone is a spiritual and eternal reality. The members of it possess eternal life, and this involves not only duration or endlessness but quality or blessedness. It is Christ life, communicated by the Holy Spirit to the soul of the believer, for a believer in Christ is a believer into Christ, he is incorporated into the spiritual body of Christ and derives life from Christ as his Head.

The question of the lawyer in our Scripture lesson shows how easy it is for even trained and cultured minds to become confused and deceived in spiritual matters. "What must I do to inherit eternal life?" was the question asked. But "doing" and "inheriting" have nothing in common. Inheritance is a family matter. If one can find a family having eternal life as its heritage, and get into that family, then one may share the family inheritance. The one family possessing this heritage is the family of faith. (See John 3:14-16; 4:14.)

Partakers of Christ life become Christ-like. The spirit of neighborliness dominates His own. Even as He got close to the needs of others and met those needs at the cost of sacrifice, so with those who are truly His. Like Him, the Good Samaritan, indeed, they give of their time, their energy, their money, their life, that they may minister to the need of those who have been waylaid by thieves and have lost everything save life itself.

To play the part of the Good Samaritan is to be a witness for Him everywhere. "A witness" and "a martyr" are closely related terms. Both imply giving even unto death.

Training in Citizenship

I Peter 2:11-20

The Apostle Peter, in writing the words of our Scripture lesson, addresses himself to Christian believers, citizens of the Roman Empire. They were spoken against as evil doers (v. 12). The Christian church and the Christian worship were regarded by the Roman magistrates as inimical to the interests of the State and the Emperor, even as it is regarded today in some parts of the Japanese Empire, Korea being specially pertinent as an illustration at this time.

The question of the believer's conduct under such circumstances called for special apostolic counsel. In this counsel "submission," "subjection" and "endurance" are the leading ideas. How strange this sounds to twentieth century ears! Present day lectures or sermons on citizenship seldom give emphasis or even mention to these things. Why then does an apostle urge them upon his hearers? For three reasons: First, such conduct would best "glorify God in the day of visitation" (v. 12), that is, the Christian would by these virtues so commend the saving grace of God to others, that when these others were graciously visited by God in the offer of His gospel, they would yield to that gospel and be saved. Thus would God be glorified and the work of salvation be furthered.

Secondly, by such patient conduct and endurance the foolish criticism of evil men would be effectively silenced. The witness of a good life cannot be gainsaid (v. 15). In the third place, they would be true followers of Christ, for he left us an example of patient endurance (vv. 21-23). Our Lord is the example for His people as well as the Saviour of His people. Many things in His life on earth are imitable, many others are not. In the matters of submission and endurance He is the great outstanding example. He "endured the contradiction of sinners against himself." "For the joy that was set before him, he endured the cross and despised the shame" (Heb. 12:1, 2). When He was reviled and accused He did not answer back, when He suffered He did not threaten his tormentors with evil consequences (1 Pet. 2:23).

He committed His cause and Himself to God. And God vindicated Him before the whole universe when He raised Him from the dead. That vindication will take an even more glorious form when the only begotten Son is brought again into the world and all things are made subject to Him.

"Our Pledge and How to Keep It"
Exodus 19:1-8

Let it be frankly admitted at the outset that "rule" or "pledge" life is not the New Testament ideal. Broken pledges bulk large in the tragedy of human life. The New Testament ideal is the Spirit-filled life. Nothing less and nothing other fulfills the purpose of God in the present stage of redemption. Until this is learned in an experimental way "the pledge" may be useful as a crutch to help us along.

Both in aim and scope the pledge is admirable. It is a confession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, a statement of purpose to do His will, a recognition of the necessity of daily Bible reading and prayer, and a promise of consistency in Christian living. As a pledge, nothing essential is lacking. Moreover many young people have been definitely helped by the remembrance of it, when tempted and tried. Nevertheless, if we would go on to maturity, it must be by the adoption of a different principle.

On what principle is the Christian life begun? A pledge? Never. Its commencement is on the principle of faith. So must its continuance and consummation be. "As ye received Christ Jesus the Lord (and that was by faith) so walk ye in him" (Col. 2:6). Have you learned to "walk by faith" as an operating principle, appointed by God and therefore sufficient? Do not pass this over lightly. The adoption of this principle has revolutionized many Christian lives. The whole matter is set before us in two phrases found in Galatians 3:23, 25. "Before faith came" there was law, rule, pledge, as a working principle. Under it there was failure and judgment. But "after that faith is come," not only as a method of forgiveness but as a working principle of life, then we are no longer under the law, the schoolmaster, the child trainer.

God has made a new provision, He has brought in a new creation (2 Cor. 5:17, Gal. 6:15). Christian believers must get adjusted to this and learn to live by virtue of it. By so doing they enter into their inheritance, possess their possessions in Christ, and live victoriously.

Israel at Sinai, as in our Scripture lesson, is a warning to us. They were delivered from King Pharoah but not from King Self. The truth of Romans 7:18 was unknown to them. So with perfect self confidence they said, "All that the Lord hath spoken we will do." This was affirmed three times, and doubtless, with the utmost sincerity. Their history was one long denial of the promise they had made. Truly "The law made nothing perfect" therefore there is introduced a better hope (Heb. 7:19) and a new principle, which is that of faith. Instead of a law around us we have the Law-giver within us operating in gracious power through the indwelling Holy Spirit. Surrender to Him and trust in Him leads to "the obedience of faith."

It is all summed up in the declaration of Galatians 2:20: "The life that I now live in the flesh I live by faith in the Son of God."

Christianity and the Health of China
Luke 4:16-31

"Preaching," "teaching," "healing"—these words describe in large measure the earth ministry of our Lord. They also fulfill the prophecy of Isaiah found in verse 18 of our Scripture lesson. Thus was the Master accredited as the promised Messiah. The works that I do, bear witness of me that the Father hath sent me (John 5:36).

Notwithstanding the proof of His Messiahship he was rejected by those whom he came to bless (John 1:11 and 15:24). Then he steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem (Luke 9:51) that he might fulfill the greater mission expressed in the words, "The Son of Man came to give his life a ransom for many" (Matt. 20:28). Having accomplished our redemption, he charged his followers to bear witness of Him even to "the uttermost parts."

The message is a spiritual one, but access for the message can be gained through the body, hence medical missions and the matter of health. The work of the true Christian missionary is an inward work, it is to open a spring of divine life in the souls of men, to bring them, through the message of the gospel, into the life and light and liberty of the sons of God. To turn from this is cruel. Broken health and bodily pain are a serious misfortune, but a sinful soul, unforgiven and uncleansed by the blood of Christ, is fatal.

A clean soul wants a clean body, a clean body does not always want a clean soul. In proportion as men and women in China and elsewhere are made new creatures in Christ, will bodily health be promoted and the death rate decreased.

In The Christian Herald, issue of August 16, there is an article under the title of "Helping the World to Health." It will be found valuable for this present topic. It records an interview with Mr. Henry P. Davison, formerly director of the American Red Cross and now chairman of the Board of Governors of the League of Red Cross Societies of the World. One paragraph is very striking and also bears on our topic. It expresses the aim of the Red Cross activities of the future in these words: "The world now needs more than remedial agencies. It needs highly concentrated and strongly supported preventive activities that can control, minimize or eradicate, as nearly as is humanly possible those ills of humanity we have been helping to relieve. In brief we intend to make the Red Cross the emblem of health." This is a cause for rejoicing, especially as one remembers that apart from the cross to which He bore our sins in His own body, such an organization as the Red Cross Society would never have come into being.

Mark 1: 14-20

Golden Text:—"Jesus said unto them, come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men." Mark 1:17.

I. Jesus Preaching in Galilee (vv. 14, 15).

The reason why He changed from Judea to Galilee was the growing opposition to Him. The fate of John the Baptist He accepted as foreshadowing His own death. The rejection of the forerunner meant the rejection of Him whose advent he heralded. Prudence moved Him to a more remote region where He would attract less attention and be free from opposition. Besides this it gave less favored people an opportunity to hear the gospel, according to the prophetic word (Isa. 9: 1, 2). It foreshadowed the gospel of the grace of God.

1. What He Preached (v. 14). The gospel of the Kingdom of God which meant the good news of the near approach of the Kingdom of God, when the rule of God as predicted by the prophets would be realized. It should be carefully noted that the gospel of the Kingdom differs from the gospel of the grace of God.

2. How He Preached (v. 15). (1) "The time is fulfilled and the kingdom of God is at hand." This meant that the time had now come for the appearance of the Messiah and the establishment of His Kingdom. (2) "Repent." This meant that the people should turn around, change their minds and attitude toward Christ the King and accept Him as their King. This is a message which needs to be sounded out today. People should be called upon to repent of their sins. (3) "Believe the gospel." Then, as now, men need to believe the gospel of Christ.

II. Jesus Calling Disciples to Become Fishers of Men (vv. 16-20).

1. Who Were Called (vv. 16, 19). Simon and Andrew, John and James, two pairs of brothers. It is usually best to render the Lord's service in fellowship—in pairs. This is not only necessary for effective testimony, but for needed fellowship on the part of workers and protection of the witnesses. These all had previously been called to Christ for salvation; they had become His disciples (John 1: 36-42). They are now called to service. This is always His way. We are first called to be disciples, then called to have fellowship with Him in service.

2. From What They Were Called (vv. 16-20). They were called from positions of definite service. God always chooses His servants from the ranks of the employed. The lazy man is not likely to have a call.

3. To What They Were Called (v. 17). To be "fishers of men." They, no doubt, had been successful fishers. The qualities which made them good fishermen, namely, patience, bravery to face the storm and night, and perseverance which led them to toil all night, though no fish were caught, would make them good fishers of men. It requires patience, bravery, and perseverance to win souls for Christ.

4. Their Call to Obedience (vv. 18, 20). To obey meant sacrifice, painful separation, to give up all business interests and leave their father behind. Regardless of the cost they yielded prompt obedience. They gave up business and home, not even inquiring as to where their salaries were to come from. They put their trust in Him who called them, believing that He was able to supply all their needs.

5. Their Reward (v. 17). These four men have wielded wondrous influence in the world. Their names have become immortalized. Had they remained at their business they would only have been humble fishermen. When Christ calls let us promptly obey, for eventually it will pay. It will yield one hundredfold in this life, and eternal life in the world to come.

Jesus in Peter's Home

Mark 1: 29-39

Golden Text:—"Jesus said unto him, this day is salvation come to this house." Luke 19:9.

I. Healing of Simon's Wife's Mother (vv. 29-31).

1. A Loved One Ill (v. 30). From the synagogue Jesus with James, and John went to the home of Peter and Andrew where He found Peter's mother-in-law prostrate with a burning fever. Among the closest followers there are suffering ones and anxious and burdened hearts, but to all such He comes with loving sympathy and power to help. His power is the same in the quietude of the home as in the public meeting place.

2. They tell Him of Her (v. 31). This was the proper thing to do. We should bring to our Saviour's attention those of our families who have need of both bodily and spiritual healing.

3. He Healed Her (v. 31). "He came and took her by the hand and lifted her up." This act showed the nearness, sympathetic tenderness and power of Jesus. At His touch the fever departed and strength was imparted to her body, so that she was at once able to minister unto them.

4. She Ministered to Them (v. 31). This act shows (1) that the cure was instantaneous and complete. When Jesus heals there is no halfway business. It is the same with spiritual healing. (2) Gratitude on the part of the one healed. Those who have experienced the healing power of Jesus will express their gratitude in loving service to the Lord and His disciples.

II. Christ's Ministry at Sunset (vv. 32-34).

It became noised about that a notable miracle had been wrought in Peter's home, therefore as soon as the Sabbath drew to a close many demon-possessed and diseased were brought to Him to be healed. If we would have the crowds gather today we must be able to show that Jesus is at work among us. Our testimony should be backed by the healed body or soul.

1. He Healed Divers Diseases (v. 34). Jesus can heal any disease. Many of the cures spoken of today are temperamental, but the cures wrought by Jesus were of all sorts. No malady ever baffled Him.

2. Cast out Many Devils (v. 34). The devils obeyed Him. There is no record of a demon ever disputing the authority of Jesus. At His command they rendered instant obedience.

3. Suffered not the Devils to Speak (v. 34). He bids the saved soul witness of His saving power, but will not allow the devils to speak in challenge of His authority, or in witness of the truth of His deity.

III. Jesus Retires to Pray (vv. 35-37).

The arduous service of the day made it desirable to be alone with the Father in prayer. Shut out from man—alone with God. How necessary the hush of the eternal, the calm of God! There is great need of private prayer.

IV. Preaching Throughout Galilee (vv. 38, 39).

He continued steadfastly to preach, for this was His supreme business. His miraculous works were but aids to His testimony. Preaching the gospel is the chief concern of all who would follow Jesus.

A Lesson in Trust

Matthew 14: 22-33

Golden Text:—"I believe; help thou mine unbelief." Mark 9: 34.

The storm-tossed disciples on the sea at night is an example of the struggling followers of the Lord in the darkness of the present age as they are tossed by the tempests of the evil one.

I. The Disciples on the Storm-tossed Sea (vv. 22-24).

1. They Were Sent Across the Sea by Christ (v. 22). Doubtless His reason for this was to keep them from entanglement in the movements of the people to make Him king, for in John 6: 14, 15, it is shown that the people were so excited by the feeding of the five thousand that they were about to make Him king by force. Though they were somewhat unwilling to go it was a mercy for Him to constrain them.

2. Christ Dismissed the Multitude (v. 22). This may be taken as typical of His rejection of the nation whose rulers had already rejected Him.

3. Christ Praying Alone in the Mountain (v. 23). Temptation to earthly honor and power had come to Him, therefore He went to the Father in prayer for relief and strength. The need of prayer is greatest at such times. While His prayer was in part for Himself, yet it was for His disciples. According to Mark 6:48 He saw from the mountain top the disciples toiling on the storm-tossed sea. We are never out of His sight as we struggle against the storms of life, and He ever lives to make intercession for us.

II. Jesus Walking on the Sea (vv. 25-27).

1. It Was in the Fourth Watch of the Night (v. 25). He did not come to them immediately, but waited till almost dawn. It was, however, the darkest part of the night, and physical danger was great, but their perplexity of mind was greater. They knew that the Lord had sent them, but why should they be in such straits if He sent them? A stormy sea is no evidence that we are not in the Lord's appointed way. The disciples' concern should be to obey the commands of the Lord, being assured that while doing His will He will protect them.

2. The Disciples Alarmed at His Coming (v. 26). It was the coming of their best friend to deliver them from danger. He comes to us today in such ways that sometimes we are affrighted.

3. Jesus' Words of Comfort and Good Cheer (v. 27). In the midst of their distress they heard the Master's words, "Be of good cheer; it is I, be not afraid." This changed their fear into joy.

III. Peter's Venture and Failure (vv. 28-33).

As soon as Peter recognized the voice of Jesus He cried, "Bid me come to thee on the water." Jesus said, "Come." Peter obeyed, and for a time he walked upon the waves without sinking. His simple faith linked him with divine power and he was upheld, but as soon as he took his eyes off his Lord and considered the raging sea he began to sink. If we will but keep our eyes on the Lord instead of the waves we can outride the storms of life. When Peter began to sink he did the sensible thing, he cried to the Lord for help. Jesus reached forth His hand and saved him. He has never lost one who honestly cried for help. When Jesus entered the ship the wind ceased. The people worshipped Him as the Son of God. No ship can go down with Jesus on board.

November 2

Temperance Lesson (World's Temperance Sunday)

Jeremiah 35: 1-8, 12-14, 18, 19

Golden Text:—"Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Corinthians 10:31.

I. The Rechabites Tested (vv. 1-5).

In the days of Jehoiakim the Lord charged Jeremiah to bring the Rechabites into the house of the Lord and test them regarding the drinking of wine. This he did in a place where the people might behold them, the aim being to teach Israel by example. The father of the Rechabites had given command that they should not drink wine. Their filial obedience put to shame the Israelites for their lack of obedience. Jonadab, the father of the Rechabites, was only a man, but the one whose commands Israel were disregarding was the Almighty God, their Creator and Saviour. It is God's plan that every man be tested. Being a free agent he only can have character through testing. It was for this reason that God placed Adam and Eve in Eden, and permitted the devil to test them. While we should be concerned with the removal of temptations from men, we should be more concerned with teaching them their responsibility and showing them how to overcome.

II. The Filial Loyalty of the Rechabites (vv. 6-11).

Though they were out of their own country in the midst of a foreign people they refused to drink wine, declaring that they had been true to the instruction of Jonadab all their lives. Obedience to his instruction had been practiced by all men, women, and children. It is a fine thing when children keep in memory their fathers and render obedience to their commands.

III. The Loyalty of the Rechabites in Contrast with the Disloyalty of the Israelites (vv. 12-16).

1. The Appeal (vv. 13, 14). He made the appeal on the basis of the filial loyalty of the Rechabites. He reminded them that the Rechabites were obedient, though their father was dead long ago. He also reminded them that he had spoken to them in person, rising up early to do so.

2. The Ministry of the Prophets (vv. 15, 16). When the people failed to render obedience to God he sent to them the prophets who plead with them to amend their ways by turning away from their idols. Matthew Henry indicates the points of contrast somewhat as follows: (1) The Rechabites were obedient to one who was but a man; the Jews disobeyed the infinite and eternal God. (2) Jonadab was dead long since and could not know of their disloyalty or correct them from it. God is all-wise and lives forever, and will punish for disobedience. (3) The Rechabites were never put in mind of their obligations, but God sent his prophets who rose up early to remind them. (4) Jonadab left the charge, but no estate to bear the charge; but God gave the people a goodly land and blessed them in it. (5) God never tied up His people to any hard task like Jonadab did, yet God's people disobeyed Him and the Rechabites obeyed their father.

IV. Judgment upon the Jews for Disobedience (v. 17).

God declared that He would bring judgment upon them according to what He had said. Judgment is determined upon those who disobey and rebel against God.

V. Reward of the Rechabites for Their Loyalty (vv. 18, 19).

Because they had been true to the commands of Jonadab, they should have continued representation before God. God has such regard for filial obedience that He lets no act go unrewarded.

OUR SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEVELOPMENTS

The writer has been asked to take a place on the Institute Faculty as teacher of child study, pedagogy, and Sunday-school organization and management in the day and evening classes for the fall and winter terms. The Institute has secured, to begin work May 1, 1920, one of the strongest pedagogues and psychologists in the country, who will greatly strengthen our Sunday-school course.

As Sunday-school training for the student body the Practical Work Director has heretofore had to assign students to work in Sunday-schools where the management knew nothing as to what had been taught the student in the class room. Hence theory and practice often did not dovetail together. It is now planned since the Moody Church Sunday-school has moved to their tabernacle over a mile away to organize "The Bible Institute Sunday-school" the first Sunday in October. It will meet at 2:30 p. m. in the Institute Auditorium, and will aim to be the model school where the students will work, where practice will be in line with school room theory.

A more ideal place for such a Sunday-school, in fact for a Bible Institute, D. L. Moody could not have located. It is bounded by the lake on the east, the "Loop" on the south, the north branch of the Chicago River on the west and Division Street on the north. The Moody Institute is right in the center of this area. Along the Lake Shore Drive are multimillionaires while along the Chicago River live the poorest of the poor. Some of Chicago's most Godly people reside here while some of the territory is the most dangerous redlight district. There are 235 residence blocks, making a fine field for house visitation. There is not an afternoon Sunday-school in the area and only two schools south of Chicago Avenue which is more than half of the territory. Watch for report of the opening in our next issue.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF CHURCH EFFICIENCY

Rev. Otis G. Dale, D. D.

II. A Balanced Program of Church Activity:

Last month we spoke of the physical basis for a healthy church life. This subject really demands much emphasis and study. It stands in the same relation to church efficiency as physical health does to a man's capacity for efficient work. The neglect of it, in one phase or another, is the cause of many "functional disorders," and not a few organic diseases, some of them chronic, in the life of the churches. Read again last month's instalment and institute a physical diagnosis of your church.

But the diagnosis should go further. Dr. Richard C. Cabot has made all laymen, as well as the medical profession, his debtors by his keen and simple analysis of human life, in his volume, What Men Live By. According to his view men and women can be healthy and efficient only when four general kinds of activity make up their lives in proper relation and proportion. These are Work, Play, Love and Worship. This estimate of the essential activities of a normal life is regarded so fundamental that many medical men are making it the basis of their diagnosis in searching for the cause of many subtle and distressing human disorders.

In like manner it is possible so to analyze the life and to classify the activity of a church as to exhibit a properly balanced program, and from this to estimate its real efficiency, and diagnose its failures.

What does the church live by? Ask a company of ministers or members, what is the chief function of the church. Some will say missions, some evangelism, some social service, others religious education. The most conspicuous failure of the churches of our day is lack of definiteness of aim or purpose. Activity a plenty, but what, and what for? The recent "movements" give promise of greatly increasing activity, but thus far have done little to centralize aim, unless it be on money raising for a time. They seem rather to be scattering it wider.

The church lives by Worship, Instruction, Evangelism and Service,—in other words, both the Scriptural doctrine of the church and its traditional and persisting life, indicate that these are its main functions. All that is essential and legitimate in church activity may be classed under these heads. Now, what is chiefly important for the healthy life and development of a church is, that each one of these functions be held in proper regard, and that together they be maintained in right relation and proportion one to the others.

Worship is the chief function of the church. It is before all else and from it flows all else. Adoration, praise, thanksgiving, arising in the hearts of redeemed men and women from an earnest and devout contemplation of the goodness and mercies of God, and of all His holy attributes,—that is worship. It is the priestly function of the church, expressing a fundamental instinct and fulfilling the office of the "priesthood of believers." How about the worship of your church, has it degenerated into the "opening exercises," or developed into a rollicking exhibition of vocal gymnastics, or settled down into a drowsy dreariness of indifferent formality? Unless the worship is so ordered and conducted that it be the sincere and joyous expression of high devotion, and the inspiration of holy living and willing service, the church will suffocate for the lack of the vital breath of its being. The members may not understand what the trouble is, but suffering from "oxygen starvation" they will experience a slow death, or go gasping after the poisonous gas of new religions.

Instruction, or religious education, as a function of the church, is not an end in itself, but has two main purposes,—to make worship intelligent, and to train for efficient service. When the emphasis is kept on "religious," and when "education" means teaching true to fundamental Christian doctrine, it leads to the knowledge of God in Jesus Christ, builds up in Him, and trains for spiritual service. It may well be correlated in a local church under four general heads; the pulpit, the church school, religious literature, and the music department. Every man, woman, and child of the church's constituency should be enlisted in one or more phases of this activity.

Beyond question, Evangelism is the chief aim of the church. "The Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost." "As my Father hath sent me even so send I you,—go . . ." Evangelism as the chief aim of the church is distinguished from the chief function as the aim and function of a flouring mill are distinguishable. The function of a flouring mill is to mediate between nature and man's need. The aim of the mill is to put fine flour on the market. The accomplishment of the aim fulfills the function. Evangelism produces worshipers. It is not something apart from other functions but should be the controlling purpose in all. It was never intended to become a side issue, nor a spasmodic effort, but a year-around, age-long program. In its three main phases, personal, public, and missionary, it should engage the energies of all the church all the time, not exclusively, but as the central purpose of all that is done. It is the church's promise of perpetuity. It is the pivot on which a balanced church program turns.

Service, as a function of the church, needs today to be more clearly defined. In current religious thought it is often confused with worship. It is common to hear it said, "All service is worship." But Jesus, though he "went about doing good," never by word or example, sanctioned that view. Good works and deeds of charity are the fruitage of spiritual worship, or are wrongfully performed as a substitute for it. Again, there is a tendency to confound service rendered to God and the service of men. In a sense the service of men is the service of God. But the service of men is by no means the whole, nor the chief part, of the service of God. The fundamental thing in all service is to do the will of the Master—what, where and when he directs. Jesus Christ as Head of the Church, and our Master, is very specific in directing His disciples what they should do. There is a service therefore that is the supreme business of the church before so-called social service. It is the service rendered Jesus Christ in and through the church itself, in making it aggressive and efficient in "preaching the gospel to every creature, making disciples out of all the nations, teaching them to observe, etc.," and ultimately, of course, this is the highest service to men.

The trouble with placing the emphasis on social service is that it wrongly gauges the need of men and the will and plan of God. Social service has its place, not as an enterprise of the organized church, but as the expression of the redeemed life of individual Christians, exhibiting the spirit, and practicing the ethics of Jesus Christ, in all political, social, industrial and business relationships, and all this chiefly as a testimony of His saving and keeping power. Personal service so conceived has an ultimate evangelistic aim, and so exercised does, more than anything else, lead to the solution of social problems.

Here, then, is a balanced program of church activity,—worship, instruction, evangelism and service.

GETTING RESULTS AFTER RALLY DAY

It is not so hard with good music, a fine program and proper advertising to get a crowd out for Rally Day, but to get the crowd back the Sunday following—"Ah! there's the rub."

One school appreciating all this while they planned and organized the Rally Day program, the officers and teachers prayed themselves at the same time into the proper Rally Day spirit. While few pupils could explain why, all knew there was a drawing power in the class and school which they could not resist. Therefore, follow Rally Day with a twenty minute prayer service beginning thirty minutes before the school opens. Like the Greeks our scholars "would see Jesus," and these twenty minutes with Him will make our faces shine with his likeness.

Then again get some one to help, if you must, but take your class roll home and either by personal call, telephone, letter or post card, let each absentee know within twenty-four hours you missed him at Sunday-school. I know one school of over five hundred enrolment the average attendance of which was raised in four months from thirty-five per cent to seventy-one per cent, by this method. Pupils will seldom be absent if teachers get a real passion for their attendance.

Even though absentees are kept closely in touch through the mails or over the telephone, try and make a personal visit to every home represented in your class within a month after Rally Day, and thus secure the co-operation of the home in your work.

THE WORLD'S SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION, TOKYO, JAPAN, OCTOBER, 1920

The World's Eighth Sunday-school Convention is to be held more than one year hence, yet word comes that the number of inquiries has already equaled the number of berths of the carrying capacity of five Pacific steamship lines. This trip will afford a magnificent opportunity to study missionary work in the far east as well as to attend the real World's Peace Conference. The first transportation bulletin outlines ten separate tours occupying from forty-nine to one hundred and two days absence from America. The cost of these trips ranges from four hundred and eighty dollars to twelve hundred and fifty dollars. Since only delegates to the convention will be booked on these tours, and since all delegates must be approved by the World's Committee we urge all of our readers who are thinking of taking this trip to get in touch with the World's Sunday-school committee, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York, at the earliest possible moment. All available space will soon be sold.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SURPLUS MATERIAL

Conservation has found a fruitful field for cultivation. Left-over material especially picture cards and illustrated papers and gifts for children may now be all used in some foreign mission field of your own denomination which can be reached through the World's Sunday-school Association.

Christmas may be distant on the calendar, but now is the time to dress dolls, prepare boxes and select pictures that can be sent to the missionary early in the fall. The missionaries want these things for distribution at the Christmas season. It will cost but 32 cents to send four pounds of Bible lesson picture cards and these are always in demand abroad. Millions of pictures would not be too many to forward in the coming weeks. A pamphlet has been prepared by the Surplus Material Department of the World's Sunday-school Association which gives all information concerning things needed and how they can be sent. Write to the above named Department at 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York. Name your denomination in full and you will receive an introduction to a missionary in your own church to whom the packages should be sent. More than 30,000 in the home land have co-operated in this manner.

AN APPRECIATION OF SUNDAY-SCHOOLS

The late H. J. Heinz, of pickle fame, gave during his lifetime large amounts of time and money to Sunday-school work and when he passed away a few weeks ago they found his will provided for Sunday-school bequests as follows: $100,000 for the World's Sunday-school Association; $75,000 for the International Sunday-school Association; $75,000 for the Pennsylvania (his own state) State Sunday-school Association, and $50,000 for the Allegheny County Sunday-school Association. Mr. Heinz often said to the writer that the best investments he had ever made, declaring the largest dividends, were those of time and money he had invested in Sunday-school work.

A TIMELY WARNING

"In the movement for community and interdenominational co-operation which is now well under way, there is need to keep clearly in the minds of our educational leaders the necessity for preserving the church as an institution. The present tendency to depreciate the church and to exalt a pure religion which finds no expression in creed, ritual, or institution must be overcome or religion itself will suffer. An attempt to substitute community houses, social settlements, etc., for the church will certainly fail.

"Any one who has had any experience in the operation of a community program of religious education knows that no community program of this kind can be successful which does not vitalize and build up the local churches of the community. The test of the success of a community program of religious education is found in the growth of the churches of the community, and not in providing a substitute in the form of an open forum, a community fellowship house, or some other similar organization. The writer of this article has always stood consistently, and against the pressure of many of the leaders of organizations which compete with the church, for the principle that the local church is the agency for Christianizing our American communities, and he has always opposed any substitute for the church. In these days of federation he wishes again to record his conviction that no other agency will spiritualize society except the church."—Professor Walter S. Athearn, in Zion's Herald.

A LITTLE BIT OF LOVE

In the base hospital of an army camp a fine boy of eighteen who had accepted Christ at a meeting a few days before, lay dying. The "Y" secretary whom he asked to see because he had led the boy to Christ, was at his bedside. Both had tenderly prayed and peace seemed to fill the boy's heart and he was not afraid to die. Nevertheless, the secretary noticed a longing look in his face and asked what else he could do for him. "Well," said the boy, "every time I was sick before, mother was there and she always kissed me. I wonder whether you would kiss me?" The secretary stooped over and planted a kiss on his cheek and such a sweet smile of contentment came over the boy's face. The secretary turned to speak to the soldier on the next cot, but when he looked back in a few moments the boy was gone, but death had fastened the smile which the mother's kiss by proxy had produced, and when the body was shipped home a note to the mother told the cause of the smile and brought comfort to the mother's heart as the kiss had to the boy's. Teacher, your class may be "dying for a little bit of love." As the secretary was the proxy of the boy's mother you may represent the scholar's Christ. In spirit, word and deed be a good representative.

SENSIGRAMS FROM "COMMON SENSE"

Edwin W. Thornton

A teacher can not teach without studying his pupils any more than a farmer can farm without studying his fields.

If knowledge is power, every intellect is a power house, which should be under proper control.

It is not difficult to study the mind if you do not mind study.

If the feelings are not trained skyward they will run along the ground.

When the feelings run riot, the intellect and the will are apt to join the mob.

The intellect loads the gun, the feelings direct the aim, and the will pulls the trigger.

Speak kind words and you will hear kind echoes.

There is no more sense in breaking the will of a child than there is in sandbagging the engineer of a train.

A cultivated will is only another name for a strong character.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO YOU

You are writing a gospel,
  A chapter each day,
By the deeds that you do
  And the words that you say,
Children read that gospel
  Whether faithless or true.
Say! What is the gospel
  According to you?

Its six chapters are as follows: Why Men are Lost (Sin and Its Consequences); How Men Are Saved (God's Part), How Men Are Saved (Man's Part), What Is Salvation (Past, Present, Future), Salvation's Forward Look (The Blessed Hope), Salvation From Sin Now (The Victorious Life).

OCTOBER

October has been called the golden month ever since the sun first put the last ripening touches to the fruit and Jack Frost first turned the leaves yellow. If it were possible to get a vote of all the people on the subject of their favorite month, the result probably would disclose a tie, or near it, between October and April. One is the month of the falling leaf and the other is the month of budding, and each has its holding charm.

There are hazy days in October, which add to the month's loveliness. On a fair day the haze takes on color, a finely delicate blue, which enhances the landscape's beauty. Frost is the artist employed by October to paint its glories. The pity is that the canvas cannot be preserved.

The harvest moon comes long before October is ushered in, but the month is the harvest month, none the less. Man does a large part of his harvesting in the later fall. The lower animals do nearly all of theirs within the thirty-one days allotted for the life of the month of gold.

October is a Lady Bountiful. It gives lavishly of its holdings. It is the golden month in a double sense. It is rich in color and in treasure.—Chicago Evening Post.

THE HOME-KEEPER

By Alma B. Wilson

Give your heart and all to Jesus,
  Life will e'er be sweet and new,
Every moment grow more precious,
  Time unfold new joys for you.

Though your home be e'er so humble,
  Or you have a mansion fair,
As you're crossing o'er the threshold
  Ask the Master to be there.

Yes, you may be just like Martha,
  In your home-tasks may rejoice;
But take some time to be like Mary,
  Listening to the Master's voice.

Dedicate your life to Jesus,
  He will make His home with thee;
You will feel His grace and blessing,—
  Pray ye thus:—"Abide with me."

DEATH OF AUTHOR OF "TRUST AND OBEY"

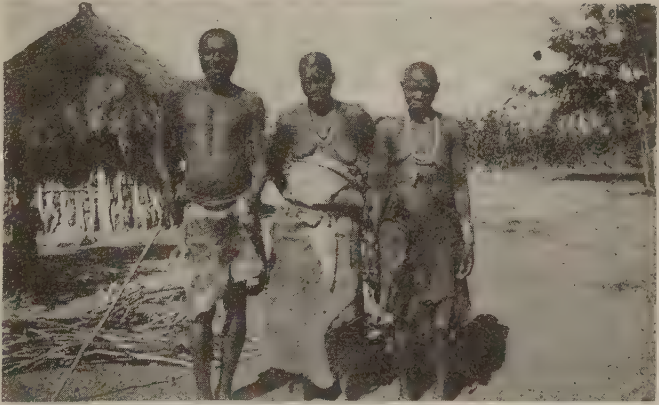
Rev. John H. Sammis, of Los Angeles, Calf., died on June 30, after a decline of two years. He was an instructor in the Bible Institute of Highland Park, Cal., and previous to this had been in the pastorate at Grand Haven, Mich.; Red Wing, Minn.; Sullivan, Ind.; and at other places. He was a minister of deep spirituality and winning personality.

Missionary Department

RELEASE TO THE CAPTIVES

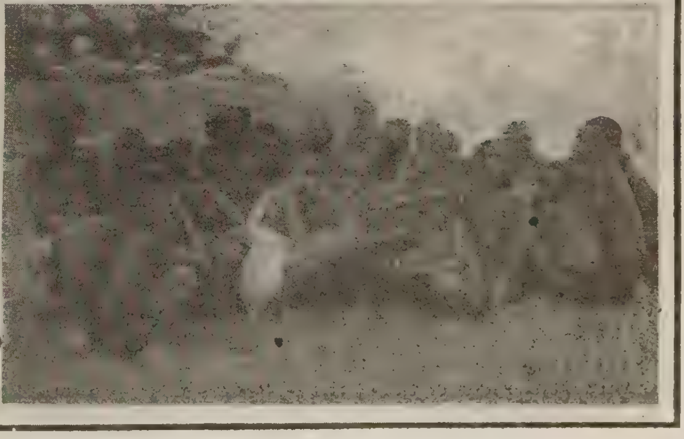
Excerpt from an address of Rev. A. M. Bailey, missionary of the South Africa General Mission, delivered at The Moody Bible Institute to the Student Volunteer Band. Mr. Bailey is a pioneer missionary, and has been known as the American Livingstone.

I think you will all agree with me that the first and fundamental reason why we should go to Africa or any other evangelistic field with the gospel of Jesus Christ is the obligation we owe to our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. If you go for the humanitarian motive, to do good to the Africans, you are likely to be, in a sense, a failure.



Many hundred thousands like these, left so long without the gospel, now, humanly speaking, impossible to win.

Who is to blame?



Many hundred thousands like these may be reached, and won for Him in their youth.

Who will help win them?

Africa a Prison-House

The work of the missionary in Africa is to liberate the people of that continent from that dark, cold, hideous, hellish prison-house, which is their religion, which has encrusted itself over them, which is cursing and blighting and dooming and destroying those light-hearted, intelligent people of Africa. Scores of millions of them are yet closed in that dark, cold prison-house of fear. Their whole system is a system of fear which leads them into the most hellish things. When you hear of witch burnings remember that the ordinary African is a kindly, tenderhearted, sympathetic man, but that he is tied and bound by that system that leads into these hellish things.

In 1912 I saw beside the field a pole with a woman's head on it and at the base of the pole a heap of bones. I asked one of my boys to tell what had happened. I knew, but wanted him to explain it. He said that this woman had been accused of witchcraft. This woman was accused of having caused the death of some one and she had been captured and had been decided upon as the guilty party, and so had been bound and burned. Her hands had been cut off first, then her head, and then her body burned. They enlist the powers of the spirits, by which power they think they have the right to take the life of a person or put some awful disease upon him.

Africans Foredoomed

My people are not foreordained so much as they are foredoomed. How my heart yearns for the boyhood of Africa, with all the possibilities that any boyhood has in all the world, and yet foredoomed by that system under which it is hopeless unless the gospel of Jesus Christ is brought there. They grow up into young manhood, magnificent fellows physically. How my heart has been thrilled as I have walked with them from day to day, and week to week, sometimes 1,200 miles on the stretch, and watched their magnificent muscles and the wonderful beauty of their bodies. I have had those boys in my school and have seen them grow and develop and become Christians. They do not have a chance to be men because they are in that awful prison-house, and we have not gone to get them out!

Beautiful Young Womanhood

Then there is the young womanhood of Africa, the bright, beautiful girls. Their standard of beauty may not be the same as yours, but we who are accustomed to them think they are beautiful. If you call them negroes you are making a mistake. They are not negroes and they are not black. North of the equator they are negroes, and some are extremely black, but my people are brown, varying in shades. Those bright, beautiful girls, with nearly all the possibilities that other girls have, and yet their portion, with all their beauty and intelligence is in that horrible prison-house, doomed from their birth unless the gospel of Jesus Christ gets to them! They are being blighted, doomed, destroyed, without a ray of hope. A girl grows up to be a drudge and a slave, perhaps to an old man that she cannot love, and who has other wives. And then all the time there is that system of animism, that awful fear. They never can do anything without the idea of the spirits of their ancestors, whom they may have forgotten to do something for, following and following and following them. Many of the women are killed by burning. I have liberated two who were doomed by the witch doctor and were waiting execution. An old chief, who was one of the men who was prosecuting, who had doomed one of these women, said, "We roast them," aad he was not such a bad sort, but it is their religion. The old witch doctor usually discovers that the pay is not sufficient to make his plans work and they bring him another ox or gun or something. He gambles away the life of some poor old woman whom he thinks is likely the most helpless victim of his system. They tie the woman to a pole and then two men take the ends of the pole and carry this woman over the fire and plunge her body into the fire and she gives up her life there. They love their people, they are interested in them, and they do good one to another, but this is their religion.

I hope you will see that prison-house in which my people are imprisoned, in which they are blighted and cursed and doomed for time and eternity simply because you and I were so slow in going to them to preach the simple gospel of Jesus Christ.

A Moody Student

One of your own Moody Institute boys is over there preaching the gospel. I wish you had seen him when he came in last February. He had not had the use of his razor for two or three days. He came to fulfil his Lord's last command. He had a hard time with the language, but it brought joy to my heart a few weeks ago when he supplied for another man. One of them said to me, "Our pastor had a sickness in the throat and this man preached, stood up and preached in our language, and he preached as you preach."

Oh, if you could see their tears and hear their pleadings—they come every day pleading for the gospel. We do not need to beg them to listen to the gospel. One tribe sent three of their young men hundreds of miles to get the gospel. They are pleading for the gospel everywhere in Africa.

The people here in the home churches have had no vision of the need of heathendom and the tender yearning of the heart of Christ, who is saying, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." The vision of this has grown dim and many of the churches have turned aside to a man-made gospel, which is no gospel, and because there has been no vision and no responsibility my people in Africa are dying!

TALK MISSIONS

Twenty years ago or more a great soap manufacturing firm in England decided to cut down its advertising. The firm's name was a household word and the manager believed that, advertising or not advertising, the sales would maintain their high level. The advertising was curtailed and the sales immediately began to drop. At the end of a year the firm was advertising more than ever, engaged in the stiff job of trying to regain lost trade. To sell soap they had to "talk soap."

It is the same in the Kingdom of God. If the church were suddenly to stop talking about missions (alas! how many churches have already stopped, or have never begun), missionary interest would die in a few years except in the hearts of an awakened few. People are not born with missionary interest. Most people do not even seek it. Such interest must be thrust upon them. The time to begin to talk missions is in the springtime of life.

If the thoughts of the young people of our churches can be turned upon evangelizing the world, we shall train up a generation of missionary-minded men and women who will give not only their substance but also themselves to Christ's cause in other lands.—Selected.

A BLIND KOREAN FINDING THE LIGHT

A blind sorcerer who was convicted of sin on hearing street preaching, renounced his lucrative business, and Sunday after Sunday groped his way fifteen li to attend church.

To learn the Bible he cut up Standard Oil tin cans into 5,000 small squares with a hole through each. These he threaded on a string, making indentations in different corners to indicate various letters of the Korean alphabet. The final consonants he indicated by 2,000 pieces of wood of varying shapes. His plan was to have a friend read out of John's Gospel while he formed sentence after sentence by threading his tin and wooden squares on a string. Then by running his fingers over the crude types, he committed to memory the first six chapters. Later he heard from church members about Mrs. Samuel Moffat's school for the blind at Peng Yang, and groped his way thither 300 miles on foot. In a month he had learned to read by the New York point system. He thinks that in three years he will have memorized the whole of the New Testament. Now he is at work among the hundreds of blind Korean sorcerers.—The Herald of Light.

INVASION OF CHINA BY AMERICAN BREWERS

Indignation is expressed by the press of China at the reported decision of American brewers to exploit its country. A special cablegram to The Chicago Tribune is to this effect: "We have no desire to drive out the opium fiend only to usher in the drunken sot. Apparently the brewers think they must educate the Chinese to the delights of western bacchanalianism. Why do not the westerners come to teach us better manners than indulging in opium, cigarets and intoxicants?" —Alliance Press Agency, London.

A Chinese official made the following testimony to the work of the missionaries:

"Marvelous how in the course of a few years these tribes, Miao and others among whom you work, who formerly knew nothing but how to plant a bit of maize or buckwheat on the hillsides, have been transformed, civilized and uplifted! We Chinese lived side by side with them for hundreds of years and could not do anything with or for them."

"Ah," the missionary thought, "not a dead Confucius but a living Christ has lifted up these poor people."

A young lady said to her friend, "I cannot get interested in missions!"

"No," replied her friend, "you can hardly expect to. It is just like getting interest in a bank. You have to put something in before you get any interest. And the more you put in—time, money, prayer—the more the interest grows."—Selected.

HOW MUCH SHALL I GIVE THIS YEAR TO MISSIONS?

A Little Argument with Myself

1. If I refuse to give anything to missions this year, I practically cast a ballot in favor of the recall of every missionary, both in the home and foreign fields.

2. If I give less than heretofore, I favor a reduction of the missionary forces proportionate to my reduced contribution.

3. If I give the same as formerly, I favor holding the ground already won, but I disregard any forward movement. My song is, "Hold the Fort!" forgetting that the Lord never intended that His army should take refuge in a fort. All of His soldiers are under marching orders always. They are commanded to "Go."

4. If I advance my offering beyond former years, then I favor an advance movement in the conquest of new territory for Christ. Shall I not join this class?

IMPORTANCE OF PUBLIC WORSHIP

Hebrews 10:25

I. The Admonition Given. "Not forsaking the assembling."
   1. A Christian Duty. Old Testament saints, the disciples, and early church assembled together.
   2. Some, who profess attachment to Christ's cause, neglect this duty. "As the manner of some is." Bad example to unbelievers.
   3. The importance of not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together.
      (1) On God's account, who demands and deserves our service.
      (2) On the church's account, to strengthen her energies.
      (3) On our own account, for comfort and blessing to be gained.

II. A Specific Duty Stated. "But exhorting one another."
   1. To watchfulness and vigilance.
   2. To determination and constancy.
   3. To zeal and diligence.
   4. To courage and perseverance.

III. Supplies a Powerful Motive. "As ye see the day approaching."
   1. The day approaching.
   2. A momentous day. No throne of grace or preached gospel beyond.
   3. The believer sees it spproaching. Watches, believes, and lives with it before him.

—J. Burns.

"WHATSOEVER"

"Whosoever" is the word for the sinner, and "whatsoever" is the message for the saint.

1. The Whatsoever of Prayer. "That whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name" (John 15:16). There are three things of moment to be recognized before the "whatsoever" can be claimed. The first is, the "that" of Fruitfulness. There must not only be the "fruit" of union, the "more fruit" of cleansing and the "much fruit" of discipleship, but also the abiding fruit of fidelity (John 15:2, 8, 15). Second, the "in My name" of Fellowship. To "ask" in the name of Christ means more than mentioning His name, or recognizing His merit; it means to pray as He would pray. His name stands for His nature, therefore to "ask in His name" means to be in unison with Him; in a word, to pray as He would pray. Third, the "ask" of Friendship. The significance of the word "ask" has wrapped up in it the privilege of a request by a friend, and not the plea of a beggar.

2. The Whatsoever of Practice. "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it" (John 5:2). No compromise of half-heartedness, no hesitation of cowardice, no plea of infirmity, no will of opposition, no fear of consequences, no halting of lameness, no holding back of doubt, and no reasoning of self; but whole-hearted obedience.

3. The Whatsoever of Principle. "Whatsoever ye do, work from the soul (R. V., mar.) as unto the Lord" (Col. 3:22). Two things are of paramount importance here. First, doing all as "unto the Lord." Here is the law of divine principle, not doing that others may appreciate, not doing that self may be pleased, not doing because of remuneration, not doing that impressions may be made; but "unto the Lord"—to please Him. When things are done to the Lord, His claims are recognized, His love sways, His Word operates, His will is done, His blessing is sought, His truth guides, and His glory is enhanced. The second thing to recognize is, to do "from the soul." We often speak of "putting our soul into a task," and we often say of a thing that is done in a listless fashion, "There was no soul in it." That which costs us little is little worth.

4. The Whatsoever of Purpose. "Whatsoever ye do do all to the glory of God." (1 Cor. 10:31). One of the crying evils of today is that too many Christian workers take the things of God for the glory of self, and this is one of the greatest sins we can possibly commit. Too often we get on the secondary lines of convenience and compromise, instead of being swayed by ardent love to Christ.—F. E. Marsh.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON PREACHING

Preaching is testifying, not philosophizing. Testifying is telling what a man knows. Philosophizing is telling what a man thinks he knows or tries to know. This latter definition is not taken from Webster, but we will allow the reader to decide as to its correctness when applied to the word as it is used in this discussion.

Stripped of all technical homiletical verbiage, 1 John 1:1-3, gives us a condensed statement of the nature of gospel preaching.

"That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the word of life; (For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and shew unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us;) that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

No man who has not gone through all these fundamental experiences has a right to set up himself as a religious teacher or a preacher of the gospel. We all know how much weight "hearsay" testimony has in our civil courts, and the preaching of a man who has not been called of God to preach the gospel, and who does not possess a radical, experimental knowledge of salvation, has about as much effect in turning people from sin to righteousness, and from Satan to God. When a man proclaims that which he has "seen, and heard, and handled," there is depth of conviction which will almost inevitably be communicated to the hearer. There is a mystical spiritual power which will cause spiritual adversaries to quail. There is a sense of genuineness which will disarm carping criticism. The preaching may not convert all who hear it, but every hearer must in his heart confess "that the kingdom of God has come nigh to him," and if he does not enter into it, he can keep going on in his old ways only by deliberately shutting his eyes to the light, and the man who has delivered the message can fearlessly declare before high heaven: "I am free from the blood of all men." It is absolutely vain for some worldly, wealthy member or official in a church to undertake to dictate to a minister who proclaims what he has "seen, heard, and handled," as to what he is to preach. To the preacher, aflame with a consciousness of a divine call and of divine cooperation, the biggest worldling is as much of a menace as is a tiny ant, nibbling at its base, to a cloud-piercing mountain. Imagine a Paul or a Stephen toning down his preaching at the behest of some officious, worldly member of his congregation!—The Evangelical.

HOW PREACHERS MAY KEEP YOUNG

Many a preacher grows old prematurely in habits and feelings, and then wonders that churches count him old so early. I have trod that high and lonesome way a bit myself, and then stepped aside to watch how others pass by. And in pity for the youth, and for the churches, and especially for the preachers, I make this appeal with suggestions.

There are three lines of effort by which you can keep ever young till your body fails you: resolution, study, love; but the greatest of these is love. After careful reflection upon the subject, resolve upon your knees that you will not grow old too soon. In study, avoid selfish revelings on lines of thought that buoyant, busy, vigorous people will not care to hear. Never forget that you have given yourself to be their servant for Jesus' sake. This will restrain and guide you to an extent in your study. Be careful to cultivate habits and manners that are fresh and bright.

But love is the filling and thrilling power that spreads its spell over all alike. Children and youth are quickest and keenest in detecting the lack of this, as also in responding to it. And, as they are usually the most important element in the church, the pastor should love them, and make this love felt without fail.

Words and actions both are needed in this sublimest of social activities. Some affectionate attention to them in the homes will always strengthen your influence with them, and please the parents more than a lot of pious counsel.

THE FACE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST

Tradition says that our Lord never smiled, but this must be a tradition without a foundation. We cannot conceive of Jesus as a smileless ideal for His followers. Even if impetuous Peter did not call forth an occasional smile from our Lord, surely Christ smiled as He welcomed to His loving arms the "little children" whom His disciples would not at first suffer to come unto Him. Although it may not be expressly stated that Jesus smiled, yet God's Word furnishes many instructive and helpful truths about His blessed face, or, as the Old Testament frequently expresses it, countenance.

THE FACE OF JESUS

1. A strong face. "He steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." Luke 9:51.
2. A bowed face. "And fell on his face." Matt. 26:39.
3. An insulted face. "Then did they spit in his face." Matt. 26:67.
4. A covered face. "And to cover his face." Mark 14:65.
5. A struck face. "They struck him on the face." Luke 22:64.
6. A shining face. "His face did shine as the sun." Matt. 17:2.
7. A glorious face. "Glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 2 Cor. 4:6.
8. An awe-inspiring face. "Hide us from the face of him." Rev. 6:16; 20:11.
9. A gladdening face. "And they shall see his face." Rev. 22:4.

THE COUNTENANCE OF OUR LORD

10. The grace of His countenance. "The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee and give thee peace." Num. 6:26.
11. The reflection of His countenance "Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us." Ps. 4:6.
12. The joy of His countenance. "Thou hast made him exceeding glad with thy countenance." Ps. 21:6.
13. The saving of His countenance. "For the help of his countenance." Ps. 42:5, 11.
14. The renewing of His countenance. "Who is the health of my countenance and my God." Ps. 43:5.
15. The power of His countenance. "Neither did their arm save them........but the light of thy countenance." Ps. 44:3.
16. The place for the believer to walk in. "They shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance." Ps. 89:15.
17. The discernment of His countenance. "Thou hast set our secret sins in the light of thy countenance." Ps. 90:8.

That glory which shone in the face of the Master shall illumine the faces of Christians so long as they obediently walk in the light of His countenance. "Ye were once darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord." Such Christians must, in natural obedience to an obvious law, shine as lights in this world (Phil. 2:15); for they are the proceeding splendor from Christ the inherent splendor: "Christ in you." (Col. 1:27.) A spiritual face is an index of a spiritual soul. The religion of Jesus Christ is internal as well as external in its character and influences. A Christ-like soul produces a Christ-like life and countenance—the one inseparable from the other; and both witnesses of and to our Lord's glory.

Mr. and Mrs. Dibble have been working for several months in the South. Many young people are planning on entering The Moody Bible Institute as a result of their meetings.

E. De Witt Johnston and party have just closed a community revival of twelve churches, at Brounsville, Ont. There were over one thousand conversions and reconsecrations. The meetings were held in a large tabernacle. As a result of the campaign old feuds were wiped out, family altars set up, and the wickedest men in the whole community converted to Christ. Prof. S. Graham Fraser had charge of the chorus. These workers are now in a promising union campaign at Tupperville, Ont.

J. H. Eckford, personnel and placement secretary for the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., commends very highly the work of Harry E. Mr. Storrs is to be associated with Mr. Hamilton the coming season.

During July and August 23,000 of the boys used our hut; sixteen religious meetings were held; total attendance was over 1,900; 365 cards were signed for rededication; there were 185 definite decisions for Christ; 415 Testaments were given away, 1,370 tracts were distributed and we had 145 personal interviews."

This is a series of fifty-two five-minute sermons on themes of sure interest to the children, presented in an exceptionally interesting manner, with a wealth of illustration fitly chosen from high sources, and employed in such wise fashion as indicates a great love and appreciation of child life on the part of the preacher. It is the production of one who has given thought to the concrete, human-nature aspects of child life, as well as to the technical aspects of child psychology. The purpose is practical and ethical, and, insofar, spiritual; and there is no fear that religion in the child will have morbid effects, as is asserted by certain child life specialists.

A simple, positive declaration, suited to child life, of Jesus of Nazareth as Saviour of the world would have given greater completeness to these addresses, even if not more frequently made than once a month.

A Cyclopedia of Twentieth Century Quotations, by Amos R. Wells.

Readers will welcome such a valuable book as this from the pen of the cultured and versatile editor of The Christian Endeavor World. The illustrations have been gathered from varied sources, from the reading and the observations of the author during recent years, from "newly discovered facts of nature and the marvelous inventions" of the present age, from daily papers and from the doings and words of people with whom the author has come into contact. It is his hope that they will be of service to preachers and other Christian workers.

They are not mere illustrations, for many of them convey positive information, both fresh and valuable, while others, in the form of parables, convey the homely wisdom for which their scholarly author is noted. There are in all nine hundred illustrations and parables under nearly four hundred topical heads, in alphabetical order, and thoroughly indexed.

Point and Purpose in Preaching, by Elijah P. Brown.

Were one to attempt a comprehensive review of this remarkably informing and stimulating book, it would require mention of good things on nearly every page. Its superb features may be seen in the several chapter heads: Practical Points, Why We Miss the Bull's Eye, Canes and Crutches, Sermon Preparation, The Preacher's Barrel, Why Some Ministers Fail, Why Some Ministers Succeed, and An Old Testament Preacher. The author, "Ram's Horn Brown," assures us that whatever the sources of the material in this book, "all has passed through the alembic of personal experience." And surely so, as the former readers of the Ram's Horn discover, for there is to be found the usual extraordinary wit, wisdom and irony of this man of God. The wealth of material and illustration is beyond praise, a veritable mine of information, suggestion, inspiration and common sense; just such a fund of good things as to help the minister over many hard places. No minister can be, or do, the same after an acquaintance with this superb volume of homely homiletical and pastoral wisdom. The ideals are, a born-again, God-called, God-inspired, properly prepared, proportionately-dignified and Word-preaching preacher.

Alcohol and the Human Race, by Richmond Pearson Hobson.

After ten years of extensive investigation, this statesman and humanitarian gives to the public his mature conclusions as to the alcoholic drink traffic. The book is thoroughly scientific. It refutes every support the traffic has had for thousands of years. By a citation of numerous eminent medical and other scholarly authorities alcohol is shown to be a poison of all life; a habit-forming drug, deceptive and enslaving; a specific cause of degeneracy; an active principle of death for body, mind and soul, and of degeneracy and ultimate sterility in the drinker's progeny; a producer of disastrous results in every period of life, including the prenatal. Its damning effects begin in the highest centers, the brain, the reason, the moral and spiritual faculties and curse everything in a downward trend, becoming more and more brutish as they proceed.

What it is to the individual, it also is to society, nations and international relations. It has been the curse of civilization, making man an easy prey to disease, selfishness, political corruption, immorality and crime; the fundamental cause of the downfall of nearly every nation; the gravest danger to the nations now, and to the end, even to America. Its only cure is prohibition, preceded and followed by education, together with an appeal to all that is best in humanity. Eternal vigilance alone will hold it at bay.

Heirs Together, by Marshall Broomhall, M. A.

An appreciation, by a devoted son, of his parents, Benjamin Broomhall and Amelia Hudson Broomhall, sister of J. Hudson Taylor, founder of the China Inland Mission, not offered as a complete biography of these noble parents, "but merely to give insight into their personal characters, and to reveal in part the secret of their fruitful ministry." Both became Christians early in life; and they were the inspiration of each other through a considerable period of courtship and more than fifty years of married life. The correspondence of the lovers breathes the very atmosphere of the Lord. Their married life was characterized by sweet devotion; and their family of four sons and six daughters showed the influence of their blessed parents.

Benjamin Broomhall was a business man and local preacher whose work came to a climax in the secretaryship of the China Inland Mission for Great Britain, and in founding The Christian Union, organized as a protest against England's nefarious part in the opium tragedy of China. He was an author, editor, friend of England's great ones, humanitarian and all-around Christian worker, who achieved his work almost entirely apart from the public gaze. Amelia Hudson Broomhall was a supreme wife and mother, the nearly perfect complement of her husband, happy in rearing her children, some to very eminent service, and ever comforted in the hope of her Lord's return. A fine book of inspiration for Christians and homemakers.

Spirits of Just Men Made Perfect, A Study of the Intermediate State, by Rev. John Elliott Wishart, D. D.

The first question is: "Does the soul live on in intelligent conscious existence?" This question is answered in a way to give assurance to the many who are concerned about the state of their dead, and their own state after death. There are the strongest presumptions in favor of continued conscious existence, arrived at by inference from certain of the Scriptures, from certain conclusions of science and from the social nature of God and his Son, involving fellowship with God, and a fellowship of souls that centers in Christ. These inferences justify the contention against soul-sleeping, purgatory and the preaching to those in prison during the time that the Lord was in the tomb. It is held that at death there is a crisis in the soul's existence, with "crystallization in character;" that in the intermediate state there are rewards and punishments, heavenly activity and genuine progress; that there are supreme social relations; that there is knowledge of earthly friends and affairs, posited on the fact of the persistence of memory.

This is a brief study of the intermediate state, but is so thoroughly well done as to be far superior to the desultory discussions in other attempts on the same subject. It is in such harmony with the general belief of the church as to merit the closest perusal of anxious and interested ones, and of those who teach and comfort the people from the sacred desk.

A clear statement as to the Kingdom age would have obviated confusion as to judgment and as to the distinction between the lot of the spirits of just men made perfect in the intermediate state and their lot in the period of the Lord's glorious reign.

The Unrecognized Christ, by Rev. John Gardner, D. D.

This volume of sermons by the pastor of the New England Congregational Church, Chicago, Ill., takes its title from the theme of the first sermon. They constitute a series of discourses delivered extemporaneously at Northfield; and they now appear, at the earnest suggestion of friends, in printed form. One could hardly speak in too great praise of these remarkable addresses—remarkable for timeliness, form, matter and object. The Christ is presented as a real man, the aspect of his personality which is so feebly recognized, and surely of far less recognition than His deity. He was a real man in all of His redemptive work. The adequacy for the task depended upon the character of the Son of Man; and He discharged the redemptive office in the face of hardships, trials, criticisms and sufferings, such as fill us with amazement.

The sermons are wrought out with the finest choice of material, the deepest spiritual insight and well nigh perfect homiletic form. And, withal, there is a wealth of illustration drawn from the ripe experiences of the preacher, and other sources, and employed in such masterly way as to rivet one's thought and arouse one's highest resolve. One rejoices in times like these to find such loyalty to the gospel of our crucified

Lord. The wealth of theme is seen in the several sermon titles, as follows: The Unrecognized Christ, The Transfigured Christ, The Anointed Christ, The Rejected Christ, The Crucified Christ, The Vindicated Christ, Lacking Is What? and The Strong Man's Glorying. Here are superb models for the young preacher, indeed for any preacher, in this masterly presentation of the superiority of Christ to the social service expedients offered by many for "the healing of the nations."

Reunion in Eternity, by Sir W. Robertson Nicoll, M. A. LL. D.

The bereavements incident to the cruel war and the ever present sorrows for the dead make welcome this volume from the pen of such a scholarly gentleman and clergyman. He depends entirely upon the teachings of the New Testament, and tells us that the subject concerns those alone who are in Christ. "All the hope of the world is built upon the empty tomb." There is no sure foundation except in the risen Christ. Reunion rests upon the permanence of personality, personal identity and memory. And there will be more to know and more to love in the next life. We do not pass, at death, into the final form of blessedness, but "when Christ shall come again."

Men who have renounced Christianity have built their hope of reunion upon the love of God, as have many who are not Christians. A personal God of love, and the persistent individuality, properly understood and fortified, bids defiance to the denial of the doctrine of recognition and reunion in eternity. To the maintenance of this faith and hope the resurrection is a prime necessity. The doctrine of Christian redemption could not long survive the removal of this foundation. But the love of Christ guarantees that our friends "without us shall not be made perfect." Also the period between bereavement and reunion is in the keeping of the Christ of love; and it behooves men heartily to accept the will of God for themselves in life and death. By way of confirmation Tennyson's "In Memoriam" and Dante's "Divine Comedy" are studied. In Part II the testimonies of persons of varied beliefs and of persons in the several family and social relations of life are cited, including the hopes of many of the world's great and good. This is followed by miscellaneous testimonies from history, literature, and by an appendix embracing studies in the Old Testament, The Classical World, The Church of Rome and Mysticism.

A Picture of the Resurrection, An Exposition of the Fifteenth Chapter of First Corinthians, by Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., Dean of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

The first letter to the Corinthians, fifteenth chapter, was written to still the questionings of some in the young church at Corinth, as to the resurrection of the body. Paul proves the resurrection as an historic fact by the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament; and thus follows the method of presenting the living Word of the living God to the soul. Thus there arises an appreciation of its confirmation in other ways. The witness was practically contemporaneous with the event and such testimony emboldened the apostle to make the resurrection his inspiration and hope in his continuous proclamation of the Gospel. By revelation he knew that Christ was the first-fruits of them that slept, both the righteous and wicked, both classes to receive the things done in the body at their respective resurrections.

The resurrection is in three orders or divisions. The first has already appeared in the person of Jesus Christ risen from the dead; the second will be of the righteous, and the third of the wicked, dead. As to the kind of body Paul makes use of a threefold analogy from nature embracing verses 36-38. The venomous beast of death is swallowed up in victory; and this victory is God's gift to the saints. For the full assurance of the reward for our labors we must be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

One finds in this "picture" the same fine simplicity that characterizes all of the author's work in print and on the platform; the same, sane, synthetic method that has been blessed in the inspiration of thousands who have come into contact with this master teacher; the same spiritual insight so finely exhibited in other of his expository writings.

Higher Living, by Smith Baker, M. D.

Splendidly fitted is this physician of unusual attainments and many years' experience to achieve the climax of his literary work in the book under review. In setting forth the ideal life—higher living—he draws upon his wide acquaintance with literature; science; general, genetic and social psychology; child life; ethics; eugenics; business and the many sides of modern life. His delineation of ideal child life and ideal eugenics in relation to higher living is of the most exceptional character. Scarcely inferior is the volume in other particulars. "Higher living, the life of permanent and progressive betterment is in the best developed bodies coupled with the most perfect minds and the most loving and helpful hearts, as these are even now possible in this present world of nature and of art." Dependence must be had upon "accurate science and common sense." One needs to "actively energize oneself in the direction of health, happiness and prosperity," ever in line with the great "Selective Energy." The ideal man is Jesus Christ.

This is a study of the whole of life for higher living, emphasizing the phases and experiences of child life, adolescence, young manhood and womanhood, married life, business and professional life, the untoward aspects of life in relation to sickness and death, all of which is but a preface to the after glorious hope, an experience of greater, higher and completer growth and development.

With the theological features of the book issue must be taken, and hardly less so, with its theory as to divorce. Jesus Christ is more than a man who has developed into divinity. He is the Son of God. We need no expurgated Bible; nor is it obsolete in some of its parts when rightly interpreted; it is more than a work of ethics and religion. In the Kingdom age the immortal soul will inhabit an immortal body, and forever thereafter. There is need of the resurrection. More than science and common sense are required for the ideal life. Nothing less than Jesus Christ crucified, the Saviour and the Light and Life of the world can suffice. The world's optimism is in Him alone.

World-peace has come. "But the fight against wrong has just begun." The Christian citizen is facing a new world order, and he must apply the same energy and organization against the foe of the home camp as in the recent war. For this America must clean house and stay clean to retain her moral and religious leadership among the nations.

In order to meet this new world order the supremacy of the authority of Jesus must be recognized and accepted. He will wrest the dominion of the world from Satan by the way of the cross. The Kaiser in the issue with Christ went down, but we still have a pagan state, a Godless state. The issue and logic are clear. "We must as a people face the fact of Christ, the present lordship and leadership of Christ in public and private life." The new citizenship demands the union of Christ and the citizen in the citizen's duty to the state. The racial aspect demands the passing of traditional race prejudice and national jealousy, which will pass under the melting power of the cross, with the result that there will obtain a recognition of the brotherhood of the race, the fatherhood of God, and a world Christian citizenship.

Democracy's day of opportunity depends upon the people whose worthiness to be free depends upon the rule of conscience and intelligence. Also mercy and truth, and righteousness and peace must be made consonant with each other in public life, as in private life. Christ's estimate of the worth of a soul must be accepted, and also the theory that a nation is worth to the world what it is willing to do for the world. All of this means a high evaluation of the citizenship of woman; of children, the true national wealth; of the enlightenment of the masses; of what was gained under great national leaders; of impartial justice for all; of equality in religion, politics and economic opportunity; of order over against crime, political corruption, community tyranny, and sordid national aggrandizement; of patriotism in time of peace as in war, over against a wicked pacifism, all based upon the highest moral and spiritual values. Democracy is on trial in the hour of triumph and there must be patient and persevering work for the new social order of personal, social, national and world righteousness, and a league of nations in some form. And who does not long for the ideals of peace and righteousness? They are certain of achievement in the personal reign of the Prince of Peace and King of Righteousness, not under any other conditions.

This book by the Professor of New Testament Science in the Reformed Theological Seminary at Lancaster, Pa., is in two parts: The Realization of the Kingdom of God and The Duty of the individual and of the Congregation in the Realization of the Kingdom of God. "The Kingdom of God is the ideal which is ever hovering over us as the goal toward which we are moving, and which it becomes us to do our utmost to realize." So it has come and is coming all the while. The Kingdom of God as an ideal and the Kingdom of God as a reality, the infinite and the finite, are ever approaching each other, but will never meet. It will be brought in when men, as individuals, and nations, in their international relations, are taught to conduct things on the basis of self-denying love.

The ideal of social service is the achievement of the Kingdom as a reality. The paganism of Romans 1:28-32 still obtains in both the heathen and Christian lands. Its chief end is food and drink and the things of the world. There is somewhat that is Christian, but the pagan is seen in the many forms of immorality, social and economic injustice, the exploitation of women and children in labor, profiteering, the unconcern of the rich for the poor, sordid national ambitions and unsocial international relations. The solution is in social betterment and the moral and spiritual quickening of the individual. To achieve the Kingdom of God as an ideal the human and the divine must co-operate. The human functions, however, only as the divine works in and through the church. In the call to service Christian character is the primal consideration. Each one is supreme in a sphere of influence in which he needs show the power of Christ through his life. Also the prophetic function of the church must not be omitted. There must be a voice against wrong and sin; and emphasis must be placed on the social gospel, first the law of love and then social and economic righteousness, and the same self-sacrificing interest on the part of the church as of the individual.

It is indeed refreshing to find the author of this book so frankly loyal to Christ and His gospel, and so insistent as to the certain need of individual Christian character for social service. The acceptance of the third view of the Kingdom, in his introduction, would have logically necessitated a discussion of his theme and an interpretation of the Scriptures, relative to the Kingdom, more to the enlightenment and blessing of the readers. It is, however, an admirable and very interesting study of present problems.

The New World Order, by Rev. Samuel Zane Batten, D. D.

This book, written by the social expert of the Northern Baptist Convention is one of many inspired by the recent war. It does not pretend to be an exhaustive study, but aims rather to set forth the kind of world order needed, or wanted, the principles and ideals that should guide in planning for it, the immediate considerations in the efforts of men and society and the ultimate ends in the efforts at social reconstruction. It attempts, further, to suggest the forces and factors necessary to the reconstruction in national and international relations. In this transitive period, fraught with tremendous possibilities, "in the revealing fires of judgment the world is gaining a new vision." "We are coming to see," the author affirms, "that the Kingdom of God in Christ's conception never means anything less than a righteous human society on earth." The recent war was a tragic fact, but it was only an incident in the age-long struggle toward justice, truth and the Kingdom of God. The defects revealed are false ideals, false principles, false methods, false organizations. The real struggle is psychological and must be fought out in our own hearts and minds and wills. For social progress, at bottom, is a moral and spiritual matter and depends upon the rank and file of the people. But in America there is admitted indifference, blindness as to issues and unconcern for the future.

The church is the recognized teacher and guide of men and nations; and the demand of the nations is the church's opportunity. To meet the challenge, the church must give men the vision of God; must teach men how to seek the Kingdom of God; must create in men a Christian state of mind; must awaken a social conscience; must lead men in the thorough reconstruction of the social order; must develop in men a spirit of faith in the Kingdom and its coming; must find some way of expressing their common life and of co-operating for the Kingdom of God. The task is set forth in the chapters on the Rebuilding of the Community, The Democratization of Industry, The Socialization of the Nation and The Reconstruction of International Life.

The discussion is thoroughly rich in suggestive as well as factual material, and is in splendid form for the popular reader. But one finds the usual fundamental misconceptions of this type of literature. Evil does lie deep in human nature, as the author says, but only the Christ can eradicate it. None but the Christ will ever bring in the Kingdom—the Kingdom of Heaven—with satisfaction for all the longings of the human heart. And it is the church's business to evangelize the nations. The gospel and not modernism will be in the final count. The program for the church—God's program—is first, worship, obedience to God, then evangelism and then, social service.

The pastor and elders of the Buena Memorial Presbyterian Church, of this city, Rev. Henry Hepburn, D. D., pastor, have sent a letter to President Wilson, asking him to give Miss Jennie V. Hughes, a missionary from China, an opportunity of showing the present attitude of China towards the Christian religion, education and social conditions to him and members of the national Government. The President is asked to note particularly the danger of the brewers of America going into China, and transferring the business that they have lost in this country to that country.

The President of China has recently said:

"The instruction concerning all virtue, as contained in the Holy Scriptures of the religion of Jesus, has truly exerted an unlimited influence for good among all Christians in China, and has also raised the standard of all my people along lines of true progress. I earnestly hope that the future benefits derived from the Holy Scriptures will extend to the ends of the earth and transcend the success of the past."

PROFESSOR E. O. SELLERS GOES TO NEW ORLEANS

Professor E. O. Sellers, after a strenuous and fruitful service in France and Germany, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., has returned to this country to take up an engagement as Director of Music and Sunday-school work in the Baptist Bible Institute of New Orleans, La.

This is a recently organized work, fostered, supported and directed by the Southern Baptist Convention, on whose faculty, as teacher of The English Bible, is another former student of the Moody Bible Institute, the Rev. William E. Denham, '08. Mr. Denham after leaving The Institute took the course at the Louisville Baptist Theological Seminary. We improve this opportunity also to state that Mrs. Denham (formerly Miss Myrtle Lane) is a former student of the Institute. Mrs. Gough, Superintendent of Women of the New Orleans Institute, was our guest during the last Summer Term, and left pleasant memories behind her.

There are many regrets at the departure from us of the sunny face and buoyant spirit of Mr. Sellers, who was a student in '97. After successful work in the Y. M. C. A. and in the evangelistic field as a gospel singer with Dr. Torrey, he became a member of the faculty of our Music Course, and later served as Director of our Evening Classes and Acting Director of our Sunday-school Course.

He was always an enthusiastic Sunday-school man, whose popularity on the public platform greatly extended his influence throughout the country, while his work as Director of the Evening Classes, built upon the foundation of his predecessor, the Rev. John H. Hunter, now of Los Angeles, did much to lift that department of our activities to the plane from which it has now been extended through the leadership of Mr. Ketchum to dimensions which to some had seemed impossible.

Mr. Sellers had been absent from the Institute in war work for about eighteen months, and all were expecting him to return here, but the call to New Orleans was an attractive one, offering initiative and variety of service of such a character as to lead our Trustees to feel themselves not at liberty to stand in the way of his going.

The loss of Mrs. Sellers from the work of the Married Women's Guild is greatly regretted, but it is hoped that the interest she has taken in it and the experience she has gained may be transferred and be of rich benefit to the new work in which she will be united with her husband.

We wish them both Godspeed, and will never cease to remember them with gratitude and appreciation.

THE GERMAN BAPTIST CONFERENCE

The 19th Triennial Conference of the German Baptist Churches of North America was held in the Auditorium August 26-31.

Three hundred and thirty-one delegates were entertained in the Institute buildings, and two hundred others were cared for at dinner and supper each day. The Conference meeting as it did during our vacation period, made it possible for the Institute to extend this hospitality. With but few exceptions the services were conducted in the German language. The singing was a special feature, noted even by those who could not follow the words. As the strains of the familiar old hymns were heard, a bond of union was established that strengthened as the days passed, and at supper time on Saturday night found expression in the singing together of "Blest be the tie that binds."

The enthusiasm and devotion of the delegates were marked, and the committee in charge expressed their judgment that it was the best Conference they had ever held.

Rev. E. Umbach, the Conference secretary, wrote to Mr. Haavind from Racine, Wis., September 5, as follows:

"My dear Mr. Haavind: It affords me great pleasure to inform you that in the last session of our Triennial Conference the following resolution of thanks was passed by the Conference, and I was requested to transmit it to you and ask you to kindly read it to the Faculty:"

"'Resolved, That we express to The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago our deep appreciation and sincere gratitude for the use of their commodious buildings with commodious appointments, convenient lodgings, and ample provision and delightful fellowship of the common meal. Whether you have entertained angels unawares, we are too modest to say. We realize that we have been entertained by true angels of the Lord.'

"May God bless The Moody Bible Institute and make it a blessing to innumerable thousands in the future, as He surely has done in the past. With kindest regards to you, I am,

"Very sincerely yours."

SUMMER TERM GRADUATION EXERCISES

The Auditorium was filled to its capacity on the evening of Thursday, August 7, for the public graduation exercises of the Summer Term graduating class of eighty-five men and women of the Day Classes and four of the Evening Classes.

Following the Scripture reading and prayer by Rev. E. J. Pace, Mr. Henry P. Crowell, president of the Institute, who presided and awarded the diplomas, introduced the speaker of the evening, Rev. Robert McWatty Russell, D. D., and referred to a similar occasion four years ago when he had welcomed Dr. Russell to the Institute, and expressed his deep regret that he was now leaving.

Dr. Russell's address on "Christian Education, Its Relation to Modern World Life" was, we venture to say, one of the most pertinent, most interesting and most needed messages on the subject that has been voiced in recent times. It will appear in the November issue of The Christian Workers Magazine.

When the diplomas were presented to the graduates, it was announced also that 146 students had received certificates upon completion of courses in the Correspondence Department. They represented thirty-six states of the Union and the following foreign countries: Canada, Cuba, England and West Africa.

The service closed with the benediction by Dr. Gray.

At the class exercises in the forenoon, Mr. Carl Smith, representing the men, gave a ringing testimony to what the two years in the Institute had done for the class. Miss Gertrude Horst spoke for the women, and called attention to a special distinction possessed by this class, in that from it are going a larger number to the foreign field than from any former class—fourteen being already under appointment.

An unexpected and pleasant feature of the program was the gift of a beautifully illuminated passage from the Apostle Paul as a farewell letter from the class to Dr. Russell. In presenting it on behalf of the class, Mr. Howard Ferrin said that though Dr. Russell had taught many classes during his years in the Institute, they felt a peculiar claim upon him, since he had been there to welcome them, and now was leaving with them. Dr. Russell responded happily, expressing especial appreciation that the signatures of the class had been placed upon the letter.

The words of the Class Song, on page 139, are by Frances E. Fritsch, and the music by Birdie C. Loes, both members of the class.

The class music recitals were given on Wednesday morning and Thursday afternoon, the programs including vocal and instrumental selections of varied character which were most acceptably rendered, evidencing painstaking work and careful training.

The reception at 5 o'clock, tendered the class by the Faculty and Business Staff, was given for the first time in Keith Hall, which was attractively arranged and decorated for the occasion.

At the supper which followed, Mr. Harry W. Howard, for the graduates, presented the class picture to the Institute. He referred to the day when they first arrived, "a motley array of young men and women," and spoke of the enrichment that had come to their lives, not only through what had been learned in the lecture room but also through the personal touch with members of the Faculty. Mr. Gosnell, in the absence of Dr. Gray, accepted the gift.

The list of graduates follows:

Fulfill Thy Plan of Life In Me.

Frances E. Fritsch. Birdie C. Loes.

1. O Mas-ter! could it be that Thou Wouldst call so weak an one as I,
2. O Mas-ter! could it be that Thou Wouldst speak thro' one as weak as I,
3. O Mas-ter! I am weak, so weak, Couldst Thou use me, e'en me, in-deed?
4. O Mas-ter! did I hear Thee say That on-ly thus Thou canst use me?
To spread Thy Word in far-off lands, Where souls in hea-then dark-ness die?
To com-fort those who weep and mourn, To soothe the anguished soul's sad cry?
I need Thy strength, my ev-'ry step Will fal-ter, un-less Thou dost lead.
That in my weakness Thou art strong, O Mas-ter, can it tru-ly be?

Then, Mas-ter, take my life, my all, I glad-ly give it now to Thee,
To have, to use, to sanc-ti-fy, Ful-fill Thy plan of life in me.

CHICAGO'S CAR STRIKE AND THE INSTITUTE

The street car strike of the last week in July came very unexpectedly and vehicles of every description were employed to carry people to their places of employment. The two Institute automobiles, otherwise used for open air work, also a machine loaned by the Chicago Hebrew Mission, were pressed into service. A schedule was arranged, and forty-four of the employes were given an auto ride morning and evening, which not only assisted them in reaching the office with little inconvenience, but also made it possible for the work of the Institute to be carried on without hindrance.

An employe, who had been in the service of the Institute only about a month previous to the strike, tells of the experience as follows:

"There may be unhappy memories for some among the great multitude who were affected by the car strike, but not for those of us who were so fortunate as to be members of the Institute Family, for such we indeed felt we were that week, even if we had not been there long enough to have felt so before. The thoughtful provision for our journeys back and forth those three and one-half days will always remain in our memories as a marked evidence of the consideration that is everywhere given us by the Business Staff. The various routes were planned and "stations" arranged most convenient for all. Our car was not once behind schedule time, and how we did enjoy those rides through beautiful Lincoln Park in the coolness of the early mornings!"

As an expression of their appreciation the employees presented the Institute with a contribution of $23.50 to assist in defraying the expenses of running the automobiles.

STUDENT REUNION AT WINONA

An enjoyable reunion was held at Winona Lake Thursday, August 28. The meeting was held on The Hillside and was attended by eighty-seven former students, together with a number of other friends of the Institute. The meeting was in charge of Mr. Gosnell, Assistant Dean, and the music was conducted by Mr. Hammontree of the Extension Department. After brief addresses by Miss Cary, Superintendent of Women, and Mr. White, General Secretary of the Alumni Association, all the former students present spoke briefly. This part of the program was concluded with an address by Mr. Sellers, just returned from overseas and with a prayer by Mrs. William Asher. Later, the photograph shown above was taken and refreshments served.

Sidney E. Harris, '16, writes that he is to begin his pastorate of the Presbyterian church in Oakdale, Neb., early this fall.

Clara Ault, '18, after an unusually eventful journey covering several months, has reached her field in Quessua, Africa.

Martha Switzer, '11, on furlough from Korea, is spending a few weeks at the Institute.

J. Clarence Greene, '12, has taken the temporary pastorate of the Union Gospel Center at Flint, Mich.

Herbert G. Tovey, '14, is now teacher of voice and harmony in the Los Angeles Bible Institute, leaving the Ashland Avenue Baptist Church, Toledo, O., where he was director of music and young people's work. The degree of Bachelor of Music was recently conferred upon Mr. Tovey by the Brandon Conservatory of Music of Virginia.

C. E. Bulander, '19, is now pastor of the Baptist church, St. Clair, Mich.

C. Murray King, '16, conducted a series of open air meetings in Brooklyn, N. Y., during the summer with good results. He asks to be remembered in prayer. His present address is 87 St. Marks St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Othie Sackett, '17, formerly known as Young Kid McCoy, a champion prize fighter, toured the Pacific Coast during the summer months, holding evangelistic services and speaking to large audiences.

E. S. Woodring, '96, called at the Institute in August and September. He is now pastor of the United Evangelical Church at Tamaqua, Pa.

John H. Hunter, '96, of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles (formerly of the M. B. I. Faculty) called on his old friends here in July en route to the Montrose Bible Conference, of which he took charge in the absence of Dr. R. A. Torrey. He was accompanied by Mrs. Hunter, who will be remembered by many former students as matron at the Institute, and their two children.

Frederick T. Schuster, '18, was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Chicago, September 8, and has been called to the pastorate of the Presbyterian church, Cottage Grove, Wis.

Mr. Frank R. Dudley, '15, was among the August visitors, on his way to Tupelo, Miss., to take up a charge there.

Fay E. Ralph, '19, has been appointed to Cairo, Egypt, under the United Presbyterian Board, and is expected to sail September 13.

David M. Beggs, '14, has resigned the pastorate of the Congregational church, Arcadia, Neb., to accept a call from the Congregational church at Burwell, Neb. In his four years in Arcadia, fifty-four new members were received, twenty-seven persons baptized, and the Sunday-school almost doubled in membership.

S. J. Tilden Sloan, '08, who since leaving the Institute has held pastorates at Denver, Kansas City, Saginaw and Chicago, is now pastor of the United Congregational Church of Cleveland. He has attended college and seminary in Chicago and Wheaton, Ill., and will complete his theological work at the Graduate School of Theology, Oberlin, O., in the near future. It is planned by his new church to erect a modern church building, fully equipped for a social center where the gospel will be preached as the only way of salvation.

Recently the graduates of June, 1918, in the Evening Classes, presented the Institute with a composite picture of the class. The Evening students seem to have taken up a custom observed by the Day students for many years. The picture has been placed on the south wall of the foyer to the offices of the Evening Classes, first floor, auditorium.

A CLASS IN HOME NURSING

The picture shows the class having a lesson in bandaging, given by Miss Johnston, in the commodious and well-appointed Gallery Class Room in the Auditorium.

A life-size Chase doll is used in illustrating various points, and the inclined floor enables every student to have a full view of the demonstration.

The purpose of the Home Nursing Course is to give the student a general knowledge of how to care for the sick and to meet emergencies with such materials and appliances as may be at hand. The following are considered: first aid to the injured; poisons and their antidotes; food in various diseases; hot and cold baths; bed making; care of sick room; general hygiene.

The Missionary Nurse Training Course supplements the one in Home Nursing and is designed to fit the missionary to meet the emergencies of primitive fields.

G. E. Fisher, '17, has been supplying the Presbyterian churches of Aniwa and Winnebago, Wis., besides another preaching point. His work has been very encouraging, and he returns in the fall for another year. He reports the demand for ministers in that region to be very great, as there are great sections of the country absolutely destitute of the gospel. The accompanying picture is Mr. Fisher on one of his pastoral visitation journeys.

REUNION AT C. E. CONVENTION

E. C. Shute, '15, kindly sent a photo of Moody Bible Institute students taken at the Illinois Christian Endeavor Convention, held at Bloomington, July 10-13. There were more Institute students at the convention than appeared in the picture, but it was not convenient to get them all together at the same time.

This association has been formed by friends of the late Colonel Roosevelt, and subscriptions to a fund of ten million dollars will be taken during the week of October 20-27 of this year. The object of the fund is, to provide memorials in accordance with the plans of the National Committee which will include the erection of a suitable and adequate monumental memorial in Washington, acquisition, development and maintenance of a park in the town of Oyster Bay which may ultimately, perhaps, include Sagamore Hill, to be preserved like Mount Vernon and Mr. Lincoln's home at Springfield.

FATHERLESS CHILDREN OF FRANCE

There are some 60,000 of them. There is an organization for their relief, of which Seymour L. Crowell of New York, is president. Many prominent citizens, including such as Dr. Henry Van Dyke, Hon. Yes! If a man does the best he can, he will accept Jesus Christ as his Saviour—this, and this alone, means salvation.

PAUL—BOOK LOVER

"Give attention to reading."— 1 Tim. 4:13; "Bring the books."—2 Tim. 4:13.

This man Paul was a tent maker, plus something else—he was a book lover. He had but few books—no "five-foot shelf," just a few, wrapped up in his cloak.

Here's a man who had been caught up into the very heavens. He had heard things unlawful for a man to utter—yet he wants books. He had seen the Lord—yet he asks for books!

And why? Because, to use the old but deathless phrase of Milton, "A good book is the precious lifeblood of a noble spirit." Books have souls. If Paul couldn't meet men in the flesh while he was in prison he could at least meet their spirits. When Paul was a student back in the university town of Tarsus, or possibly at Jerusalem, he had sat at Gamaliel's feet—a sort of a Mark Hopkins and a Garfield on a log and that was a great college for two.

There are books that heal and books that hurt. Books are keen edged tools for good or ill. Scarcely anything has greater power to soil the mind and soul than evil book or periodical.

Happy the person who puts a good book in a boy's hand.

Teach a child to love reading and you make him the heir of the ages. You've done much to keep him from temptation. He isn't in front of a pool room nor she gadding the streets. Reading people are home-staying people.

The less time you have for reading and the fewer books you may read the more careful should be your choice. It is not by accident that many of our great leaders had but few books in their youth. They read little, but digested much and thought more. The old proverb said, "Be cautious of the man of one book." Lincoln developed his gigantic intellect on a very slender array of five books: A Bible, Pilgrim's Progress, Aesop's Fables, a life of Washington, and a brief history of our country.

There's a whole world of wholesome reading open for you. Read the history of your country or that of your forebears across the sea. Buy an elementary book on natural history or natural science. A primer on astronomy will enlarge your sky line mightily. What's all this social and industrial unrest about? Buy a little work on sociology and find out. The earth, air and sky are full of wonders. Get a book of travel and visit the remote corners of the earth. Every great man in the world has been influenced by biography. Read the lives of Washington, Lincoln, Garfield, Booker T. Washington or Helen Keller.

And the Bible—every English author is saturated with it. The beauty and purity of Lincoln's language, some of which will live forever as models, is due to his study of the Bible. Forty per cent of the allusions used in English literature are from his inexhaustible mine. Get the habit!—The Evening Bulletin (Phila.)

Has GOD Called YOU?

I secured 120 subscriptions in two months, while soliciting in Wisconsin. I would advise anyone desiring to secure a scholarship to begin early, as it is less difficult to secure the required amount, and you will enjoy the work far more than if put off until a few weeks before entering the Institute. I am still soliciting subscriptions. —P. J. Andreasen

It affords me pleasure in recommending The Christian Workers Magazine scholarship plan to anyone hungering for a broader knowledge of God's Word. I won the scholarship in four weeks. What has been done can be done again. I praise God for the trials and difficulties which He led me into while canvassing for this scholarship. If God has called you, go to day. —D. A. Chapman

I am glad to recommend the offer given by The Christian Workers Magazine as a desirable and profitable, as well as enjoyable means of obtaining a scholarship for entrance to The Moody Bible Institute.—Sadie Poage

I take pleasure in recommending to anyone this plan, who is contemplating coming to The Moody Bible Institute. I am now enrolled in the Institute and enjoy my work very much. The spiritual as well as mental training is wonderful.—Mildred Couch Robinson

I wish to thank you for the opportunity to secure subscriptions to your magazine, to help pay my expenses through school; the task was very easy, I secured 125 subscriptions in two weeks; all I met were willing subscribers, and my friends are still sending in subscriptions, and I can recommend this plan to anyone that has not the necessary funds to start their schooling with.—C. E. Taylor

to do Christian Work

If you feel the Lord is calling you to do more definite work in winning souls, remember He has provided for you a place to be thoroughly trained for that work. Christian people are providing the funds for your education. All they ask is that you pay for your board, room and washing. This training is offered to you FREE at

The Moody Bible Institute

You may have a catalog giving full particulars, about the courses of study in the Bible, and music on request.

Are You Delaying The Work

by not responding to the call?

If it is because you need funds for your board and room, we offer you a plan of self-help by securing new subscriptions to The Christian Workers Magazine as follows:

Scholarship Offer

To any earnest young man or woman, pastor or Christian worker who desires a better preparation for Christian work and is accepted as a student of The Moody Bible Institute, who shall send in 130 new annual subscriptions, cash with order, within five months from the date of acceptance of this offer, The Christian Workers Magazine will provide a scholarship for one term (fifteen weeks) stay at the Institute, consisting of board and room (with another), heat and light (tuition being free). The student will be amenable to the same rules and conditions as apply to other students enrolled.

Candidates will send orders to The Christian Workers Magazine, 163 Institute Place, Chicago, and must complete the payment for the required total of 130 subscriptions within the specified time. In case of failure to fulfil this condition, the publishing agent will refund to the candidate the usual agent's commission on every subscription.

The acceptance of this offer insures (1) a helpful business experience, (2) a valuable training in how to meet and interest people, and (3) untold good done by the circulation of a helpful religious magazine.

Suggestions An entire young people's society or Bible class may work for a scholarship, nominating one of its members to use the same.

A pastor needing a trained layman to assist him, will find the scholarship plan an advantageous one for educating a young man or woman from his own congregation.

The scholarship plan may be used to extend the term of training for a student already in attendance at The Moody Bible Institute.

A series of scholarships may be planned, insuring the beneficiary, for instance, at least a year's uninterrupted stay at the Institute.

The Christian Workers Magazine
163 Institute Place Chicago, Illinois

I heartily recommend this method to obtain the comparatively small amount of funds necessary to secure what I believe to be the best instruction in the Bible or in Bible Music, that can be obtained anywhere.—Minerva S. Weil

We are very glad to recommend this plan for securing a scholarship to anyone wishing to enter The Moody Bible Institute. We are now soliciting subscriptions for the magazine—Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Young

I encourage every prospective student to act upon this splendid proposition. My testimony as a member of the Senior class, is this: I considered no effort too great which would enable me to enroll as a student in The Moody Bible Institute, upon which the richest blessing of God continually rests and where I have enjoyed the happiest two years of my life preparing for the service of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.—Geo. F. Orloff

I am grateful for the opportunity presented by The Christian Workers Magazine to secure a scholarship to The Moody Bible Institute, and would recommend this plan to anyone who loves the Word of God and is anxious to study it. I also recommend to anyone to begin work immediately. As a rule it requires some time and effort to secure the necessary number of subscriptions. I worked four months to secure the necessary number. Some may succeed in less time.—Myrtle P. Harrod

It is with pleasure I recommend obtaining subscriptions to this magazine to secure a scholarship or money towards the expense of attending The Moody Bible Institute. I was able to obtain about forty subscriptions in ten days during our summer vacation, most of them among the church members of Des Moines. It enabled me to leave this Magazine in homes of people where the Word of God is appreciated, and to come into personal contact with the people and, in many cases, to speak a word for my Saviour.—Beulah Mae Millan

A Study of DEATH and the FUTURE LIFE

"What a good thing it would be if all Christians could have this book. Most of the books that have come under my study on "The Last Things" are hard for the common reader to understand. Your book, while every page bears the marks of a ripe scholarship, treats the subject of the Future Life in a way so lucid as to interest and comfort the ordinary reader."

Spend a few minutes a day with Dr. Gray and get a new grip on your Bible

Let this man of God, with his keen insight, his ripe scholarship, and his sure knowledge, reveal to you the mysteries of Prophecy the wonders of Fulfillment, the vital relation of to-day's world events with the Divine plan for humanity. Let him, with the other distinguished members of the Moody Bible Institute faculty, take you through a simple course of Bible study—by correspondence—specially prepared for Christian Herald readers. A few minutes a day of prayerful, thoughtful study will give you a new, a clearer, conception of the Will of the Ages; you will marvel at the ignorance which has blinded the eyes of the world to the Divine love and providence for restless, turbulent, unsatisfied humanity. Dr. James M. Gray and his associates of the Moody Bible Institute (Dr. Ralston, Prof. Fitzwater, Prof. Gosnell and Prof. Page) are to give the world, through the Christian Herald, a series of masterpieces of thoughtful, helpful, inspiring studies in the Book of Books.

How to join Dr. Gray's Bible Study Course

The Christian Herald has secured this correspondence course of twenty-four Bible Studies—prepared by Dr. James M. Gray, Dean of the Moody Bible Institute, and his associates. This course is priceless, but the Christian Herald, through the courtesy and with the co-operation of the Moody Bible Institute and its Faculty, is making it available for 500,000 earnest Christians, and offers the entire course, four studies each month for six months, at the nominal price of one dollar to any new trial subscriber to the Christian Herald at one dollar for six months, (26 big issues), or two dollars in all.

The Christian Herald is the world's most widely read and loved religious family magazine. Beautifully illustrated in color, its 32 or more large pages are filled with the choicest, most inspiring, instructive and entertaining literature anywhere available for Christian people. The Christian Herald has been the means of sending millions upon millions of money, shiploads of food and clothing to starving and distressed humanity and is one of America's great institutions for service. A million and a quarter readers eagerly welcome its coming each week. A subscription to the Christian Herald is the greatest investment any Christian family can make in these days of doubtful and dangerous periodical literature.

Fill out the coupon; all remittances, whether in $1 or $2 bills, checks or money orders at the Christian Herald's risk.

FOUR LINES OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE

1. Publishing Department—Undertaking the manufacture and marketing of books, pamphlets and tracts, true to the teachings of God's Word and otherwise in harmony with the established principles of the Association. [Correspondence concerning these matters should be as explicit as possible. Authors should write before sending mss.]

2. Book-Selling Department—Operating a store, for local and out-of-town trade, supplied with a well-assorted stock of evangelical literature—including books on Bible study, the deeper spiritual life, methods of Christian work, Bibles, the Scriptures in various forms, hymn books, wall mottoes, gospel tracts, etc.

3. Colportage Department—Enlisting the services (for all or part time) of earnest men and women in the circulation and sale of Christian literature, in city and country, especially from home to home, and where possible in connection with churches or other local religious organizations. Bible conferences, camp meetings, etc., also provide a field.

4. Missionary Department—Maintaining, with the aid of interested Christian friends wherever found, several Missionary book funds for free distribution of "the gospel in print" to spiritually-neglected classes, such as the prisoners, lumberjacks, mountaineers, soldiers, sailors, miners, etc. Administering also a general free tract fund.

The Spiritist Intrusion

is what LIFE calls the renewed interest in psychic phenomena stimulated by the bereavements of the war, and now exhibited in the popular writings of Booth Tarkington, Conan Doyle, and Ralph Adams Cram.

This gives new and strong reason for reading the illuminating chapter,

The Power Behind the Medium in Dr. James M. Gray's well known book, which is constantly called for,

Satan and the Saint

It deals also with other present day deceptions of the devil.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE

For Love Bestowed

By Fred Scott Shepard

The year has proven good,
For in God's love
We have been truly blessed;
And e'en though ills assailed,
We, 'neath His shelt'ring wings
Have safety found.

If testings have been ours,
'T was by His will;
And loads of care seemed light
And bitterness but sweet,
For Love was leading on And Grace was near.

Our hearts now grateful are
For love bestowed;
And we would honor give
The Lord of life and love,
And yield Him homage true
As King o'er all.

NOVEMBER

Building Street Cars and Building Souls

"My money is building street cars!"

A Christian merchant who retired from business recently was congratulating himself on the investment of his capital in a large traction company.

"My stock assures me a fair return on my money throughout life," he said, "and through my wealth I am aiding my country by adding to its transportation facilities."

All of which is very good.

Another Christian wished to place his savings where they would yield him a steady income. He made an equally safe investment in the of The Moody Bible Institute.

His money, secured by property valued at more than one and a half million dollars, paid him a good rate of interest.

But it did not build street cars.

It went out into the slums, the jails, the hospitals and the factories of Chicago, carrying the Gospel message and bringing sinners to repentance.

It trained consecrated young men and women for lives of Christian service at home and in the foreign fields.

And it worked for the Master's kingdom in other ways which can be appreciated only as the far-reaching activities of the Institute are known.

You may be working for Christ—but is your money?

A booklet explaining our Life Annuity Contracts will be sent on request.

Just the Book for a Gift to a Bible-Teacher or Scholar

RUTH

The Satisfied Stranger

By Philip Mauro

Ready (God Willing) in November

Popular Edition—12mo, cloth, net $1.25
Gift Edition—Ooze Calf Binding, net $3.00.

The working out of the theme of the Gospel of Grace in the earlier chapters, and the unfolding of the subject of Redemption (past and future, "proper" and "improper") in the later chapters, will make this volume of unusual value to all who study the Bible for themselves, and particularly for all who seek to impart its great truths to others.

The chapter on "The Nearer Kinsman" (a point heretofore enveloped in some obscurity) will probably be counted well worth the price of the volume to every student of Scripture, and to every lover of truth.

The Book of Ruth is found by our author to have an historical setting remarkably resembling, in its main features, the times through which the world is now passing. For this and other reasons the present volume will be of interest to the general reader.

The style is simple, making it easy for all classes of readers to follow the different subjects treated.

The War
The Flu
And the Sunday-schools

Startling statements have been going the rounds as to great losses in Sunday-school membership in the last two or three years.

Are these statements true?

If true, just what are the facts?

And if true, what is the remedy?

Do you know what successful steps have already been taken by Sunday-schools to make up war and epidemic losses, and to hold or restore membership and attendance?

There are some Sunday-schools, you know, that have not only held their own but have actually increased their membership and attendance during these times.

Have you investigated the condition of your own school, so that you know exactly what the need or loss or gain is there?

For some months past The Sunday School Times has been investigating this subject that is of such vital importance to the very life of the Sunday-schools of North America.

Every section of North America is being scoured for authentic material that will be of tremendous value to your school.

All kinds of Sunday-schools are being included in this investigation, small and large, city and country, so that all may move forward together in the new era of opportunity.

You can get the benefit of the full results of this investigation in only one way: by

The Sunday School Times

in your home and school.

The articles covering this whole subject will commence this autumn, and continue into the winter. They will give a wealth of practical, soundly successful material, showing how any and every school can more than overcome the set-back of the last few years.

And in every issue you get a dozen unusual lesson-help features, on the International Improved Uniform Lessons, by the best Bible teachers in North America.

But the very best thing about this Every-Week Interdenominational Journal for Adults in Bible Study and Teaching, Sunday-school Management, and the Christian Life and Service, is that it stands for the whole Bible as the infallible Word of God, and the shed blood of Jesus as the only way of salvation.

The Courses are Simple enough to be readily understood by persons of common school education, hundreds of whom have been helped to a better knowledge of the Bible. The need of such was specially in mind when the courses were in preparation.

The Courses are Comprehensive enough to profitably occupy the time of the university graduate, a number of such, including some prominent ministers, having taken one or both courses, and testified to its helpfulness. Several denominations are represented among these clergymen.

BEGINNERS in the study of prophecy should study Series One, Bible Prophecy, first for the most satisfactory results. This should soon be followed by the study of Series Two, Revelation. Either course makes a good winter's work. Each student can begin when he pleases and take as much or little time in the study as his affairs allow. A supplemental list of books by which the courses can be indefinitely enlarged is suggested from time to time. These can be purchased or not as the student elects. The course is complete in itself, one dollar paying in full for the twenty weeks' work in either course.

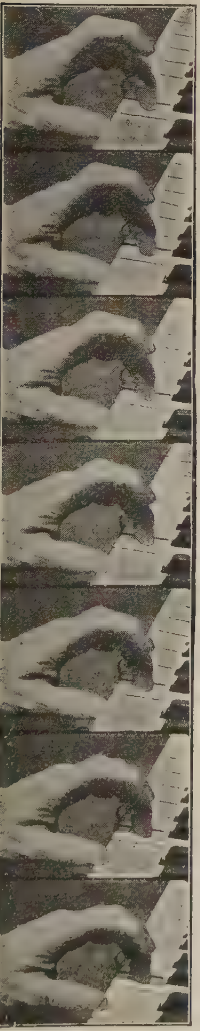
My Way of Teaching Piano Made Plenty of Enemies

All the old fogies who are down on anything new—especially correspondence study—made it pretty hard for me when I first started 25 years ago.

And the fact that in spite of their opposition I obtained more students every year seems to me pretty good evidence that my method isn't wholly bad.



I now have far more students than were ever before taught by one man. There isn't a State in the Union that doesn't contain a score or more skilled players of piano or organ who obtained their entire training from me. They learned in quarter the usual time and at quarter the usual cost. I will gladly refer you to any number who will soon convince you of the excellent results they gained from my instruction. My free booklet, "How to Learn Piano or Organ," will interest and inform you. But don't send for it if you're afraid of being convinced.

My way of teaching piano or organ is entirely different from all others. Out of every four hours of study, one hour is spent entirely away from the keyboard—learning something about Harmony and The Laws of Music. This is an awful shock to most teachers of the "old school," who still think that learning piano is solely a problem of "finger gymnastics." When you do go to the keyboard, you accomplish twice as much, because you understand what you are doing. Within four lessons I enable you to play an interesting piece not only in the original key, but in all other keys as well.

I make use of every possible scientific help—many of which are entirely unknown to the average teacher. My patented invention, the COLOROTONE, sweeps away playing difficulties that have troubled students for generations. By its use transposition—usually a "nightmare" to students—becomes easy and fascinating. With my fifth lesson I introduce another important and exclusive invention, QUINN-DEX. Quinn-Dex is a simple hand-operated moving picture device, which enables you to see, right before your eyes, every movement of my hands at the keyboard. You actually see the fingers move. Instead of having to reproduce your teacher's finger movements from MEMORY—which cannot be always accurate—you have the correct models before you during every minute of practice. The COLOROTONE and QUINN-DEX save you months and years of wasted effort. They can be obtained only from me and there is nothing else, anywhere, even remotely like them.

Men and women who have failed by all other methods have quickly and easily attained success when studying with me. In all essential ways you are in closer touch with me than if you were studying by the oral method—yet my lessons cost you only 43 cents each—and they include all the many recent developments in scientific teaching. For the student of moderate means, this method of studying is far superior to all others, and even for the wealthiest student there is nothing better at any price. You may be certain that your progress is at all times in accord with the best musical thought of the present day, and this makes all the difference in the world.

My Course is endorsed by distinguished musicians who would not recommend any course but the best. It is for beginners or experienced players, old or young. You advance as rapidly or as slowly as you wish. All necessary music is supplied without extra charge. A diploma is granted. Write today, without cost or obligation, for 64-page free booklet, "How to Learn Piano or Organ."

PARKER'S PEOPLE'S BIBLE A LIBRARY OF SACRED KNOWLEDGE —By JOSEPH PARKER, D. D.—

This twenty-eight volume library, by one of the greatest preachers and theologians the world has ever known, is both guide and interpreter to the treasures of the entire Bible. It throws a clear light on the beauty and significance that are so frequently hidden behind the ambiguities of the text. It is so arranged as to meet the wants of the ordinary Bible reader as well as the requirements of students and ministers. In the ordinary sense it is not a Bible Commentary. Its scope is broader and less technical. Neither is it a series of sermons. It is essentially a guide to Biblical wisdom. As a distinctly pastoral exhibition it furnishes a careful and thorough analysis and application of the spiritual meaning of the Scriptures. It is a work as valuable for the home circle as for the library or study. Exhaustive special indexes in each volume and a complete Index volume make the contents easily accessible.

A Stupendous and Distinctive Work, Filled With Inexhaustible Riches

All Denominations Join in Its Praise

METHODIST

"In this work the force, originality, the effective style, the intensely practical teaching of the famous preacher are exhibited at their best."—METHODIST TIMES, London.

PRESBYTERIAN

"It might be almost called a pictorial Bible; each chapter is characterized by vivid verbal pictures, profuseness of illustration, literally orientalizing the orientalisms of the Scriptures."—NEW YORK OBSERVER.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL

"Dr. PARKER'S work in these volumes is full of concentrated wisdom, the very essence of intelligence, philosophy, wit, and common sense. No student of human nature can fail to find a thousand and one valuable sentiments digested in this book, to which he can give his approval, and from which he may quote and find a spiritual next of kin."—THE EPISCOPAL RECORDER, Philadelphia.

CONGREGATIONAL

"New glimpses of truth will delight readers in every section of the work."—THE CONGREGATIONALIST, Boston.

More than 202,000 Volumes Already Sold in America

The great popularity and value of this work are attested by the immense sale which it has had in the United States and Great Britain. In America alone we have already sold 202,000 volumes. These have gone to members of all Protestant denominations, and the voluntary commendations received from the purchasers would fill a large volume. The entire press, religious and secular, has indorsed it in hundreds of sincere and enthusiastic commendations. In this announcement we have space to give only a few representative testimonials to its great worth. No other religious work written within our recollection has received such a unanimous reception.

A Lofty Translation of the Scriptures' Divine Messages

Its aim is to afford such a rendering of the divine word as will meet all human need, elevate all human desire, and sanctify all human endeavor. As the author says, the Bible is a book which "contains every man's biography, full of passion and tragedy, the love and sacrifice which we know to be the substantial history of the day." Thus this work which reflects the scriptural beauties is not only a work for all men; but a work which will inevitably help all men. As Dr. Parker further says, "When ministers are divinely inspired, their public reading of the Scriptures will be an exposition; every accent will be as a tongue of fire, and every emphasis will give new hints of meaning. The inspired writers wait for the inspired readers."

No Creeds, Dogmas, or Controversies Here

The PEOPLE'S BIBLE has nothing to do with theological controversies, with various theories, dogmas, or particular creeds. It stands simply as a revelation of the Bible's word in all its purity and charm. It seeks to make the soul speak face to face with God. Unlike a Commentary going through each book minutely verse by verse, its object is to set forth clearly and concisely before the reader the chief purpose and striking illustrations of each book. "The purpose of the PEOPLE'S BIBLE," says the author, "is pastoral; it aims so to bring all readers under the moral sovereignty of the Sacred Book as to arm them against temptation, enrich them with solid comfort, and fortify them with the wisdom of God."

In this brief description only a hint can be given of the inexhaustible treasures of this vast library

All Denominations Join In Its Praise

BAPTIST

"The work might be almost called the 'Preacher's Bible,' for he will find here what will make him think for himself."—NATIONAL BAPTIST.

UNITED BRETHREN

"It is plain, but not commonplace; it is eloquent, but not bombastic; spiritual, but not burdened with spurious assumptions."—QUARTERLY REVIEW, Dayton.

REFORMED

"Almost every sentence in this great work glows with intense spiritual light, and burns its way to the very center of life."—THE REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER, Philadelphia.

LUTHERAN

"The author's mind is prolific in bright thoughts, and possesses the happy faculty of expressing them in a striking and original manner. He has remarkable insight into the spiritual meanings of Scripture."—LUTHERAN OBSERVER, Philadelphia.

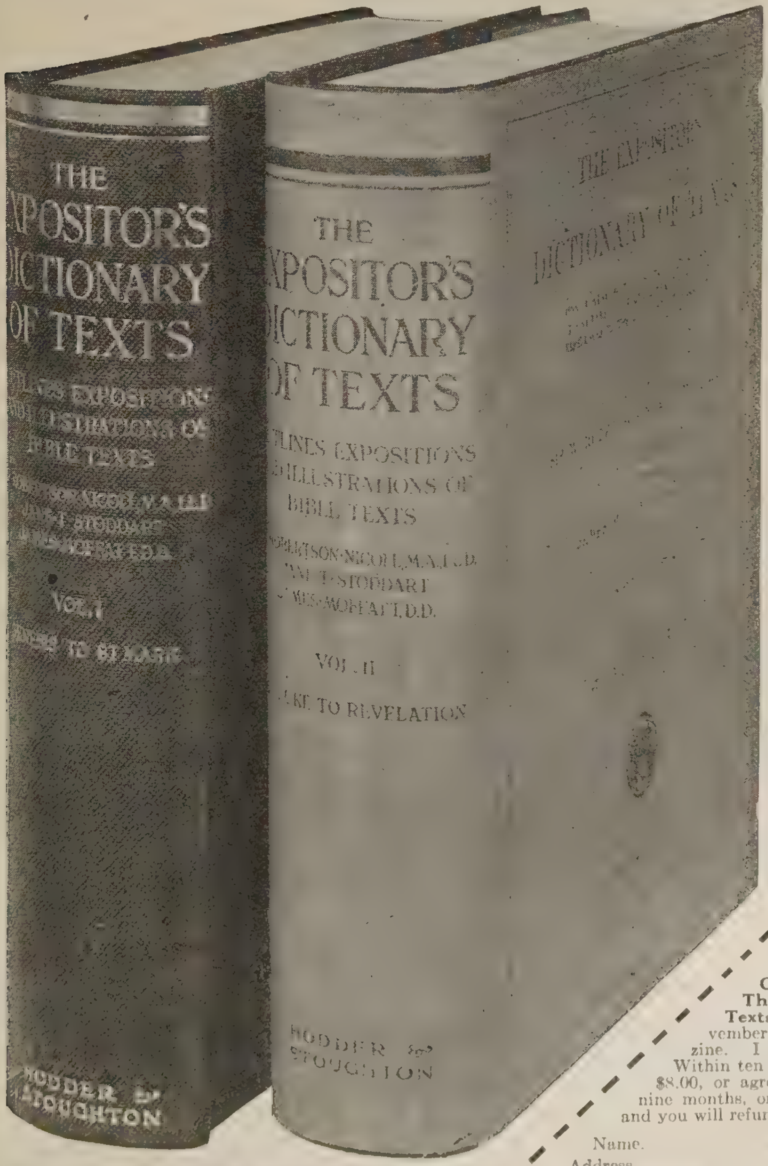
THE EXPOSITOR'S DICTIONARY OF TEXTS

REGULAR PRICE,	$12.00	(Really Worth $30.00)
OUR PRICE	$9.00	(Delivery Prepaid)

Edited by SIR W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D., and Endorsed by the World's Great Preachers

THIS STUPENDOUS WORK in two massive volumes, like two big dictionaries with nearly 2,200 pages, provides expositions on hundreds of texts, each a compact sermon in itself. It is equal to about thirty ordinary homiletic volumes.

ITS PURPOSE is to gather up on every important text in both Old and New Testaments, the best of expositions that have been written by the leading international authorities of the past fifty years, and to condense them into a compass compatible with its literary excellence.



THOUSANDS OF CONTRIBUTORS In compiling the material for this marvelously useful reference work—encyclopedic in its completeness, not ONE mind, but hundreds of authorities have been consulted and are quoted. Every shade of meaning in every text is suggested. The clergyman or Christian Worker does not live who, with this splendid work, will not teach and preach with increased confidence, more intimate knowledge and telling effect.

Comments of Leading Authorities

"By its wealth of apt and unhackneyed illustrations it starts the mind on lines of thought reaching far beyond the text under review." —Rev. David Smith, D. D.

"In suggestiveness, originality, and practical usefulness, I should think the Dictionary stands alone." —Rev. G. H. Morrison, M. A.

"The preacher's originality and freshness are in no danger of being obscured, he simply finds the spark necessary to kindle the tinder of the sympathetic mind."—Rev. W. L. Watkinson, D. D.

"I have been much impressed with the amount of material brought together, and still more with the range of literature which must have been examined. The concise bibliographies will be found most helpful in directing preachers to sources of illumination and inspiration."—Rev. A. S. Peake, D. D.

Has GOD Called YOU?

to do Christian Work

If you feel the Lord is calling you to do more definite work in winning souls, remember He has provided for you a place to be thoroughly trained for that work. Christian people are providing the funds for your education. All they ask is that you pay for your board, room and washing. This training is offered to you FREE at

The Moody Bible Institute

You may have a catalog giving full particulars, about the courses of study in the Bible, and music on request.

Are You Delaying The Work

by not responding to the call?

If it is because you need funds for your board and room, we offer you a plan of self-help by securing new subscriptions to The Christian Workers Magazine as follows:

Scholarship Offer

To any earnest young man or woman, pastor or Christian worker who desires a better preparation for Christian work and is accepted as a student of The Moody Bible Institute, who shall send in 130 new annual subscriptions, cash with order, within five months from the date of acceptance of this offer, The Christian Workers Magazine will provide a scholarship for one term (fifteen weeks) stay at the Institute, consisting of board and room (with another), heat and light (tuition being free). The student will be amenable to the same rules and conditions as apply to other students enrolled.

Candidates will send orders to The Christian Workers Magazine, 163 Institute Place, Chicago, and must complete the payment for the required total of 130 subscriptions within the specified time. In case of failure to fulfil this condition, the publishing agent will refund to the candidate the usual agent's commission on every subscription.

The acceptance of this offer insures (1) a helpful business experience, (2) a valuable training in how to meet and interest people, and (3) untold good done by the circulation of a helpful religious magazine.

Suggestions An entire young people's society or Bible class may work for a scholarship, nominating one of its members to use the same.

A pastor needing a trained layman to assist him, will find the scholarship plan an advantageous one for educating a young man or woman from his own congregation.

The scholarship plan may be used to extend the term of training for a student already in attendance at The Moody Bible Institute.

A series of scholarships may be planned, insuring the beneficiary, for instance, at least a year's uninterrupted stay at the Institute.

The Christian Workers Magazine
163 Institute Place Chicago, Illinois

I secured 120 subscriptions in two months, while soliciting in Wisconsin. I would advise anyone desiring to secure a scholarship to begin early, as it is less difficult to secure the required amount, and you will enjoy the work far more than if put off until a few weeks before entering the Institute. I am still soliciting subscriptions. —P. J. Andreasen

It affords me pleasure in recommending The Christian Workers Magazine scholarship plan to anyone hungering for a broader knowledge of God's Word. I won the scholarship in four weeks. What has been done can be done again. I praise God for the trials and difficulties which He led me into while canvassing for this scholarship. If God has called you, go to day. —D. A. Chapman

I am glad to recommend the offer given by The Christian Workers Magazine as a desirable and profitable, as well as enjoyable means of obtaining a scholarship for entrance to The Moody Bible Institute.—Sadie Poage

I take pleasure in recommending to anyone this plan, who is contemplating coming to The Moody Bible Institute. I am now enrolled in the Institute and enjoy my work very much. The spiritual as well as mental training is wonderful.—Mildred Couch Robinson

I wish to thank you for the opportunity to secure subscriptions to your magazine, to help pay my expenses through school; the task was very easy, I secured 125 subscriptions in two weeks; all I met were willing subscribers, and my friends are still sending in subscriptions, and I can recommend this plan to anyone that has not the necessary funds to start their schooling with.—C. E. Taylor

I heartily recommend this method to obtain the comparatively small amount of funds necessary to secure what I believe to be the best instruction in the Bible or in Bible Music, that can be obtained anywhere.—Minerva S. Weil

We are very glad to recommend this plan for securing a scholarship to anyone wishing to enter The Moody Bible Institute. We are now soliciting subscriptions for the magazine—Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Young

I encourage every prospective student to act upon this splendid proposition. My testimony as a member of the Senior class, is this: I considered no effort too great which would enable me to enroll as a student in The Moody Bible Institute, upon which the richest blessing of God continually rests and where I have enjoyed the happiest two years of my life preparing for the service of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.—Geo. F. Orloff

I am grateful for the opportunity presented by The Christian Workers Magazine to secure a scholarship to The Moody Bible Institute, and would recommend this plan to anyone who loves the Word of God and is anxious to study it. I also recommend to anyone to begin work immediately. As a rule it requires some time and effort to secure the necessary number of subscriptions. I worked four months to secure the necessary number. Some may succeed in less time.—Myrtle P. Harrod

It is with pleasure I recommend obtaining subscriptions to this magazine to secure a scholarship or money towards the expense of attending The Moody Bible Institute. I was able to obtain about forty subscriptions in ten days during our summer vacation, most of them among the church members of Des Moines. It enabled me to leave this Magazine in homes of people where the Word of God is appreciated, and to come into personal contact with the people and, in many cases, to speak a word for my Saviour.—Beulah Mac Millan

The darkest hour in Jewish history is near. The day of Jacob's trouble will plunge the nation into an abyss of anguish beside which the recent war will prove to have been but a shadow. In that day it will be too late for any Jew to be saved through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ—the door will be shut.

Don't you think that fairness to the nation requires us to give the Jews the Gospel message now, while it is yet time? And will not such an act hasten the coming of Him whom our hearts long to see soon? A faithful friend wrote us recently: "When I read of the tribulations they are to pass through, and that 'any who call on Jesus Christ' will be saved, I long to have them accept Him now. As they are His own people, I want to help some one to learn of Him and to believe He is their Saviour."

You can't preach to the Jews; but you can pray for them; and you can give of your means to help forward the work. We need so much your prayers, your sympathy, your help. May we have them?

Your gift, be it a thousand dollars, or one dollar, will be indeed welcome, and will of course bring you our literature. The Chosen People, our monthly paper, will be unusually interesting this winter. Price, 50c a year.

An Old-Fashioned Thanksgiving Sermon

IT will be found on page 188 under the title, "Ignorance the Mother of Ingratitude." We call it "old-fashioned" because it is. It was preached by the editor-in-chief nearly a generation ago.

The other day he discovered it near the bottom of the barrel and drew it forth and gave it to the printer, not because he was short of other and better material, for the magazine lockers are full to bursting, but just because he wanted to do it.

Editors sometimes please themselves.

The sermon is "old-fashioned" in its style. It is astonishing how literary style, and speaking style, change in thirty years. No wonder that biblical criticism by an examination and comparison of manuscripts can determine the century to which they belong.

It is "old-fashioned" in its allusions. Who now cares for civil service reform or a new party? It is the League of Nations and the penalizing of the profiteers that is going to do the business now. And who would now say with the same confidence, that the advances in the practical sciences had more potency over the masses than the different schools of anti-christian philosophy? In thirty years the thinking of the people has meant more than for the previous three hundred years, and its tendency has ever been in the direction of a natural causation of things rather than a supernatural.

It is "old-fashioned" in its estimate of religious fallacies. It speaks of ritualism and rationalism and spiritualism, but the whole of Christendom today, outside the body of Christ, is practically controlled by these erroneous teachings.

It is "old-fashioned" in its conception of the character of God, venturing to speak of judgments individual and national, judgments in time and judgments in kind, as though they were to be looked for and expected. But who says very much about these things now? Carlyle is quoted, an advanced freethinker for those days, but very orthodox and very moderate, in fact a back number now.

It is "old-fashioned" in its theology and especially its eschatology, for it urges upon young collegians adherence to the faith delivered once for all to the saints, and it believes that the issue of the coming crisis may be the personal appearing of the Son of Man, not for the destruction of the world of course, but its reconstruction in righteousness. How many thanksgiving sermons this month will emphasize these things?

And indeed, they were not so very generally or strongly believed even then. It was a union thanksgiving service in Boston at which the sermon was preached, and a half-dozen neighboring pastors were in the pulpit with the young preacher. Dr. A. J. Gordon, of blessed memory, was one of them, and when they gathered around the preacher at the close of the service to say the usual pleasant things to him, one of them remarked, flatly enough, that the sermon was beautiful! It is remembered that Dr. Gordon endeavored to get him to say that it was true, but he was unsuccessful.

Every one of those ministers has long since passed away except one, the Rev. D. M. Stearns, D. D., for years rector of the Reformed Episcopal Church of the Atonement, Germantown, Pa. He too, was then a young man, and had just come to Boston as pastor of the Springfield Street Congregational Church, which had been started by the followers of the Rev. H. M. Parsons, D. D. Dr. Parsons, father-in-law of the Rev. John Timothy Stone, D. D., of Chicago, and one of the great teachers at the old Niagara Conference, had been frozen out of the Union Congregational Church of Boston, because of his fidelity to the Bible and his testimony to the second coming of Christ. He, and others who thought as he did, founded the new church, and when he was called elsewhere, Dr. Stearns succeeded him.

Dr. Stearns is a knowing man, and always reads The Christian Workers Magazine. We wonder when his eye falls on this if he will recall that thanksgiving service in old Berkeley Street Congregational Church, now a movie theater?

How God has blessed and multiplied the ministry of Dr. Stearns since that day! What a Bible teaching ministry has been his, and how unselfishly has he applied the results of it to further the work of the gospel in heathen lands! What a witness has he borne to the grace and the power of Christ before all his brother ministers these many years!

To have two such men as A. J. Gordon and D. M. Stearns stand by the testimony of the young preacher on that Thanksgiving Day so long ago, was reward enough. No matter what the other spies had to say, Caleb and Joshua could be relied upon.

Yes, it is an "old-fashioned" thanksgiving sermon, but we are not ashamed of it. We could improve it in many ways, and make it more attractive for the twentieth century. We could put a little more "punch" into it as they say now-a-days, we could preach it, we believe, with more of the power of the Holy Ghost, but its doctrine would be the same and its practical application also.

Ignorance is still the mother of ingratitude. Ignorance of God is still the awful sin it always was. Men are still making gods out of the gifts of God. Thanksgiving Day is no more God honoring than it was thirty years ago. The evangelical ministry has grown no stronger. Intellect and mammon wield their old time power.

And God has not changed His mind about these things, and it is still true that neither rebel spirits nor rebel men can deliver themselves out of His hand. He will visit upon this nation "all the days of Baalim."

Such talk is not visionary, neither is it pessimistic. It is not pessimistic because the darkest hour is just before dawn. We are not looking for wrath but for salvation when Jesus Christ comes. And He is coming not only for the comfort of His believing people, but, through them, for the blessing of the whole world.

Preach and teach these things on this Thanksgiving Day, dear fellow ministers. Bring the people back to the Bible and the God of the Bible. Be "old-fashioned" about it. Eschew modernism. "Ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and ye shall find rest for your souls" (Jeremiah 6:16).

Editorial Notes

Reason and Higher Criticism

Some time since we spoke of Herbert Spencer's Autobiography. Spiritually we are as far from him as the poles, but his earthly wisdom has been suggestive and helpful in many ways.

In one of his observations we find a good illustration of the attitude to be maintained with reference to the higher critics. Spencer is speaking of Professor Owen on comparative osteology and the skepticism he (Spencer) felt towards his theory of the archetypal vertebra. His own ignorance of the subject kept him in fear from expressing his dissent, especially when distinguished biologists had shown their adherence to it.

But one day he heard Huxley attack it before the Royal Society, and then he plucked up courage to write a criticism of it for a Current Review. To quote his own words:

"Had the question been one of knowledge, I should not have been absurd enough to criticise a naturalist so profoundly acquainted with the facts; but it was a question of reasoning. Taking Professor Owen's various statements and explanations as they stood, the purpose was to show that they involved incongruities so numerous as to make his hypothesis untenable. In other words, if the data put before him do not bear out the inference, it is incompetent for every logical reader to say so."

This is precisely the situation with reference to the destructive criticism of the Bible. It need not be denied for example, that in Genesis God is sometimes spoken of as "Elohim," and sometimes as "Jehovah;" nor that there are differences of literary style extending through the hexateuch; nor that Deuteronomy mentions one sanctuary only and the early historical books speak of many. These data are before the eyes of those with the ability to see them.

But the inferences or conclusions to be drawn from them are another matter. Those who present the data may, or may not, be competent to generalize upon them. And as a matter of fact many of the destructive critics who attempt to do so are utterly incompetent for the task. Fundamentally that which renders them so is their denial of the supernatural, and any intelligent child of God is able to determine this for himself.

To put it in another way, the logical reader, especially he who through grace is enlightened by the Holy Ghost, can easily compare the deductions of the higher critics with the replies of the conservative scholars of the church, and determine which of the two are the more reasonable, and to which it is the part of wisdom for him to pin his faith.

Cause for Thanksgiving

Our nation is so filled with trouble just now that perhaps some people are wondering for what we have to be thankful on this Thanksgiving Day. Let the extract which follows from a letter postmarked "Harbin, Manchuria," help us to answer that question. It is written by a Japanese military officer, formerly a student in The Moody Bible Institute, and we give it in his own language:

"I came here this city last July from Vladivostok and straightway was caught by the endemic with which I am not yet recover my health.

"By this time terrible cholera is prevailing in this city very wildly as the total patients are estimated already over a dozen thousand and half of them are dead. Every day we have the dead more than one hundred and fifty. Certainly nearly all of them are the Chinese. No nurse to watch them, no friend to bury them and no wood to burn them, and they are laid at the streets without any cover to let the wild dogs eat, or thrown into the river.

"We are quartering at the most safety place, yet we have to pay great attention for everything because the Chinese people and the numberless flies are wandering everywhere.

"Harbin is quite big city and the center of so-called Siberia and Manchuria."

How grateful we should be for our escape from calamities such as these, and what an obligation it lays upon us to try to get together as the favored citizens of so good a land, to make it answer the purposes for which God has given it to us!

Armenia's Cry

We are in receipt of a letter from the Hon. James M. Gerard, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the American Committee for the Independence of Armenia, conveying two anxious cablegrams from the Armenian Government and adding thereto his own solicitous appeal for that afflicted people.

Both of the cablegrams are signed by A. Ahronian, president of the delegation of the Armenian Republic at Paris. One of them states that word has just been received from the heart of the afflicted country saying that Moustapha Kemal's regular troops, assisted by Turkish-Tartan bands and Kurdish crews have begun to surround the Armenian Republic to carry out the apparently fully formed edict of destruction. Those who have recently returned to their dismantled houses, hoping for possible relief, are now at the mercy of the invaders.

The second recites that the British have at present withdrawn, and the Turkish officers are making preparations to take advantage of the well nigh defenseless condition of the inhabitants and put them to the sword. Money and ammunition on the part of the brave local defenders is exhausted. Fifty or sixty thousand are just now dying on the roadways. The population is exhausted, and the people are starving and despairing.

These people turn instantly to America, and our Government is urged to act. Christians are asked to pray, and to give generously and promptly.

Let All Get to Work

We confess too little knowledge of political economy, finance and business science, but it would seem to require but little knowledge to apprehend the sense of the remark that the simplest and most effective way to increase the value of a dollar is to put more goods of all kinds on the market. We would not be called upon to pay $20 for a pair of shoes if the factories were glutted with them. Nor would rents have soared where they are if new houses and apartments were being built.

The war withdrew 26,000,000 men from productive industry. Is it any wonder that prices are high? Why, then that the war is over, do not all of us get to work?

Strikes for higher wages and shorter hours will never bring down prices, but on the contrary they will increase the cost of living to the extent that a universal famine will threaten the collapse of things. Profiteers? Where is the greater number of profiteers these days?

May God give us a revival of sense, and judgment, and industry, and economy, a revival of righteousness before it is too late.

Pray for the President

In Protestant churches where a liturgy is used the President is prayed for every Lord's Day. It is a fine and suitable thing to do, and if it had no other value, think how it tends to nourish patriotism, to temper partisanship, and to maintain the respect which is due from all of us to that high office.

But even where the President is not prayed for every Lord's Day he is commonly remembered at religious services on Thanksgiving Day.

We hope he will not be forgotten anywhere on this occasion. If he ever needed our prayers he needs them now. To carry the colossal burdens of his position under the best of circumstances is enough to crush him, but when his natural strength is less than normal, how we should sympathise with him and try to help him with our prayers!

A Christian can feel thus no matter what his politics may be, and no matter what opinion he may be holding at the moment either on international or domestic affairs. How happy we should be that this is true!

The Naked Sword

By William Olney, London, England

"It is God's Word, not man's comments upon God's Word, that saves souls."—Rev. R. M. McCheyne (quoted by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, Sermon No. 172)

Not dazzling argument, in words
Of careful, cultured choice, affords
The edge, keener than human swords;
But living truth, applied to souls
Which wounds with stroke which is the Lord's
That only mind and heart controls.

Take thou the naked sword, and fear
Lest studied "scabbards" charm the ear
And hide the blade; say to men, "Hear,
And your fast-dying souls shall live."

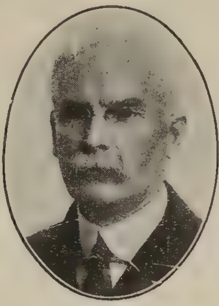
And Peace and Righteousness will give,

Christian Education: Its Relation to Modern World Life

By Rev. Robert McWatty Russell, D. D., LL. D.

An Address at the Graduation Exercises of The Moody Bible Institute



Robert M. Russell, D. D.

MODERN Christendom is confronted by the appalling defects of its educational system. Chief among these is the tendency to eliminate the Christian element.

Education is intended to acquaint man with his true environment, and to train him to live in harmony therewith. "To educate," says Webster, "is to instill into the mind principles of art, science, morals, religion and behavior." "To educate in the arts," he says, "is important; in religion indispensable."

Our modern educational system is imperiled from three sources: An exaggerated materialism, a pretentious psychology, and a pedantic pedagogy.

I

The German system of public instruction, so long held up as a model for the world, consisted largely in "systems of science, philosophy and theology wrought out by minds that had thrown off the authority of divine revelation," and placed the supreme emphasis of thought upon the material. Every true scholar must rejoice in our modern triumph in the realm of natural science. It is to the credit of modern life that in the last fifty years we have made more progress in the physical sciences than was secured in the last two thousand years. Obtaining mastery over nature is in accord with God's original purpose for humanity, and the charter of man's liberty to study nature and dominate her forces was given in the morning of creation when God, viewing both nature and man, the crown of His creation, issued the command, "Subdue it." But it is lamentable that man in making a closer scrutiny of the earth should lose his vision of the sky; that because of finding fire-flies in the meadows he should forget the stars, and that through an increased knowledge of things physical the modern generation should be taught to worship at the shrine of matter, force and motion, ignoring the spiritual trinity of "Father, Son and Holy Spirit." Materialism is a menace to modern life.

II

A Pretentious Psychology

We suffer likewise from a pretentious psychology. Psychology is a noble science. The science of mental phenomena, as dependent upon or correlated with physical changes, is worthy of much attention, but it should not exclude theology or rob mankind of spiritual treasures. Pope was roaming in a mental fog when he wrote:

> "Know then thyself; presume not
> God to scan,
> The proper study of mankind is > man."

With vision clarified as to our nature and needs, we can answer:

> Look thou on high; thy source is > not the clod,
> The proper study of mankind is > God.

A pretentious psychology would account for all the spiritual phenomena of sainthood, ancient and modern, without recognizing the existence of a personal, self-revealing God, or a world-Saviour, historically accredited by His resurrection from the dead. A pretentious psychology finds no need for the activity of the Holy Spirit in the phenomena of conversion. The new life produced by regeneration is classified as a movement of adolescence. The faith of the early disciples in the resurrection of Jesus is traced to the mere subjective experiences of men in whose hearts there was a struggle of sorrow and hope. Christian ethics the world of course needs, but it is presumed that these may be accepted and retained without definitely relating them to a divine teacher. In other words, our modern psychologist proceeds cheerfully to cut down the tree of historic Christianity, vainly imagining that its ethical shade will remain for world life. While boldly eliminating from the gospel record all that lays claim to the miraculous and finding no source for spiritual phenomena outside the movements of man's own mind, these teachers still desire to be viewed as Christian men and seek to be the guides of a new generation. Because of the prevalence of this kind of thought, young people, who go forth from Christian homes with Christian faith in their hearts, return from the colleges and universities talking of "the mistakes of the Bible," "the folk-lore of Genesis," "the myth of Palestine," and "the impossible theological vagaries of Paul." A pretentious psychology writes "myth" where our fathers wrote "revelation," and would substitute for the glorious light from the "Sun of Righteousness" the pale gleams from the rush-lights of human speculation.

III

A Pedantic Pedagogy

A third form of danger to our educational system is a pedantic pedagogy. Pedagogy, or the science of teaching, is important; and much good has come from rational effort to secure the best lines of approach to the child mind and the true proportion and order for the presentation of truth. But much of modern pedagogical theory, in so far as it concerns religious education, is chimerical, unscientific and absurd. For instance, it is claimed that it is only after a long course of instruction that the child should be confronted with the truths that involve personal relation to God. Religion is to be taught with a reversal of the chronological order. Instead of starting with the story of creation and saying, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," and then following this with the story of sin and human need, and God's manifestation in Christ, child religious education is to begin with the latest phases of Christian phenomena. He is to learn about religion by observing the conduct of his parents and Christian friends. Next comes the biography of modern church leaders, and in this line he is later to study the development of Christianity as seen in the lives of Luther, Calvin and Augustine. Pushing further, there will come studies in the life of Paul and Jesus, and then the political and social life of Israel. In all this progress the Bible is not to be made a text book. Indeed, none but these pretentious modern scholars, with their vision of how to eliminate the unhistorical from the Bible, can be trusted to prepare these progressive lessons for the young. Indeed, it is claimed that better illustrations for the fostering of the Christian life can be found in modern history than in Bible history. Says one, "How few are the stories in the Old Testament that can not be matched by better ones from recent American history! Compare any incident in the military history of Joshua with incidents in the career of Washington. Compare the story of David on his death-bed, giving bloody advice to his successor, Solomon, with that of President McKinley on his death-bed, singing, 'Nearer, My God, to Thee.'" Such books as Jacob Riis's The Making of an American, Edward A. Steiner's From Alien to Citizen, Mary Antin's Promised Land, and Booker T. Washington's Up from Slavery, are considered as quite superior to the Bible for the inculcation of Christian morality and patriotism. Indeed, where the Bible is used, care must be taken not to submerge the child-mind with advanced truth concerning his relation to God. Perhaps the largest truth for little children to be learned from the Bible story of the Good Shepherd is that we should be kind to animals. Later, after years of study embracing Jewish history and comparative religions, there will be provided a series of lessons on the great doctrines of Christian faith "particularly the doctrines of God, prayer and immortality."

The above is a true exhibit of the scheme of certain forms of modern pedagogy for the education of the child. How far it is from the Biblical way and the natural way is easy to discern. The true Christian life is union with God and the development of knowledge of God through that union. The true physical education of the child does not consist in lectures in anatomy and hygiene, and later the providing of nourishing food and the placing of the child in the mother's arms. The reverse order is the process. The personal touch and the personal ministration comes first. Life consists of living, not knowing how to live. Generations of men enjoyed and digested food before ever a book was written upon processes of digestion or the movements of muscles that control the jaws and the existence and activity of submaxillary and sublingual glands. The men who have moved the world spiritually were not educated by this new-fangled method of a pedantic pedagogy. Moses, Samuel and Daniel and the heroes of modern faith looked with child eyes into the face of God, and met the temptations of youth because of seeing the invisible, and of being consciously girded by the everlasting arms. The modern theory of religious education for childhood should hardly be dignified with the term pedantic pedagogy, it should rather be styled attenuated assininity. Modern indifference and opposition to Christian education should be met by clear and persistent challenge as to the importance and reasonableness of the Christian element in education.

Knowledge the Measure of Life

Any educational system is rational only as it includes the spiritual and puts the soul in contact with God. In both scientific and religious phase, the measure of life is knowledge. Life is high or low, broad or narrow, according to the nature of the environment with which the organism has the correspondence of knowledge. The worm life is of a low order because its environment is limited; in fact, it knows nothing but mud. Bird life is higher because its circle of knowledge is wider, including earth and air, sunshine and shadow, song of companions and the whisper of wind in waving grain and leafy forests. Man's life stands highest in the scale of earthly being because his is the ability for correspondence with the wider circles of reality. Man knows the elements of the earth better than the worm, the tints of field and sky better than the birds. He holds a social fellowship with the people of his own age and locality, and then sweeps out to discern the historic and geographical conditions that have characterized the lives of other ages and continents. By patient research he produces multiplied sciences until his environment of knowledge includes the chemistry of earth and air, the measured pathway of comets and stars, the philosophic dreams of men concerning the origin of nature's phenomena, and indeed every interest that throbs in the heart of the race universal.

The Widest Circle of Truth

The widest circle of truth, however, is not that which concerns sun and stars, or even race history and philosophies, but that which concerns God, the infinite One whose power lies behind all physical forces, and whose truth furnishes the light for all the broken beams that enter into human philosophies. "This is life eternal," said the great Teacher, "that they may know thee, the only true God, and him whom thou didst send, even Jesus Christ." The only truth, therefore, that holds within it the promise and potency of an endless and happy existence for man, is the truth that centers in Jesus Christ as the Revealer of God, and thereby furnishes man with an inner life principle and an eternal environment. It is plain to the most casual thinker that life as a function consists of harmony with an environment. Every earthly phase of man's life must, in a sense, be transient, since all earthly environments fail, while our whole assurance of a happy immortality consists in our harmonization with an eternal environment, even God in Christ. Christian education, therefore, becomes a prime necessity in any scheme of culture which aims to take account of man's real nature and needs, and to embrace in its scope the supreme facts of life. Without it, we shall have the tragedy of one who was born a man dying a grocer or a banker, and the anthropos, or sky-gazing creature, becoming a transient spectator of earth's dust.

A Spiritual Universe

Christian education emphasizes the truth that we live in a spiritual universe, and that God is behind His creation. It is pathetic to think of a man in a laboratory holding in his hands the tubes of combining elements, or bending over the crucible, and yet failing to recognize that God is the great Chemist in the laboratory of nature, that a supreme intelligence has mingled the gases of the air for our breathing, combined the elements for the waters of ocean and fountain, and arranged in a wondrous way the combinations that give us the scent of the rose, the flavor of the strawberry, and the lusciousness of the peach. It is equally pathetic to think of a teacher in the physical laboratory manipulating his electric machine, producing sparks and intonations, feeling a pride in his work, and recognizing that his personality and mental power has something to do with every electrical manifestation, and yet failing to bow in reverence at the thought that when night is lurid with the lightning and the storm-clouds answering each other in flash and roar, there is behind this the power and personality of an infinite thinker. The mathematician who draws his lines upon the board is not fit for the leadership of his class unless he perceives that the universe has been laid out by a mathematical mind, and that we have our ideas of circles and angles because God had first His in the orbits of the planets and the lines of crystallization in snow-flake and rock. Inventors who are proud are simply drunken with folly, for what are our greatest inventions and most splendid mechanical achievements but meager copying of the works of God? Have we invented the trowel and chisel as implements for building? God gave us the models in the beaver's tail and tooth. Have we in surgery devised the scissor lance? We copied it from the probe of the black fly of the Adirondacks. Have we augers for the boring of wood and cast-iron linings for the tunnels beneath our rivers and hills? We copied the one from the head of the locust-borer and learned of the other from the ship-worm which bores by means of a funnel-like projection on its head and enamels the sides of the tunnel in its progress with the exhudations from its own body. Did Eddystone erect a light-house to withstand the storms of a century? He patterned it from a tree trunk, and indeed erected a granite oak. Did Paxton the gardener out-do the architects in presenting roof plans for the Crystal Palace of London? He copied the architecture of God in the Victoria-Regia leaf. Do our modern bandstands constitute wonderful contrivances for the projection of sound? We learned the method of construction by the study of the human mouth. Have we the process of making paper from wood pulp? It is as old as the world among wasps. Have we the kodak-camera, with its instantaneous process of making pictures? God anticipated this in His furnishing of eyes to animals and men, and provided a process of printing the picture, developing it in the dark room of consciousness, and transferring it to the halls of memory, in a way which cannot be equaled by our inventions. Think of what you will along the line of our mechanical contrivances, whether these be pulleys, levers, stranded ropes, or beams and arches, and you have everything anticipated by the thought of God in the wondrous structure of the human frame or in the devices of nature. Inventions in all lines have been anticipated. Our storage batteries had a prototype in the electric fish; our armor plate in the scales of the crocodile; our plumbers' clutch-wrench in the claw of the lobster; our telegraph and telephone system in the nerve-lines and centers of the body. Everything beautiful in art is copied from God's work in nature. Not only do our painters find inspiration and color-schemes in sunsets and landscapes, but when the weavers of old sought color and harmony for the beautiful cashmere shawls of our grandmothers, they copied these from the wings of the Indian butterfly,—a creature God had made.

A Self-Revealing God

Christian education not only recognizes that the power of God is behind all physical phenomena, but that He is possessed of moral attributes, and is a self-revealing God. Romanes, a scientist of the last century, emerged from the doubt and unbelief into which he had been plunged by his scientific studies, through the realization that true reasoning demands belief in the existence of a self-revealing God. During the period of his skepticism he read in a magazine of science the story of the discovery of some new crustacean in the Japanese waters. The discoverer was a college friend, and later a missionary. Romanes wrote his former school friend asking how he, a man possessed of keen scientific instincts and mental powers, could still go on believing in the myth of Christianity. The missionary replied that he was a Christian because he used the same kind of common sense in his religious reasoning that he did in his scientific thinking. He pointed out that in scientific studies he had found that the possession of an organ by any organism was the pledge that there existed something in the environment which corresponded to the character of the organ. The eye stands as the pledge that there is light; the ear that there is sound; the lungs that there is air; the olfactory nerves that there are odors. Following this line, it becomes evident that since man is possessed of conscience, demanding loyalty to God, and worshipful emotions, causing him to seek a throne of glory and power, therefore God must be a self-revealing God, or else man in the loftiest phases of his nature is an organized life. Romanes accepted the logic of his friend, returned to the faith of his fathers, and wrote a book demolishing the arguments of his previously published infidelity. Men are not laying aside their reason when they accept the facts that center in Christ. Faith is not as the facetious boy described it, "Believing what we know isn't so," but faith ever deals with fact, and is the acceptance of fact upon the basis of adequate testimony.

The Text-Book of Religion

Christian education also presses the conviction that the Bible is the product of divine revelation, and that in it we have an infallible text book for the religious life.

The Bible is unmistakably clear in its claim to infallibility and authority. It is perhaps this that makes it unpopular in world thought, either as law or literature, for sinful man is rendered restless by its strictures of judgment upon his mode of living and its lurid description of his moral end. John Wesley was right in saying that the Bible must be more than a mere human book. Bad men would never have written a book which condemns their own actions and promises them an eternal hell; while good men by their own natural utterances could not have produced it since their claim of divine inspiration must be true or else the evidence of their hypocrisy and pretention, thereby changing their classification from good to bad. The Bible's estimate of its own infallibility and authority is the only reasonable estimate of the Book.

The Testimony of the Competent

It is significant that the noblest intellects of the world have pronounced the Bible supreme, both in moral teaching and literary excellence. Sir Matthew Hale said, "There is no book like the Bible for excellent wisdom and use." Sir William Jones said, "The Bible contains more true sublimity, more exquisite beauty, more pure morality, more important history, and finer strains of poetry and eloquence, than can be collected from all other books, in whatsoever age or language they may have been written." John Quincy Adams said, "In what-light soever we regard the Bible, whether with reference to revelation, to history, or to morality, it is an invaluable and inexhaustible mine of knowledge and virtue." Of the Bible, Garibaldi said, "This is the cannon that will make Italy free." Horace Greeley wrote, "It is impossible to mentally or socially enslave a Bible-reading people. The principles of the Bible are the ground-work of human freedom." William H. Seward, Secretary of State under Lincoln, wrote, "The whole hope of human progress is suspended on the ever growing influence of the Bible." Asked by a pagan ambassador concerning the secret of England's national greatness, Queen Victoria gave him a Bible, saying, "This is the secret of England's greatness." In his centennial letter to the American Sabbath-schools, President Grant wrote, "To the influence of the Bible we are indebted for all the progress made in true civilization;" while Froude in his essay on Calvinism says, "All that we call modern civilization in a sense that deserves the name, is the visible expression of the transforming power of the gospel." Dan Crawford, the missionary, writes, "In Africa, I was shut up with my Bible, the Book with a million eyes." Honorable H. P. Claxton, National Commissioner of Education, says, "The day will come when the Bible will be read in the public schools just as any other book. There is no good reason why the Bible should not have its rightful place in our school curriculum." General Francis V. Green, when presenting a copy of the Bible to each of a graduating class of West Point, said, "No man can justly claim to be educated who is not familiar with the contents of the Bible." Such being the concensus of the competent concerning the value of the Bible, surely it is worthy of a place in our modern system of education, and should be read in some solemn period of each day when schools, colleges and universities strive to have the hands of their moral time-pieces set to the meridian time of God.

The Christian Use of Reason

It can also be justly claimed by the advocates of Christian education that a Christian use of reason in the physical realm guards the youthful mind against the assaults of unbelief and prepares for the acceptance of the fundamental doctrines of the gospel. It is a scientific principle that life cannot be produced without the touch of pre-existing life, and that no form of matter can climb from a lower kingdom to a higher without the invitation from above. This is illustrated by the fact that the materials of the soil remain in the mineral kingdom until invited by the life of the seed to the vegetable kingdom above. That which is vegetable ascends to the animal kingdom through the touch of animal life in mastication and digestion. The forces of animal life remain such until the flesh of the market-place becomes the food of our table, and then those forces that produce the squeal of the pig and the bellow of the ox become sublimated to produce the high notes of the primadonna or the basso profundo of the concert soloist. Since this is so in the realm of nature, why should we be surprised to learn that in the realm of grace we must be "born again" before entering the Kingdom of heaven, and that there is a Kingdom of God and goodness, in which the soul can come only as it is born from above?

Conformity to Type

A proper recognition of the natural law that like produces like, and a proper discernment of the place of heredity in human development, prepares for the easy acceptance of the Bible doctrine that a fallen Adam would beget children in his own image, and that a lost race to have redemption must become connected with a Second Adam through a faith that overcomes the power of heredity, and an imparted power which secures conformity to a divine type.

Revelation by Limitation

A clear discernment that in the study of time and space and electric energy, that which is infinite can be apprehended only in terms of limitation, will secure a mental hospitality for the great fact of the gospel that the infinite God revealed Himself through limitation, and that Jesus Christ was God expressed in terms of humanity. To illustrate, we cannot apprehend space in its infinitude, but we must first think of extension between our hands and then that which stretches between the walls of the room or in wider circles until the mind sweeps out to the orbit of Neptune and the circle of the stars. All thought of infinite space is, however, in terms of limitation. Likewise as to time, we have the measure first in the ticking of the clock, in the passing of the hour, the day, the sweep of a generation, and the cycle of a century, but all in terms of limitation. Electric energy as far as we know it seems infinite, moving under the same laws here and in the pleiades. Yet we know of this universal energy only as by limitation we cause it to leap between the points of the arc-light or to pass through the platinum wire of the electric bulb, or the supply wires of our trolley system. The student who understands these facts of the natural world in their parallel relations with the thought of the spiritual, will in reverence realize that God to manifest Himself must resort to the method of limitation; that in the human life of Jesus, lived nineteen centuries ago, there was the manifestation of the divine perfection, the flashing before humanity of the very light and life of God; and that God must have for ever remained an unknown God unless subjecting Himself to limitation, and in Jesus Christ shining forth indeed as the Light of the world. In truth, men are never hindered from accepting the gospel of Christ because it is contrary to reason, but by failure to recognize that the movements of God in revelation meet the highest demands of reason.

The Christian Teacher

Because of all this, there should be an insistent demand by those who control our educational activities for the Christian teacher. Christian character in the teacher is a prime necessity. Teachers create atmosphere, and atmosphere is an essential of spiritual health. A teacher with an unbelieving or flippant attitude toward Christian truth can vitiate the atmosphere of a university. Leadership by such instructors constitutes the tragedy of education in many of our leading universities. Somewhat recently a professor of philosophy in a prominent eastern university closed his course of lectures with the following words: "It must be apparent to you that the course of lectures to which you have listened has in some sense been destructive in that it has dealt with some of the beliefs that you have deemed important and basal and has shown that they are not. This, however, is the resultant conviction of my years of thinking that we are probably in a universe governed by spirit rather than by blind material force, and that we have a little more than a fighting chance for our belief in God and immortality. But to declare that these things are certain, is foolish, for they are not; and to teach little children that these things are certain, is wrong, for when they grow older and find out different, it may affect their morality. Anyway, we are in this world to clean up as much of it as possible, and it does not behoove us to think much about immortality or God." Most of the supporters of our great universities agree with the Davidic sentiment, "The fool has said in his heart, There is no God;" but they should go further and say that neither the fool, nor the near-fool, who is without convictions concerning God and immortality, shall display his vacuity in the class room of institutions supported largely by Christian contributions. Even a modern teacher of philosophy should be sufficiently informed in history to know that Jesus Christ has lived and taught in this world, and he should have sufficient reasoning capacity to conclude that He who spoke with absolute perfection concerning all the ethical relations of humanity could not have been blindly mistaken in all His estimates of His own nature and His transcendental relations to the Infinite. True teaching has to do with the facts of life, and the greatest and most important fact with which human thought can deal is "The Fact of Christ."

The Bible in the Home

Consistent effort for the advancement of Christian education should have very definite aims; the return of the Bible to its place of importance in the home should be sought. Our colonial fathers read the Bible morning and evening in family worship. Burns, in his Cotter's Saturday Night, declares the importance of family religion, when he said

> "From homes like these fair Scotia's grandeur springs,
> That makes her loved at home, revered abroad."

The Christian character which we crave for youth secures its true foundation through the use of the Bible in the home. At a social purity convention in Pittsburgh years ago, a speaker earnestly advocated the teaching of sexology in the public schools and the taking of our boys at a somewhat early age to the museums of anatomy where they could see evidence of the appalling batteries of disease with which God sweeps the pathway of sensuality. "Only thus," he said, "can we hope for sexual purity in modern life." At the close of the address a man dignified by age and culture arose and said that by the grace of God he had lived a life of purity; that into his youthful hands there had come no books on the sex problem; that he had never been privileged in his youth to visit a museum of anatomy, but that the Bible had been read through and through in his home in family worship; that he had been introduced to the problems of sex life by its sacred literature; that he had learned of God's ideal for the fellowship of men and women in domestic life; that in the hour of temptation his shield had been the thought of God and his answer that of Joseph in the hour of supreme test, "How can I do this great evil and sin against God?" Nothing less than the sanctification of the affections will secure for mankind the life of purity, and for this sanctification there is no other method than that described in the petition of Jesus, "Sanctify them in thy truth, thy word is truth."

The Bible in the Public Schools

The Bible should have its old place in our public schools. In the beginning of our national life, it seemed assumed that ours was a Christian nation, and most of the States provided for the reading of the Bible and prayer before the students of our public institutions. In later years there has developed much effort to exclude the Bible from the public schools. The Supreme Court of Wisconsin has decided that the Bible as a whole is a sectarian book and may not be used in the school room, although portions of it are not sectarian and may be read with profit. The Supreme Court of Illinois has declared the Bible sectarian without making any such exception. Attorney-generals have decided its use illegal in California, Missouri, Minnesota and Washington. State school superintendents have rendered similar decisions in Arizona, Montana and New York. The method of reasoning in such decisions is absolutely illogical, and applied in another direction would include Lake Michigan in the present prohibition movement, on the ground that water is a basal element in all intoxicating beverages. Bible truth may be a part of all sectarian creeds, but the Bible is not sectarian. It is high time for Christian voters to make Christian character and logical consistency qualifications in candidates supported for state and national offices. It is true that the majority of public school teachers are without the wisdom and discernment to choose the most helpful portions of Scripture for daily readings in the schools, but there could be a union of Protestant, Catholic and even Jewish intelligence in preparing a book of selections from the Bible that would give to our youth its great historic trend and ethical principles. It seems withal unreasonable to punish criminals for the violation of laws that have not been clearly set forth and impressed in the system of public instruction that trains for citizenship.

The Bible in the Colleges and Universities

Chairs of Bible should be established in all our colleges and universities. The movement is already strong for this in our church colleges, but university life is not complete without at least the elective opportunity of studying that Book whose truth is the fountain head of our civilization, and whose legislation is the source of the major part of our laws.

The Bible in the Modern Pulpit

The Bible needs restoration to many of our American Protestant pulpits. Preaching has become too largely the taking of a fragment of Bible literature and the production of a moral essay upon its principles. A modern popular magazine prints the humorous request of a minister that the magazine shall be issued bi-monthly instead of monthly, on the ground that each issue contains so much of good material that he cannot give it all out to his people in the four Sabbaths of the month. More than one minister needs reminding that his commission is to preach the gospel, and that his sermons are to be taken from the Bible. A minister may with profit indulge in wide reading of current literature, but his sermon thought should center in the Word of God. The people of our congregations read the magazines. They are confronted with that which is new when the Bible is presented. The latest world news is found in the prophetic portions of Scripture.

The Bible in Theological Seminaries

The study of the English Bible should have a larger place in the curricula of our theological seminaries. Too often the method of study is merely critical, and the student comes out with more knowledge of the oppositions of destructive critics to the Bible than of the Bible itself. In many cases so much place is given to the study of historic and comparative theology that the student is left without knowledge of true biblical theology, and is therefore without preparation to give a real message to his future congregation. Religious thought should always be Christo-centric, while the curricula of theological seminaries should always be Biblio-centric. Too much time is spent with matters almost totally unrelated to the future work of the ministry, while in many cases what is called modern critical scholarship undermines faith in the Bible as the authoritative revelation of God. In the class room of a supposedly orthodox theological seminary of a denomination noted for orthodoxy and conservatism, I heard a professor of scholarly reputation conducting his class review. He was dealing with the closing chapters of Matthew's Gospel, and asked a student concerning the apparent meaning of a certain passage on Kingdom truth. The student gave a clear answer as to what Jesus had said. The professor then asked, "Could Jesus have taught such a doctrine?" The answer, which came as an echo from a previous recitation, was that Jesus could not have taught such a doctrine, but that it found its place in the Gospel because no matter what Jesus said about the Kingdom, the disciples were so obsessed with their theories of Jewish eschatology that any truth uttered by Him would have taken the shape of their mental mold, and thus express the thought of the disciples rather than the teaching of Jesus. The professor approved this "made-in Germany" theory of interpretation, and thus not only robbed his class of the true teaching of God's Word, but denied also the fundamental idea of Bible authority and inspiration that "men spake from God moved by the Holy Spirit." A radical reform is needed in the teaching methods of our theological seminaries, if we are to have a gospel ministry which shall speak with power.

Desirable Results

Some very desirable results will be secured by a new emphasis on Christian education.

A spirit of sobriety will be brought to the youth of our age. The pleasure-loving spirit of our time will be challenged with the voices of eternity. With the Bible restored to its place in the home, our Josephs will learn to meet temptation with the shield of God's conscious presence, while our Daniels in college and university environment, where incense of tobacco is ever burned to a deified appetite, may purpose in their hearts not to defile themselves.

A holy discontent will also be awakened at the industrial and social conditions of world life. Already we have a murderous discontent that would seek redress of wrongs in all forms of riot and destruction. This should be supplanted by a sober recognition of world ills. It is to the discredit of our civilization that notwithstanding the fact that God furnishes unmeasured wealth in the mountains and in the seas, and sends bounteous harvests to hillsides and plains, millions are in want because human selfishness forbids the proper distribution of divine mercies. With the products of mechanical ingenuity, multiplied in labor-saving machinery, we find life each year becoming more strenuous, and the problem of how to make both a living and a life more complicated. We have great national and state scandals of graft and in most cases not sufficient moral power to bring criminals to justice. With God furnishing every means of comfort, the nation continues to have periods of writhing in want and misery, fear and mistrust. Christian education would produce a holy discontent with such conditions.

Christian Remedies for Modern Wrongs

It should go further and inquire into their causes, and seek adequate remedy. It is folly to talk of over-production as the occasion of glutted markets, when there are thousands of people yearning for the things produced, yet without the purchase money for their securing. Meditation upon the life and spirit of Jesus in the matter of furnishing bread to the hungry will bring some lesson for our economic life. Jesus was the incarnation of that power which still takes the seed of the husbandman and multiplies it into the laughing harvests. His method of meeting human need and His spirit of philanthropy should guide modern thought. He provided for an orderly arrangement of the needy groups of humanity. He asked that those nearest to Him in power and efficiency should distribute the blessings that fell from His hands. There would doubtless have been a vacancy in the ranks of the disciples had Judas and some companion striven to conceal a third of his provision in cold storage so as to wait for the increased pressure of need with the festival throngs. In the presence of Jesus the great motive of distributing effort was not the profit of the twelve baskets that came at the end of the service, but the joy of working with Jesus for human need. Humanity needs regeneration by the Holy Spirit to change its methods of selfishness into those of philanthropy. It is not fitting that human ambition should find its initial expression in the amassing of great fortunes regardless of the general condition of mankind, and its subsequent expression in the endowment of universities for the rich and soup-houses for the poor. Christian education should lead to a form of life in which those with vast administrative power shall from the very beginning consecrate themselves to the duties and privileges of public life, and the making of our politics the application of moral law to public affairs.

Modern Religious Apostasy

The effort for Christian education will do something towards stemming the tide of religious apostasy which is so marked in our day, manifesting itself both in world-life and the thought of the churches. Five distinct marks of a modern apostasy stand out in world thought.

Reason for Revelation

There is first the substitution of human reason for divine revelation. Time was when the quoting of a Scripture verse meant the settlement of controversy, but today almost any tyro feels that his opinion may be superior to the knowledge of Paul, or even to that of Jesus Himself. It is quite true we should be thoughtful, and the experience of Christian faith does not involve the laying aside of our reasoning powers, but we shall find them quite sufficiently taxed to understand the words of revelation, rather than in effort to refute these.

Attainment for Obtainment

A second tendency is the substitution of attainment for obtainment. The Bible makes it plain that lost humanity needs salvation. That salvation is the gift of God and not merely the result of human effort toward an ideal. "Educate! Educate!" is the cry of the modern world, without any emphasis upon the need of the absolute regeneration of man's fallen nature. "To inoculate our youth with the spirit of Christ," is one description of the modern ideal in apparent forgetfulness that humanity is too far along to be saved by vaccination on the outside, but needs the spirit of life within.

Political Philosophy for Bible Prophecy

The substitution of political philosophy for Bible prophecy, in viewing the future, is a third mark of modern apostasy. Five years ago the eloquent sirens of our Chautauqua platforms were assuring the world of abiding peace because of extensive armaments, and a general spread of culture in human life. The world peace conference at Constance was interrupted ere it began, by the boom of cannon in the world's greatest war. Today the same teachers blandly assure us that endless peace is now at hand, absolutely ignoring the Bible teaching that God cannot make sin happy; that for the present age "Wars, desolations are determined," and that down the centuries there rings the divine prophecy, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn, until he comes, whose right it is." A reading of Bible prophecy will remove all illusions as to an immediate world peace.

Social Reform for Individual Regeneration

The substitution of the social by-products of Christianity for the main product of individual conversion, is a marked feature of modern church policy. It is now claimed that the main effort of the church should center on the thought of better homes, better industrial conditions, better roads, i. e., the bettering of the conditions of the natural man, rather than individual conversion and the building up of a true social order through the securing of regenerated units. The present cry is for a great "get together" movement, forgetful that the great "get together" movement of Noah's day ended in Babel and the confusion of tongues; while the movement which is to save the world began with the age of promise, when Abraham, the lonely pilgrim, "built an altar unto the Lord." Instead of "get together," the modern cry should be "Get to God," for through union with Him there can alone be the unity of the race.

Human Advancement for Divine Advent

The fifth mark of apostasy is the centering of human hope upon the advancement of the sons of men, rather than upon the advent of the Son of Man. It is boldly proclaimed in Christian pulpits that the advancement of the sons of men is the advent of the Son of Man, and that man is to lay aside his anxiety as to world events, because of human efficiency. One preacher lately said, "Let not your hearts be troubled, ye believe in God believe also in men; for there has never yet arisen a crisis with which man has not been able to cope." Everywhere we find what one has termed "The silliest version of Christianity," that mankind is advancing toward perfection by some process of evolution, or development of resident forces apart from what may be the movements of God in the heavenly sphere, and so that preaching is popular which magnifies the powers and possibilities of man, and makes scant references to the potency and promises of God.

A Choice Between Hopes

Between all this and the plain teachings of God's Word, men must make their choice. The gospel of modern evolution has its hope:

"Red of the Dawn!
Is it turning a fainter red? So be it, but when shall we lay
The ghost of the brute that is walking and haunting us yet, and be free
In a hundred, a thousand winters? Ah! what will our children be,
The men of a hundred thousand, a million summers away?"

There is, however, a better gospel, and to it may this Institute, which received its charter for a fearless testimony from God, through its noble founder, always be true. There is a period of grace and glory for the world, but we are not bidden to look for it through the mists of a million years, nor are we to be disquieted by the darkness that may precede the dawn.

Darkness of night,
Will the shadows deeper grow? So be it. But soon there will shine
The gleam of the Morning Star, telling that day is near.
Jesus the Morning Star and Jesus the Sun of Day,
Will open the gates of dawn, driving earth's shadows away.

Meddling With God

2 Chronicles 35:21

By Rev. D. McTavish, D. Sc., Toronto, Canada

Synopsis of an address at the Niagara Conference of the China Inland Mission

THE words "meddling with" are not in the original text, but are used both in the Authorized and the Revised Versions, and seem to express adequately the meaning intended.

King Josiah had a very successful reign. He honored God from the beginning by the reforms he instituted and the thoroughness with which he restored the worship and ordinances of the Temple.

There was great growth and development throughout the whole land. To overcome the Syrian hordes from the North he organized an army that was very successful in repelling their incursions. His military success may have inspired dreams of restoring the kingdom to the splendor of the days of David and Solomon.

If so, this soon led him into trouble. In the East, the Assyrian Empire was hastening to its final overthrow. The new Median power that was destined to be the means of its overthrow was fast rising in the East. In Egypt Pharaoh Necho II, a most energetic monarch, had ascended the throne. He built a large fleet, reorganized the army and the navy, and even attempted to dig the Suez Canal.

He, too, was ambitious to extend his empire, and while Media was engaged in war in the farther East, he landed troops at Acre, and set out across the plain of Esdraelon to Damascus, and thence to the Euphrates.

In doing this he was passing beyond the northern confines of Josiah's kingdom and that king had no cause for interference. Tradition tells us that Jeremiah warned Josiah not to interfere with Necho as he was God's instrument of judgment against Assyria for all the evil that empire had done to God's people.

Whether that be so or not, the fact was in some way communicated to Necho, as we see from this text.

But Josiah would not be dissuaded from interfering with Necho, partly because he was elated by his own military successes, and partly because he did not want Egypt to have control on his northern border.

So, despite all warnings he went to war and was slain at the battle of Megiddo, 610 B. C.

The words of the text are the message Necho's ambassadors brought to Josiah—"Forbear thee from meddling with God."

There are various ways in which this may be done, for man is ever prone to assert his independence of God and take things in his own hands. The lesson of Josiah is that all such plans and efforts will sooner or later end in disaster.

The Pavilion at Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont., Where China Inland Mission Conferences Are Held

We have many illustrations of this in nature, when we work in harmony with God's laws, they are our friends and helpers, but if we interfere with them it spells ruin. The man who cut open the cocoon to release its inmate found he had destroyed the butterfly's power of flight. The struggle to emerge was a part of its perfecting.

Let the God of nature open out the petals of the rose and it becomes a thing of beauty, but meddle with it in your feverish hurry—tear open its petals—and the beauty of the rose is destroyed. But in Scripture it was those who did the meddling that suffered.

1. Meddling with God's Plan

His plan often matures very slowly, and the natural impulse of our impatient nature, especially in this age, is to hurry things along. God had given a definite promise to Abraham that he should have an heir through Sarah and that his seed should be as the stars of heaven and as the sand on the seashore. But long years passed away and according to nature the promise seemed less and less likely of fulfilment. So, urged by his wife, he tried to hasten the accomplishment of the divine purpose. He began "meddling with God." Through Hagar the Egyptian he had a son Ishmael, and what was the result? Strife, misery, and sorrow followed, and the seed of Ishmael became as thorns in the side of Israel all the rest of their history.

"Wait only upon God; my soul be still,
And let thy God unfold His perfect will,
And He will work with hand unfettered, free,
His high and holy purposes through thee."

2. Meddling with God's Ordinances

The story of Uzziah is just as sad in its ending as that of Josiah. In 2 Chronicles 26: 15, 16, we read, "His name spread far abroad; for he was marvellously helped till he was strong. But when he was strong his heart was lifted up, so that he did corruptly, and he trespassed against Jehovah his God, for he went into the temple of Jehovah to burn incense upon the altar of incense." He, in his pride, assumed a function that pertained alone to the priesthood, and because the High Priest restrained him he burst forth in anger and was smitten with leprosy, from which he never recovered. He had profaned a sacred place and office. God will have men distinguish between the sacred and the profane.

The church of Christ is a sacred institution despite all the outward divisions, and the faults and failures of many of its professed members; despite the erroneous teaching within it. It is a serious thing to meddle with the ordinances of the church of Christ.

Marriage is one of God's sacred ordinances, established at the very beginning of our race. In the divine plan it is to be between one man and one woman only. But, like Uzziah, man knows better and has persisted in meddling with it, and so we have polygamy spreading its slime and curse over the world. So in this ordinance there are only two things that can dissolve the marriage tie, adultery and death. But here again man is wiser than God, and family life is being blighted, and society poisoned by easy divorce.

Again, the Lord's Day is one of God's sacred institutions, and men cannot trample upon it and escape the consequences.

3. Meddling with God's People

When we read the story of Esther, we find in Haman a striking example of a man who from vanity and healousy sought to destroy God's ancient people. He hated Mordecai the Jew, the Uncle of Esther, because the latter would not make obeisance to his fancied greatness. So to get rid of him, he planned the massacre of all the Jews in the realm, and very nearly succeeded. But judgment swift and sure fell on him, and he himself was hanged on the gallows he had erected for Mordecai.

If history has made anything clear, it is that the nation or individual that meddles with Israel will suffer for it sooner or later. In what countries have the Jews been most terribly meddled with during the past few centuries? Is it not in Turkey and in Russia? Look at these nations today. Turkey is prostrated, never to rise again, while the Jew is back again to his own land and to his beloved city. Russia with its pogroms has massacred Jews by the thousand, and today Russia is torn in pieces and bleeding at every pore. If we accept Romans nine to eleven we cannot fail to see that God has a special purpose yet to accomplish through this people, and while there is a blessing promised to those that love them, there can only be judgment to those who meddle with them.

4. Meddling with God's Word

We have an illustration bearing on this in Jeremiah thirty-six. Jeremiah received from Jehovah a message concerning King Jehoiakim and Judah, and it was written on a parchment scroll by Baruch his scribe. When it was read to the people, they were greatly alarmed, and urged that it be brought to the notice of the king. When it was read to him, the king took his penknife, and cutting it in pieces, threw it into the fire in the brazier before him. The prophecy was not lost, for Jeremiah said to Baruch, "Take thee again another roll and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll which Jehoiakim hath burned."

A great many have undertaken to destroy the Word of God as Jehoiakim did but have failed. The Roman Emperors tried to do it, and papal Rome has destroyed Bibles by the thousands, but there never was such an issue of the Word of God as there is at the present time.

But a more subtle attack has been made upon it by radical criticism. For more than half a century Germany has been the fountainhead of this, and the war has revealed the moral consequences of meddling with God's Word. Jehoiakim suffered the consequences of his contempt for the Word and its warnings by being carried in fetters to Babylon. All recognize the value of careful and scholarly study of God's Word, when it is reverently done, but woe to those who practice penknife criticism, and cut out of the Word of God what does not accord with their judgment.

5. Meddling With God's Service

In Acts 13: 4-12, we read that when Paul was in Cyprus the Word laid hold of the heart of the Roman proconsul, Sergius Paulus, but a man named Elymas, who was making money out of sorcery, and feared he might lose his revenue, interfered with the work of God and "tried to turn aside the proconsul from the faith." Paul delivered a terrible rebuke to him, "O full of all guile and all villany." The sorcerer was smitten with blindness—the very condition in which he sought to keep his dupes—and had to be led out.

When a genuine work of God is going on, it is a serious thing to speak against it, or cause those who might be blessed by it to be turned aside. You may not approve of the method, but if God's Word is exalted and men are being brought from sin to God, it is a serious thing to belittle it in such a way as to turn aside those who might be helped by it. Not infrequently has the criticism of the sermon around the Sunday dinner table destroyed the confidence of the children in their minister and made it impossible for him to help them. To inject doubts into the minds of children is in the sight of our Lord one of the most deadly evils.

6. Meddling with God's Supreme Purpose

In Matthew 16:23 when Jesus told His disciples that He must go up to Jerusalem and there be killed, and on the third day rise again, Peter undertook to meddle with this purpose of God and said, "This be far from thee, this shall not be unto thee." Jesus' reply was an awful rebuke, "Get thee behind me, Satan."

It is our wisdom to seek to discover God's purpose, and to work and live in harmony with it. So too, when for His purpose, God lays His hand on any life—it may be your son or your daughter—it is a serious matter to interpose and say, "O, I cannot give up my child."

True success and blessing in life will depend entirely upon the degree in which our lives are in harmony with God, for "who hath hardened himself against him and prospered?"

He Staggered Not (Romans 4:20)

By Charles Frederic Sheldon, D. D.,
Perry, Ia.

He staggered not; but marched right on,
That ancient hero, Abraham.
He trusted in the Eternal One
His heart had heard God say, "I AM."

He staggered not; though unbelief
Sought everywhere to bar his way.
The promise gripped his eager soul,
And nothing could his progress stay.

He staggered not; but strong in faith,
Believing God with all his soul;
By faith o'ercame his every foe,
The promise led him to his goal.

He staggered not; but glory gave,
To God, whose promise he believed,
Sure that in God's own good time
The promised heir should be received.

So let me live my life each day;
And stagger not, but still believe,
That in my Father's own good way,
All that is best I shall receive.

Ignorance the Mother of Ingratitude

By Rev. James M. Gray, D. D.

This is a sermon, preached at a Union Thanksgiving service in Boston about thirty years ago and now printed, not on its merits, but because the preacher insists upon it. See editorial, "An Old-Fashioned Thanksgiving Sermon."

Illustrated by cuts of historical locations in Boston at the time the sermon was preached.

"FOR she did not know that I gave her corn, and wine and oil, and multiplied her silver and gold which they prepared for Baal" (Hosea 2:8).

The history and meaning of this text are very plain. The prophet is alluding to the nation of Israel under the figure of an unfaithful wife. He has already, in summary, related her fall, her chastening, and her future recovery. But at this verse he returns again to the subject, enlarging both on the impending infliction and future mercy, assigning as the cause of the affliction, the ingratitude of Israel for the material blessings of Providence she had received. Ingratitude, which in turn grew out of ignorance of the source of those blessings. "For she did not know that I gave her corn and wine and oil. The stress is on the pronoun "I" which is emphatic in the Hebrew.

Israel was not altogether unaware of, or oblivious to the blessings she received, but she attributed them to the gods who represented the functions of nature. As another expresses it, "They took God's-gifts as from their gods, and made them into gods for them."

To give the glory to Baal was only an earlier form of ascribing the same honor to the "laws of nature," a phrase rather more cultivated and, therefore, more familiar to modern ears. "By attributing to planets influence over the affairs of men, and worshipping the supposititious gods who presided over those planets, they differed in no essential feature from those in the present day who displace divine providence with destiny, or fortune, or fate."

I

Wilful Ignorance is Sinful

But to appreciate the situation, it is needful to reflect that Israel's ignorance was a wilful, and hence a sinful ignorance. The lack of knowledge was not so much lack of understanding as lack of disposition, lack of will. They might have known better had they chosen so to do.

From the "Boston Traveller."

The Old State House, at the Head of State Street

For example, when in his Epistle to the Romans Paul charges the heathen world with like criminal ingratitude, he tells them they were without excuse; for the invisible things of God, i. e., His eternal power and Godhead, were seen in the creation of the world, being understood by the things that were made.

No man will be condemned by our righteous God for lacking that which he had not the opportunity to obtain. Hence when we read of the heathen world as given over to the folly of their own minds because of their unthankfulness, it is an incontrovertible evidence that when they knew God they glorified Him not as God. In other words they did not live up to the knowledge they possessed but for their iniquitous inattention.

If this culpability therefore attached to the heathen world, whose only evidence of God was those common blessings of light, and heat, and fruitful seasons, and health, and the faculties and senses of the soul and body, how much greater the blameableness of Israel who had these same witnesses to God, and so many more, "to whom pertained the adoption and the glory, and the covenants and the giving of the law, and the service of God and the promises, whose were the fathers, and of whom, as concerning the flesh, the Messiah was to come?"

And then, by parity of reasoning, if Israel's responsibility was correspondingly increased by the opportunities she enjoyed, how much greater the guilt of a nation such as ours, with all that is included in the knowledge of the gospel, and in the abiding presence of the Holy Spirit, if we too are unthankful to God for our mercies through any misapprehension of their source!

How Thanksgiving Day Is Kept

And yet one may safely challenge the Christian conscience of our nation as to whether such a misapprehension does not now exist?

The character of the observance of Thanksgiving Day itself is no trifling illustration of it. There was a time when this day was what its name indicates, a day of thanksgiving to God for His manifold mercies to the nation. It was born in such a desire as this—the social element may not have been forgotten, but it was secondary. The order is now reversed however, and the celebration of the day is first social and afterwards religious. Thus is a large majority of us doing just what the Hebrews did in Hosea's time, making gods of God's own gifts! "Giving countenance to an hypothesis of materialism that man is produced from wind and ashes. That he is simply the sum of his father and mother, of time and place, of wind and weather, of sound and light, of food and clothing!"

And I have sometimes thought that we ministers were not altogether free of blame in the premises. What are the themes to which we frequently call the attention of our congregations on this day?

I had the curiosity to examine a newspaper to ascertain this point and was not surprised to find the large amount of attention given to civil service reform, the need of a new party, the power of an enlightened public opinion, an arraignment of a particular government official, and the like, as the panaceas for certain evils then supposed to be threatening our nation.

Not that such themes should never be handled by ministers, not that they may not properly be referred to in the Christian pulpit—but "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"

Is it any wonder that the people should become oblivious to the source of all good when their spiritual leaders set them the example? And is the critique of the secular press entirely without fairness and is it to be suspected altogether of ulterior motives, when it calls upon us not to abuse the privilege of the pulpit by giving expression to our political opinions, but rather to seek to draw the world's attention to the claims of its Creator and its Ruler?

We Rest in Second Causes

Gratitude for benefits received is so plainly a duty, that it is superfluous to establish it by argument. Neither have I the hardihood to assert that many persons will, in plain terms, deny the obligation of gratitude to God.

Our want of thankfulness does not spring from any doubt as to the abstract principle itself, or from any doubt as to the particular duty devolving on us to give thanks to God, but the trouble is we do not perceive God to be so truly and continually a benefactor to us as He really is.

In the first place, we are apt to rest in second causes rather than to trace our blessings to the supreme cause. When we receive good of any kind it appears to be the fruit of our own labor, or prudence, or exertions, or of the kindness of friends, and hence to these the gratitude seems to be due, and to these it is generally offered, forgetful that God's goodness towards us is not diminished, but rather increased by the intervention of the means He has chosen or given us to employ.

Suppose that before we conferred a favor on our child, we required some previous exercise or labor as a condition of the gift. When he had received the gift would he be justified in saying he owed it not to his parents but to his own labor? Would not the parent reply, "I appointed you that labor for that very end, I promised the reward, I pointed the way, I ensured success?" And is it not equally as true that, but for the blindness of our understanding, we should refer every mercy to the supreme cause?

And then a second feature of that ignorance which produces unthankfulness is a defective view of providence.

Men call it a "providence" when they receive some unexpected deliverance or blessing. But very seldom do they give a loss, or a disease, or a misfortune such a designation. Yet "providence" really means an instance of God's care over us, and we are not competent to judge of the precise nature of His dispensations in a given case.

Many, for example, are disposed to think that they have no particular grounds for thankfulness, that their lot has been hard, and their mercies few, whose impression is founded on the false principle that nothing is good but temporal good. Had God given them unusual success in their undertakings, or unexpected accessions to their fortune, health to enjoy their prosperity, then would they have acknowledged themselves debtors to His mercy. But the circumstances being different their feelings are different, and as Ahab lay upon his bed overwhelmed with distress because he could not obtain the vineyard of Naboth for a garden of herbs, so are they unable to see any mercies to be thankful for, even in the gifts of the gospel, while they have not been permitted to gratify certain particular desires of their own hearts.

A third feature arises from the very number of the divine mercies themselves.

While passing out of the Northern Railroad depot the other day, my heel slipping on a smooth flagstone, I was barely saved from a serious fall. Instantly I thanked God for the escape. While hurrying through Joy street on my way home in the dusk of the evening, I slipped again on the ice, this time striking the pavement from which a passerby helped me to arise. Again I thanked God, but the thought flashed into my mind, how many steps have I taken this day and every day since I was able to walk, when I have neither stumbled nor fallen, and when the consideration of God's merciful oversight has never entered my mind?

Affecting consideration indeed, that some extraordinary instance of divine interposition should excite more gratitude than the more valuable mercies of every day! But is it not the fact, that the very extent of those blessings which we share with others demands additional gratitude? Are they not in all respects the most valuable of our blessings? "Compare, for example, such a gift as the light or heat of the sun with any petty comforts granted to an individual, and do we not perceive a superiority of value in them as distinct as between the dew which fell only on the fleece of Gideon, and that which covers the general surface of nature, refreshing the thirsty fields, and clothing them with verdure and beauty?"

II

Seductive Lovers

But I beg your attention more particularly to the words, "which they prepared for Baal." The margin reads, "which they made into Baal."

That is, with the gold and silver God had so multiplied unto them, Israel made for herself idols, false gods, setting before them, for a sweet savor, the corn and wine, and oil which God had given her. For in her sinful ignorance she had said: "I will go after my lovers that give me my bread, and my water, my wool, and my flax, mine oil, and my drink."

The sense of human weakness abides even when divine love is gone. Israel is conscious that she has not these things of her own power, she is beholden to some other for them, but forgetting Him who had given her power and all Christ Church, Salem Street, in Whose Steeple Paul Revere's Signal Lantern Was Displayed, April 18, 1775 things to enjoy, she professes them to be the gifts of her "lovers," which is only another name for devils. These lovers therefore she sought, their will she followed, and their pleasure she fulfilled.

"Whoever," says Dr. Pusey, "receives the gifts of God except from God, and in God's way, receives them from devils." And with equal truth he asks, "What do they who seek pleasure, or gain, or greatness, or praise in forbidden ways or from forbidden sources, what do they than make their pleasure, or gain, or ambition, their god, and offer their time, and their understanding, and ingenuity, and intellect, yea, their whole lives, and their whole selves, their souls and bodies, all the gifts of God, in sacrifices to the idols which they have made? Nay, since whosoever believes of God otherwise than He has revealed Himself, does in fact believe in another and not in the one true God. What else does all heresy but form to itself an idol out of God's choicest gift of nature, man's own mind, and worship not indeed the works of man's hands but the creature of His understanding?"

Were there time, one might mention several of these devils, or lovers if you prefer it, by which our nation is in danger of seduction.

The god of intellect is one. Not that I have reference to any particular school of antichristian philosophy, but to that which has far more potency over the masses, viz: the wonderful advances we are making in the practical sciences and arts. Advances along such lines and with such rapidity that the worldly-minded no longer see the need of a direct and upholding providence, and are on the brink of an affirmation that man has only to seek out more inventions to become master of the world.

Statecraft is another of these lovers. Our corn, and wine, and oil are to be increased, our gold and silver will be multiplied by a better adjustment of international relations, by reforming the tariff, by a thorough system of internal improvements, by prohibiting the liquor traffic, by extending the right of suffrage, by educating and colonizing the Indian and the Negro, by equalizing the value of currency, and all that. To many of these things we say "Amen," to some of them a very hearty "Amen," but the danger is that in their calculation and execution we turn our back and not our face to God, who therefore will reject our confidences, and we shall not prosper in them.

Fanueil Hall (The "Cradle of Liberty") and Quincy Market

Mammon worship is an illustration of these lovers. The over-estimate of wealth, base means of getting wealth, habitual selfishness in spending wealth, sinful love of wealth, the notion that the amassing of wealth—be it in shillings or in thousands of pounds—is an end of life, Canon Farrar pronounces as among the gravest perils of England, and can one be accused of exaggeration if he apply his language to the United States?

"If the king of Mexico has any gold," said Cortez, "let him send it to us, for I and my companions have a disease of the heart which is cured by gold." It was this disease of the heart that drove those conquerors of Peru and Mexico to acts of the most shameless atrocity. But how many citizens of the United States can, on this Thanksgiving morning, lay their hand upon their hearts and say, "I am free from this affection, dollars and cents are not in any sense my god?"

Then there are our fallacious lovers of a more religious sort whom we are running after. On the one hand ritualism, but one remove from Romanism, which Dr. Newman, of New York, has recently said he would watch as he would a thief, and track as he would a murderer. On the other hand, rationalism which denies the Bible to be the guide of conscience, and would undermine every distinctively Christian institution in the land. While between the two stands spiritualism, for which the inhabitants were driven out of Canaan, a prophetic feature of the latter times and a return to the demonism of the days of Christ. If there ever were a Baal worship must not this be one?

What God Thinks About It

Let us inquire what God thinks about these things? What had He to say to Israel for her spiritual adultery? Would He always and forever condone her infidelity, and by lavishing His abundances upon her, encourage her in sin? Nay, "I will return" said He, "and take away my corn in the time thereof."

"I will return." God is absent from His people when they abuse His gifts and this is why they do abuse them. His judgments are far above out of their sight. When He returns to them in such a case it is in chastisement. "I will take away my corn in the time thereof." That is when the coveted prize is almost ours, and we think we have only to put out our hand and gather it. In harvest time there shall be dearth.

"I will recover my wool and my flax given to cover her nakedness." I will recover them. These things while in the possession of the ungodly are in captivity, they are kept back from their proper use, and God will not permit them to be employed against Himself in the service of other gods forever. He will resort to the remedy of replevin.

"And now will I discover her lewdness in the sight of her lovers and none shall deliver her out of my hand."

Prosperity sometimes covers a multitude of sins, but our false lovers are never nauseated by them until the mask drops off, and our folly is exposed by the removal of some outward gift. In such a case neither rebel spirits nor rebel men can deliver us out of the chastening hand of God.

"And I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast days, her new moons, and her sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts."

Strangely enough, Israel with all her idolatry was in the habit of keeping the great feast days in commemoration of God's mercies to their forefathers somewhat as we do today. True to human instinct much as they might disobey God, they were afraid to part with Him altogether. They would serve Him as far as they could, serve Him without parting with their sin. Jeroboam retained all of the divine worship possible with his politics. Judah sware both by the Lord and by Malcham.

They even had a certain kind of gladness in their feasts in accordance with the original divine commandment to that end, but they could have no real joy of course, because that is to be had only in the Lord. But now that they might no longer deceive themselves in so serious a matter, God proposes to do away with their formal services, He will displace their hollow outward joy, and carry out that judgment which Christ threatened upon the church at Ephesus: "I will remove thy candlestick out of this place, except thou repent."

"And I will visit upon her all the days of Baalim, wherein she burned incense to them and she decked herself with her earrings, and her jewels, and she went after her lovers, and forgat me, saith the Lord." The days of punishment shall equal the days of the wanderings in the which she burnt incense to Baal. "Even to the penitent God makes the chastisement bear some proportion to the length and greatness of the sin."

These Things Are for Today

But the world is ready to laugh at these things and to classify them with "old wives fables." What has Israel to do with the United States?

Or the nineteenth century with a period eight hundred years before Christ? Give us something modern. Come down to the present. Deal with living issues. Interpret the doings of today.

Such, my hearers, is the purpose for which I have called your attention to these facts. However we may vary, our God is the same yesterday, today, and forever. "I am the Lord, I change not."

In all His dealings with the Hebrew people the human race was in the eye of God. "Seen in its true relation, seen as an intentional lesson-paper for the world, the old story of that peculiar nationality is not a Hebrew idyl," says Dr. Faunce, "it is not merely a scrap of antiquity to be preserved by the curious and careful about the olden time. It is for us as well as for them, a thing of today in meaning though of yesterday in fact. Its minuteness is not trivial, but intentionally careful; its incidents are not accidents, but are put into the record to be pondered as they have actually been pondered, by the most thoughtful and advanced souls of the race in their search after God's truth."

Was the Hebrew nation ungrateful for God's mercies, and were they visited with this punishment in consequence? Can the United States be equally, or still more ungrateful and escape free? Is there a Christian who believes this? Let me shame him with the witness of one who, while relying only upon the proof from history, was able to approach nearer the eternal truth. His biographer informs us that the one engrossing aim of Thomas Carlyle in the production of that greatest of his works, "The French Revolution," was to teach the erring kingdoms of the world that the God of the Hebrews still lived, and that the nations who would not serve Him should perish!

Is it pessimistic and visionary to talk about the perishing of the United States? "He would have been a rash man who, when Augustus was changing the Rome of brick to the Rome of marble, when victorious legions were extending the frontier, when manners were becoming more refined, language more polished, and literature rising to higher splendors—a rash man who would have said that Rome was entering her decline. But such was the case." And there are thoughtful and able men prejudiced neither the one way nor the other so far as Christianity is concerned, who believe that though our civilization is now advancing with greater rapidity than ever, yet the same causes which turned Roman progress into retrogression are operating among us.

Henry George's Prediction

You may not assent to the political economy of Henry George, but I have found the fourth chapter of his book on the "Law of Human Progress" a wholesome counter-irritant to the trend of the times. His words are like the echo of some ancient prophet when he cries: "What change may come, no mortal can tell, but that some great change must come thoughtful men begin to feel. The civilized world is trembling on the brink of a great movement. Either it must be a leap upward, which will open the way to advances yet undreamed of, or it must be a plunge downward which will carry us back towards barbarism."

From "Harper's Weekly."

The Frog Pond, Boston Common

There are some of us who believe that God long ago pointed out the issue of this coming crisis, and that it means the personal appearing of the Son of Man, with all the elements consolatory and denunciatory, which are to be combined in that great event. But however that may be, is it not still the part of wisdom for the people of the United States to square their conduct by that inspired aphorism that "Righteousness exalteth a nation but sin is a reproach to any people?"

Our Individual Duty

In conclusion, suffer me to ask what are we going to do individually to raise the tone of our nation in its song of gratitude for divine mercies?

We are few compared with the thousands who inhabit our great city, a drop in the bucket in comparison with the multitudes who cover our broad domain, but a lesser number have turned the world upside down. Ten righteous men were enough to have saved Sodom from destruction. And such in all ages of the world have ever been the preservers of truest liberty, the promoters of the highest prosperity of the nations in which they were privileged to live.

How much of the divine long-suffering was shown to Israel because God had made a covenant with Abraham, with Isaac and with Jacob. What a glorious opportunity then for display of highest patriotism on the part of the young men and women today! It is referred to as a hopeful sign that our young collegians are now turning their attention to the world of politics. It is said that they furnish an enthusiasm and faith in reform which most of their elders fail to possess. Let us thank God for whatever promise there may be in this, while we do not allow ourselves to be seriously deceived by any external glamor.

What is the ground of the righteousness of these men to whom our country is looking for salvation? A dagger is not the less deadly because the haft is jewelled, neither is national infidelity the less pernicious because represented by men of youth with a genius for political reform. Hence shall we only truly apply the lesson of our text today, by an individual allegiance to the "faith once delivered unto the saints," a separation from surrounding wickedness of every form; a holiness, as spotless in the secrecy of personal consciousness as in the jealous watch of men; a love which shall open our bowels of compassion to the poor, the lost and erring, and a zeal for God in Christ that shall spread the knowledge of His name, and challenge every detractor of His grace and every pretender to His crown.

Thus writes Helen Hunt Jackson on our Pilgrim Fathers:

'Neath hoary moss on crumbl'g stones
  Their names are fading day by day;
The fashions of their lives and speech
  From sight and sound have passed away.

The shores they found so bleak and bare,
  Shine now with riches gay and proud;
And we, light hearted, dance on ground
  Where they in anguish wept and bowed.

Unto the faith they bought so dear
  We pay each day less reverent heed;
And boast, perhaps, that we outgrow
  The narrowness which marked their creed.

A shallow boast of thankless hearts,
  In evil generation born;
By side of those old Pilgrim men
  The ages shall hold us in scorn.

Find me the men on earth who care
  Enough for faith or creed today
To seek a barren wilderness
  For simple liberty to pray;

Men who for simple sake of God
  All titles, riches, would refuse,
And in their stead disgrace and shame
  And bitter poverty would choose.

We find them not. Alas! the age,
  In all its light hath blinder grown;
In all its plenty, starves because
  It seeks to live by bread alone.

And what we have of ill, of shame,
  Our broken word, our greed for gold,
Our reckless schemes and treacheries,
  In which men's souls are bought and sold—

All these have come because we left
  The paths that those forefathers trod;
The simple, single-hearted ways
  In which they feared and worshiped God.

Despise their narrow creed who will!
  Pity their poverty who dare!
Their lives knew joys, their lives wore crowns
  We do not know, we cannot wear.

And if so be that it is saved,
  Our poor Republic, stained and bruised,
'Twill be because we lay again
  Their cornerstones which we refused.

UNIVERSAL BIBLE SUNDAY

The American Bible Society has requested the churches of America to set apart the last Sunday in November as Universal Bible Sunday, and has sent forth an appeal throughout the entire country, calling upon the ministers of all denominations to arrange for the appropriate observance of this day, emphasizing the priceless worth and marvelous power of the Christian Scriptures among the peoples of the world.

In order that busy ministers, Sunday-school superintendents, and teachers who will want to take part in the observance of this day may be fully equipped with the latest facts and information, the American Bible Society has prepared an appropriate handbook, which will be furnished upon request.

Dr. John L. Patterson spoke at the first regular assembly period of the College of Arts and Sciences, Louisville, Ky., and among other good things said: "The Bible has stood the tests of higher criticism, history and archaeology, and in fact, no conclusion founded on statements of the Bible at variance with tradition and generally accepted by scholars has ever been disproved."

The Third World's Citizenship Conference, to be held in Pittsburgh, Pa., November 9, 1919, seems sure of a record-breaking attendance. Over twenty foreign countries will be represented.

Railway rates have been reduced for attendants to two-thirds of the regular fare, on the certificate plan. Write for railway folder to the National Reform Association, 209 Ninth Street, Pittsburgh, Pa. The largest auditoriums in Pittsburgh are to be utilized for the various sectional and other simultaneous conferences to be held daily.

An Interesting Letter from Jerusalem

We are privileged to publish the following letter addressed to Dr. David Baron, of London. We regret that it arrived too late for our last issue.—Editors.

Jerusalem, Palestine, 6th July, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. BARON:

It is simply impossible for me to write a detailed statement of all my experiences since I left London, for there were many, for my time is so limited here, and I have more work than I can possibly accomplish; but I feel I must write and give you a plain statement of the conditions I have found here. It is now two weeks since I came here; and I can assure you that these were not days of rest; and I do trust they were days of useful service for the Master; and my heart is filled with deep gratitude to God for His wonderful grace, mercy and love.

Now, I have no hesitation in saying that my coming here is of the Lord, and my journey is truly "a missionary journey," and I return praise and thanks to the dear Lord Jesus, and give Him all the praise and glory.

Liberty

The persons or person who invented the story that the Government has forbidden, or hinders, the preaching of the gospel in Palestine, either told lies or was misled by some one, who ought to be exposed as a fabricator.

Government Officials

I am grateful to state that I have found practically all the Government officials (civil and military) here, and in Egypt, very cordial and considerate, and they have been very helpful to me in many ways. Whenever I have had occasion to travel on the military railway, they gave me a permit, or a moving order, and never raised any difficulties. So, I have no complaints, but rather have a good deal to be thankful and grateful for to these Government officers.

Liberty of the Gospel

No one has yet said a word against my preaching Christianity or hindered my distributing tracts, etc. The different Y. M. C. A. huts gave one a special opportunity, and the chaplains are only too glad to get a helping hand; and Jewish soldiers are everywhere to be found. Even in the Evelyn de Rothschild hut Mr. Payne and I had the privilege to preach Christ and to sing the gospel, and we were always welcomed.

Jerusalem Excavations Down at the Pool of Bethesda, Showing How Through the Centuries One City Has Been Built Upon the Ruins and Debris of Other Cities Long Buried and Forgotten

I have learned that the authorities are now anxious that the missionaries should go ahead with their work in the usual way; and I may tell you that just now there is an unprecedented opportunity and I do pray you could come out here for at least six months. Delay would mean loss of a great opportunity. I deeply regret that I have to return so soon, for I am greatly encouraged from all sides, from the Jews and those missionaries that are here.

Tract Distribution

We have experienced the greatest of freedom in going from place to place and distributing Gospels and tracts. Even in the Jewish quarters we have found a ready response and a welcome, and there is a real eagerness for Hebrew literature, and I am really sorry that I have not asked for a large box of literature as we could have used it to great advantage. Yesterday, we were at Hebron, and we were really surprised that there, too, both Jews and Moslems took tracts from us and actually thanked us for the same, and you know what Hebron used to be. Here, too, is an absolutely neglected field; and, oh, how encouraged we were to find that Captain Abrahamson, a fine, consistent Hebrew Christian, is the British Governor of the ancient city of Hebron!

The Change

The change is truly great, and in some respects most remarkable; had I not been here and witnessed it, I could not have believed the change was possible.

During my former visits to my home (Jerusalem) very few of my near relatives cared to receive me; even those who did care feared the other Jews, but now I am invited everywhere, and they are truly anxious to extend hospitality and show good will. Mr. Payne is accompanying me and we are being welcomed wherever we go; and we have visited holy places, synagogues, Yeshibas and private houses. The following will give you an insight and an example of the great change that has taken place, and it will show you the exact attitude of the Jews here.

During the awful war I have lost many of my near relations—my dear mother, two brothers, a sister, nieces, nephews and cousins—and of course I was anxious to visit the graves of those dear ones who had passed away. I asked one of my nephews, a Jewish soldier, if he knew the resting places of those dear ones; he assured me that during the war there was such confusion that no one knew correctly, except Rabbi Itzchok Shinitzer. Now, the question was, how to get hold of him, and should we be able to induce him to come with us? Next morning Mr. Payne and I were passing the "Bikkur Holim"—the hospital of the orthodox Jews. It came to me that we should visit this old institution, of which Rabbi Phinchas is the head, whom I knew well when a young boy. I suggested to Mr. Payne that we should visit this hospital and see what kind of reception we should get. Well, as soon as I was announced by the gate-keeper, Rabbi Phinchas came to meet us, greeting us most cordially, and gave us a real warm welcome. He himself showed us all over the hospital, and told us of all the awful privations they had to pass through during these five years of awful war. The welcome was real in every respect. As a memento he gave me his "Jusdan" (a Turkish word of many meanings, but here it signifies a kind of exemption passport). Although he was a Rabbi and over fifty years of age, he was conscripted as a soldier. He was entirely unfit to be a soldier, so the cruel Turk put him on street cleaning, and the community to save the Rabbi from degradation paid £50 to free him. He had always to carry with him this "Jusdan" wherever he went, and he assured me that it was simply awful for every policeman, officer, and even common soldier would challenge him and the "Jusdan" would have to be produced; at the same time, he had to watch that it was not stolen from him. Now this precious article he gave me as a remembrance, which I prize very much. I will show it to you when I return, God willing.

During our conversation, I told him that I was anxious to visit the cemetery and pay my respects to my dear ones resting there, but I did not know how to get hold of Rabbi Itzchok. Ere I had finished, he at once volunteered and said: "Leave it to me. I will bring him to your hotel." Well, about 3 p. m., on Monday, June 30, 1919, they came. We hired a carriage and Rabbi Itzchok, Rabbi Phinchas, a nephew of mine, Mr. Payne and I, proceeded to the Mount of Olives, and here Rabbi Itzchok pointed out all the different resting places of my father and mother, brothers and sisters. As we were standing there, Rabbi Itzchok, who is also a "Chazan," recited the Jewish commemoration prayer: "Eli-Molei-Rochamim." Of course, we listened with due respect, but at the end I told him that I did not believe in praying for or to the dead, but was in favor of remembering our loved ones who had passed away. As Rabbi Itzchok was "Chazan," and liked singing, I asked him if he would like to hear Mr. Payne sing, and told him that, as Mr. Payne is a Christian, all he sings are Christian hymns. Both Rabbis readily agreed and dear Mr. Payne sang "Behold, I Come Quickly." Well, I never heard Mr. Payne sing to better advantage before, and, oh, it was a sight I shall never forget! Think of this wonderful picture! Almost at the top of Mount of Olives, among the resting places of literally thousands of Israel, and on a grave of a dead Rabbi stood Mr. Payne facing, and in full view of the Temple Court, and below stood Rabbi Phinchas, Rabbi Itzchok, my nephew, the grave digger and I; all listening to a Christian singing a hymn to the glory of Israel's rejected Messiah! Oh, it was wonderful! It was simply wonderful to hear Rabbi Phinchas quote to Mr. Payne: "And his feet shall stand on the Mount of Olives." After a long conversation we returned to the hotel, parting in a most friendly way.

I repeat, knowing as I knew Jerusalem in former years, had I not been present and seen it with my own eyes, I would not have believed it possible! Yes, the war was changing everything in a most remarkable way—the Holy City and its Jews. And here is where the problem begins—the door is wide open! The opportunity unprecedented! But where are the laborers? There are none here at the present time; my heart aches and is filled with sorrow. And the devil is so busy here; while all missions and schools are closed—the reason I do not know—the devil has brought his messengers—and these are doing such mischief and no one hinders them. And what makes my heart more sad is that two of the devil's messengers are so-called Hebrew Christians. One is a man you may know, Dr. Musa, a Persian, who obtained a medical degree and married a daughter of the late Mr. Adler, who labored with Mr. John Wilkinson. This Dr. Musa now claims to be the incarnate Messiah. The strangest thing is that his wife, a cultured, educated lady, believes, and was not ashamed to give Mr. Payne and me reasons why she believes, that Dr. Musa is the Messiah. We were shocked!

The second impostor is a Mr. Japhat Behar; he was with the Christian and Missinaryo Alliance at New York. He went to Australia and came only lately here with a wife and child. How he got in here and the Government has not hindered him, I do not know. He, too, claims to be the Messiah. You can understand what harm these devil's servants are doing, and there is no one to denounce such impostures; while I suppose some people support them. Then there are others about whom I dare not begin to tell.

There is, I repeat, an unprecedented opportunity, and who is going to make use of it? May I urge you to send a witness, even if not to establish a mission, just a messenger for the time being. I can assure a real welcome, for there are many longing hearts and hungry souls. The opportunity must be taken right now!

There is here a Rabbi Taitleboum from New York, head of a Relief Commission, evidently recognized by the Government. He and the Commission stay in the Central Hotel, a first class Jewish hotel. Almost daily I visited the hotel, and the Rabbi and others have received me with great kindness, and we have had very helpful conversations, so different from the old arrogant spirit! And these things show how the wind blows.

Jerusalem—St. Stephen's Gate, Taken from Without the Wall

The Hebrew Language

I feel that Yiddish will be, yea, is, a dead thing here. Every one speaks Hebrew, and Yiddish is much spoken against. Those who have not yet managed to speak Hebrew are sufferers. In this respect the change has been complete! Yes, it is lovely to hear all the little children speak Hebrew; and when their ignorant mothers speak to them in Yiddish, they reply in Hebrew. Evidently their teachers exhort them never to speak Yiddish. Even the Arabs now speak Hebrew. This is a fact. They are studying Hebrew, as one educated Moslem told me: "We must learn the language in order to be able to deal with them."

The missionary who intends laboring among the Jews here will have to master Hebrew. As the missionary to the Chinese learns their language, so those who come here must learn Hebrew. Those who make a pretense will not do here. Too much make believe has already been practiced during the past fifty years, and something real is needed. The true man need not fear; he will find plenty of encouragement. There are quite a large number of intellectuals who are anxious to know the real truth about Christ and Christianity. A young fellow of that class said to Mr. Payne and me, "We have come to this, that we cannot believe what our forefathers told us, that all Christians are ignorant and humbugs, for we know to the contrary; we have seen noble men and women give their all for the cause of their faith." This young man is one of a group from the Yeshibah, and they call themselves "Dorchi Enseth." I gave this young man Mr. Landsman's address and he will write to him for literature, etc.

The desire for Hebrew literature is great, so good Hebrew tracts are in demand. Therefore, the tracts of the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel are not only appreciated, but sought after.

Good English tracts, too, are in great demand, as every child is now being taught English. Yes, one is really amazed at the great progress they have made in introducing everything that is English here, in their daily life, etc., in so short a time. All carriages are now numbered and registered, streets are indicated, fresh water is supplied, there are no thieves. In a word, you are free and safe.

Zionism

I dare not enter into any details, but I feel I can state just a few facts. Modern Zionism is a very weak institution here, and very much disliked by the orthodox Jews. Soon after General Allenby entered Jerusalem, the Zionists became very, very active, to the discomfort of many, but the great fire burned itself out very quickly. A kind of reaction has set in against modern Zionists and Zionism. But all are anxious about the "Yishub Ha'aretz"—the settlement on the land by Jews and for Jews.

Many of the strong modern Zionists have found strong opposition from the orthodox Jews, and it is rather too much for them, now their enthusiasm has left them, and they are anxious to get away if they can only do so. I have heard quite a number say, "We regret we have come; Zionism is a dead dream." Of course, all this is due to the strong, unrelenting opposition from the orthodox Rabbis. The whole condition is a very sad one. The internal strife hinders them from all sides. Yet we must not be led astray and think there are not many idealists, and that they are not a very strong force; for they are a very strong force, and they are succeeding in breaking up the faith of the young in Judaism and this is what enrages the Rabbis.

Besides, there is a kind of true Zionism which, I believe, is of a lasting nature, and such cannot die and is bound to make great progress and become the factor in rebuilding Zion.

But this great division gives the true missionary a splendid opportunity, as each side is very anxious to state his side of the story, and the true, patient missionary has a glorious opportunity. Mr. Payne and I have callers all day, not of the poor, who usually come for aid, but of the better classes; the only difficulty is that the days seem too short!

There is another encouragement. These callers are not afraid; the old fear seems to have completely gone.

At a reception given to me in the American Church, Rabbi Phinchas and Mr. Yerachmiel, and President of the Great Synagogue, and his son, were present all through the services.

At the special service at St. George's the Chief Rabbi was present all through the service. These are all new experiences, of which I could tell of ever so many.

The Outlook

I may say that the outlook is by far better than I thought it ever could be. The real difficulty is how to secure true, able missionaries, not make-believers. We need men of vision, men of faith to meet the present situation and crisis. The honest, consecrated, spirit-filled missionary need not fear to come here. He can expect reasonable Government support, if at all needed! He may also expect a fair amount of immediate success.

Mr. Cooper, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, told me that the demand for Bibles in Hebrew is by far greater than it has ever been. The average sale of Hebrew Bibles during last week was ten pounds (£10) per day. I consider this something wonderful for Jerusalem.

Miss Brown, who labored here for many years, (I believe twenty-five), told me she was never welcomed as she is being welcomed now, and she has never had as great freedom and opportunity to preach the gospel directly as she has now.

Mr. Payne has already many enquirers, and three have asked for baptism.

The two services we had in the American Church and the communion service were all most helpful; for these we praise the Lord and give Him all the glory.

The general outlook is rather uncertain. All the necessities of life are very high. It is by far more expensive to live here than in New York, and you know New York is more expensive than London.

How the poor exist is a mystery; all the relief is not enough to meet the situation. Those of the middle classes are the greatest sufferers. The future depends on the kind and the number of new industries that will be established. If these are established soon, then there is hope and fair success may be expected; but if these are much delayed, the suffering will be very great.

Up to the present many make a fair living from the British soldiers, but as the army is being reduced, their means of living becomes less and less, but not their expenses. While it is true that a few have made some money, a very great number have suffered and many have been ruined.

There is now a new class hitherto unknown in Palestine called "Ferrar"—deserters. Quite a large number of Jewish boys who were conscripted by the Turk (the Turk took men for the army up to sixty-five years of age!) deserted wholesale; of course, they did not expect the war to last so long; their privations are simply indescribable. Those who were caught were hanged at the Jaffa Gate by Jomal Pasha. This awful dark nightmare has made these poor men almost unfit for anything; they are so reduced that they are a burden to themselves. Their condition is pitiable in the extreme. I am grateful that I have been privileged to help some of them for Christ's sake.

Missionaries

Some have already returned to their various mission fields and are now reorganizing their work. Some new ones are settling here; amongst these are Dr. and Mrs. Wilkinson (son of Rev. S. H. Wilkinson). But I do not know yet of any Hebrew Christian who is really justified for the work to settle here. I feel that there will be plenty of room and enough work to tax the energies of all!

For the past two weeks Mr. Payne and I have been very busy; we have carried out the work the Lord has laid on our hearts. We have visited synagogues, schools, Yeshibas, orphan homes, private houses, etc. We have received a most warm welcome from Jews, Moslems, Christians and also from all the missionaries.

Last Wednesday at the reception given me in the American Church there were present over 200 representatives. We also had a few services in the church.

By the kindness of the Red Cross, Mr. Payne and I will leave on a very extensive tour, and we trust it is to be a real "missionary journey." We leave on Wednesday early in the morning in a motor car belonging to the Red Cross for Nebhes, Jenim, Nazareth, Tiberias, Safed, Damascus, Beyruth, Sidon, Tyre, Acre, Haifa, the Jewish Colonies, Haffa, Jerusalem, and then back to Egypt and home, if the Lord wills.

Now I have written a far longer letter than I intended, but these are plain facts and they will lead you to consider the whole situation and remember its awful needs. May the dear Lord guide you and direct you in all your undertakings for His own glory.

(Signed) S. B. Rohold.

Did Paul Teach Christ Would Come Within His Lifetime?

Extract from Touching the Coming of the Lord, By C. F. Hogg and W. E. Vine, M. A.

"THE words 'we that are alive, that are left unto the parousia of the Lord,' (1 Thess. 4:15), do not commit the apostle to the belief that the Lord Jesus would return during his lifetime. Shortly afterwards we find him using the same language concerning resurrection (2 Corinthians 4:14), 'shall raise up us also;' but that did not commit him to the belief that he would die before the Lord had come.

"When the Lord Jesus returns, believers will be as they are now, and indeed as they were at Thessalonica, divided into two classes, the living and the dead. But the time of that return has not been revealed, it is among the secret things concerning which God has kept His own counsel. (See Deut. 29:29; Mark 13:32; Acts 7:7). Consequently, in speaking of the return of the Lord Jesus, the apostle sometimes associates himself with the one class, looking forward to resurrection, as in 2 Corinthians 4:14, sometimes with the other, looking forward to change, as in 1 Thessalonians 4:13-17, and 1 Corinthians 15:51. His sympathy with those who were anxious about their dead leads him to associate himself with the mourners at Thessalonica; his sense of failing physical powers leads him to associate himself with those who had died at Corinth.

"The Second Epistle to the Corinthians, moreover, in which he associates himself with those lying asleep, was written at no greater interval than three or four years after that to the Thessalonians, in which he associates himself with the living, at the parousia.

"It contains a passage, 2:1-10, expressing his own attitude toward the alternative possibilities, death and the coming of the Lord, and in it also he uses 'we.' In verses 2-4 he expresses his longing for that which cannot take place until the Lord comes, to be clothed with 'our habitation which is from heaven,' the 'building from God,' the 'house not made with hands.' In verse 6 he asserts that he is of good courage in the face of death, and in verse 8 repeats the assertion, adding that he is 'willing rather to be absent from the body and to be at home with the Lord,' i. e. to die. Longing for the parousia of Christ, which is certain to come, yet not afraid of death, which may possibly come first, is, then, the characteristic attitude of each generation of Christians.

"In the Epistle to the Philippians, written perhaps seven years later still, while he describes his own attitude towards death, (1:21-24), in language akin to that used to the Corinthians, and suggests that it is no very remote contingency (2:17), he yet uses 'we' and 'our' in describing the characteristic attitude of Christians to the coming of the Lord. His advancing years and the threatening nature of his circumstances, while they brought before his mind increasingly the possibility that he might die before the parousia, did not prevent his saying, 'heaven, from whence also we wait for a Saviour' (Phil. 3:20).

"And in the Pastoral Epistles, latest of all, where he uses language only explicable on the suggestion that he knew his own death to be imminent, he still speaks of the reward awaiting those who have loved the appearing of Christ (2 Tim. 4:6-8), and of the grace of God 'instructing us, to the intent that . . . we should live . . . looking for the blessed hope' (Tit. 2:11-13). Indeed, before he closes the Epistle in which he says, 'I am already being offered,' he urges Timothy to come to him 'before winter,' a season presumably still some distance away, and to bring with him Mark as well as some articles of which he anticipated he would be in need. As always, so now when there seemed to be no escape from death, the apostle stood ready either for suffering or for service, or for the rapture of the saints that would deliver him from the one and bring the other to an end.

"It seems clear, therefore, that no conclusion can be drawn from the apostle's language as to his personal expectations. He shared in what should be the attitude of each generation of Christians, the desire for, and the expectation of, the parousia of the Lord, but there is no reason to suppose that he knew more on the subject than he taught (cf. 1 Cor. 13:12). Neither is there any evidence that the statements of the later Epistles are intended to correct those written earlier. On the contrary, as we have seen, they supplement, but in no case do they contradict, previous declarations. Moreover, these words to the Thessalonians claim to be a revelation from the Lord Himself, and, while they might be expanded or explained by later revelation, they could not be set aside, much less could they be attributed to a mistaken apprehension on the part of the apostle. Throughout his life, as it is reflected in his Epistles, he maintains the same attitude toward the great alternatives. There is no inconsistency. His example and his words alike teach us to be prepared to meet death with unflinching courage, but, above all things, to look for the parousia of the Lord.

"Hosea 12:4; Romans 13:13; Hebrews 12:25 may be compared for examples of this use of 'us' and 'we.'

"It is true of each man at all times, as it was true of David pursued by Saul, 'there is but a step between (us) and death.' And yet true as the apostle knew this to be of himself, he knew also that the Lord might come first. Experience has taught men that death is the one thing which can be really reckoned upon as an ever-present possibility. In the gospel it is revealed that to the Christian the Lord may possibly come first. If wise men thus reckon with death, how much more should the believer count upon the parousia of the Lord!"

Who Prints The Christian Workers Magazine?

We have received many compliments on the good appearance of The Christian Workers Magazine, from a typographical standpoint. We are glad to pass on these words of commendation to the printers, Kable Brothers Company, Mount Morris, Ill. We consider them as near perfect as printers can be. Only occasionally do we receive complaints that copies are imperfect and then it is an oversight in the bindery to send out such a copy. Should you ever receive an imperfect copy just write to the printers and tell them.

"The Shorter Bible"

Some of our readers have asked our advice about the Shorter Bible, so-called. It was reviewed by us at the time of its publication, but we now take the liberty of abridging another review from Our Hope of a year ago. The Sunday School Times had a more exhaustive review in its issue of April 26, 1919, which we have received kind permission to reprint, but which is too long for our present space.—Editors.

"BEFORE us is a small volume recently published in New York City. It is The Shorter Bible, covering the New Testament Scriptures. The Shorter Bible of the Old Testament is in preparation. The chief editor of this production is Professor Charles Foster Kent of Yale University, one of the leading destructive critics.

"We notice the contents of this Shorter Bible first, in which different parts of the three Gospels are taken out of their divinely given places and jumbled together to suit the purpose of the critic. The name 'Jesus' is used thirty-four times, but not once is He called Lord. It is constantly His earthly name. The Gospel of John is put at the close of this Shorter Bible, though a few passages are quoted under some of the above sections.

"The way the Epistles are treated gives conclusive evidence what spirit is behind this attempt to introduce a Shorter Bible.

"We give a few illustrations. Here is Romans 3:19-28—that sublime passage containing such vital truths. The whole passage is given in this Shorter Bible except two verses. The verses omitted are the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth, the most important: 'Whom God set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time his righteousness, that he might be just and the justifier of him who believeth in Jesus.'

"What reason can there be given to mutilate this great passage by leaving out the statement without which the passage has no meaning whatever? Perhaps Professor Kent and his assistants have little use for the blood, for the substitutionary sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ. Not believing it, it is as much as possible eliminated in this Shorter Bible.

"Let us see what they have done with similar passages where the blood is mentioned.

"We turn to the Epistle of Paul to the Ephesians. Every Christian knows that the first chapter is one of the greatest in the entire Bible. Only the opening five verses are given in the Shorter Bible. Why not more? Because it says in the next paragraph in that chapter 'in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins.' That has to be thrown out.

"Next we take a look at the first chapter of Colossians. Only eight verses are quoted of this chapter. Professor Kent evidently does not like the wonderful revelation of the person and glory of our Lord which follows the eighth verse, and besides here again it is written 'in whom we have redemption through his blood.' The most sublime opening seven verses of the second chapter, telling of man's lost condition and how God is rich in mercy for the great love wherewith He loved us, are missing.

"We turn to another passage, 1 Peter 1:18-20. In vain do we look for it, for here again it is written that we are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without spot and blemish.

"How wonderful is the unfolding of the Spirit of God of the finished work of Christ as well as His priesthood in Hebrews 1-9. What do we find of these great chapters in the Shorter Bible? Here it is:

" 'God, who in time past spoke to our forefathers at many times and in many ways through the prophets, has in these latter days spoken to us through a Son, whom he appointed heir of the universe and through whom he created all things. He is the reflection of God's glory and the exact image of his nature, and upholds the universe by his potent command. After he had secured our purification from sin, he took his seat on high at the right hand of Majesty. He is as far superior to angels as the name Son, which he has inherited, is superior to theirs.'

" 'It was indeed fitting that God, for whom and by whom the universe exists, in bringing many sons to a glorious development, should make perfect through suffering the Author of their salvation. For both he who makes them pure and those who are made pure have one common Father. That is why he is not ashamed to call them brothers. It was also necessary that he should be made like his brothers in every respect, that he might prove a compassionate and faithful high priest in all things relating to God, in order to atone for the sins of his people. For because he himself has suffered under temptation, he is able to help those who are tempted.'

" 'Son though he was, he learned by all that he suffered how to obey, and having thus been made perfect, he became for all who obeyed him the source of eternal salvation.'

" 'Since we have a great high priest who has passed into heaven, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast to the faith which we have professed. For we do not have a high priest who cannot sympathize with our weaknesses, but one who has been tempted in all ways as we are, yet without sin. So let us with confidence approach the throne of love, that we may receive mercy and find spiritual strength to help us in the hour of need.'

"Think of it, dear reader! All the great truths of His better sacrifice and His Melchizedec Priesthood are boldly omitted. And the preface to this Shorter Bible says 'these passages contain the true heart of the Bible that has proved the inspiration of past generations and will prove in increasing measure the guide of those to come.'

"From this we must conclude that the first ten chapters of Hebrews do not belong to the heart of the Bible. But the truths revealed therein are the heart of God's revelation.

"And here are a few more omissions. Not a word of the raising of Lazarus from the dead. Matthew 12:38-42 is quoted, except verse forty, 'For as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.'

"The entire twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew is also put out, nor is one of the greatest revelations of the whole Bible permitted to have a place in the Shorter Bible. We have reference to 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18. Not a single word is given of this unique revelation concerning the coming of the Lord.

"But enough of it. No true believer needs to be told what spirit is behind such a deliberate attempt of mutilating the Word of God. It is the same work which wicked King Jehoiakim did when he cut the roll on which the Word was written with a pen-knife and cast it into the fire.

"Woe unto the man who touches God's living, holy Word and takes away from it! God will surely deal with such who try to destroy His truth. But what another evidence of the fast approaching predicted apostasy!"

Justice to the Negro

A call to the citizens of the United States to act in conformity with the high ideals of democracy and of Christianity in the present condition of strained relations between the races has just been issued by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, acting in conjunction with a large representative committee of white and colored citizens from all sections of the country. This committee met recently in New York City on the call of the secretary of the Home Missions Council and the chairman of the Committee of the Federal Council on Negro Churches. Much time was given to a full and free discussion of the racial situation. As a result this address was issued which represents the thought of these leaders and the deliberative judgment of the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

A Statement and Recommendations on the Present Racial Crisis

THE recent race conflicts in some of our cities challenge the attention of the churches of Jesus Christ to their responsibility respecting an amicable and fair adjustment of race relations in America.

In the fellowship of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America are included 3,989,852 members of the Negro churches. In speaking therefore at this time for humanity and justice we voice the mind and conscience of both races. The present situation is a challenge to the churches charged with the promotion of the brotherhood of man, which look upon all men as entitled to a footing of equality of opportunity. This calls for preaching the duty of economic and community justice for the Negro, thus securing peace and goodwill between the races. Beyond all else the present situation calls for confession on the part of Christian men and women of failure to live up to the standard of universal brotherhood as taught by Jesus Christ.

In the adjustment of race relations our country has in this crisis not only its own conscience to satisfy, but also to justify itself as a nation before the enlightened opinion of mankind. As a foremost exponent of the ideals of democratic government, the United States has been lifted to the full view of the world. Our present settlement therefore of race relations will influence in a very large measure the settlement of race relations in other parts of the world.

The Inter-racial Situation

We must frankly face the fact that a most dangerous inter-racial situation now threatens our country. The problems growing out of the presence of two races in America are clearly seen to be nation-wide and the adjustments must necessarily be made on the basis of national responsibility. The migration of thousands of Negroes to the North emphasizes this fact. The outbreaks in several cities and the persistence of the anarchy and treason of lynch-law imperil our democracy.

The actual practice of the principles of the brotherhood of Christ can prevent such conflicts and nothing else will. The church must offer the ideals, the program and the leadership in this crisis. The church must meet its obligation, or leadership will pass not only to secular agencies, economics or socialistic, but to forces that are destructive of civilization.

We must confess that the church and its ministry as related to the welfare of the Negro has been too little inspired by the fundamental principles and ideals of Jesus Christ. Communities that have expressed horror over atrocities abroad, have seen, almost unmoved and silent, men beaten, hanged and also burned by the mob.

The Negro has ever shown profound faith in God and has always looked to the church for leadership, for counsel and for guidance. The church which for fifty years has a record of almost unmatched service in the education and betterment of the race will now be recreant to her trust and lose her birth-right of service if she does not meet this confidence with a full sense of responsibility and a full measure of service for justice, peace and good-will. To this end we therefore urge upon the church, her ministry and membership this constructive program:

A Constructive Program for Just Inter-racial Relations

1. The Government, local, state and national, should impartially guarantee to all classes security of life and of property. Mob violence is becoming a crowd habit. When life and property are ruthlessly taken, when men and women are lynched with no protection from officers or courts, law and order are trampled under foot. We call upon the pulpit, the press and all good people to create a public sentiment that will support necessary legislation for the enforcement of existing laws, that life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness may be equally assured to all classes.

2. The Negro should have economic justice, equal opportunity to get and hold work on the same terms as other men, with equal pay for equal work, and with fair working and living conditions. The entrance of large numbers of Negroes into the various industries emphasizes the necessity of an immediate amicable adjustment of relations with white employers and fellow-workers.

3. We call upon men and women everywhere to protect the sanctity of home and womanhood. We record with satisfaction the growing enlistment of Negro leaders in a program of education and Christianization such as tends to prevent crimes that provoke mob violence. The home of the Negro should receive the same measure of respect and protection as that of other Americans, and the sanctity of his home relations should be safeguarded in every possible way. Swift and impartial action of the law should strike the violator of the sanctity of any home, white or black.

4. We recognize as fundamental to the welfare and efficiency of society that adequate recreational provisions be made available for Negro citizens.

5. We strongly endorse the plea of the Negro for equal traveling accommodations for equal charges.

6. Adequate educational facilities for Negro children and youth should be provided not only as a national obligation but also as a necessity for national welfare. We emphasize the urgency of giving to the Negro his full share of local and national funds.

7. Qualifications for franchise should be administered irrespective of race, creed or color.

8. Closer co-operation between the races should be promoted by organizing local committees of white and colored people in towns and communities for the consideration of interracial welfare. All possible agencies should be enlisted in fostering a spirit of justice and of goodwill in the relations of one race to the other. We recommend that the Governor of each State appoint a standing committee for the careful study of the causes underlying race friction with a view to their removal and that Congress be requested through a non-partisan committee to investigate the disturbed and threatening interracial situation throughout the nation.

Racial understanding and co-operation furnish the only sure basis of race adjustment in a democracy. The root of the matter is the failure to recognize the Negro as a man. The basis of distress on both sides is fear, and "fear hath torment." Respect for Negro manhood and womanhood is the only basis for amicable race adjustment, for race integrity and for permanent racial peace. If we talk democracy, let us act democracy. If we propose a democratic program for the protection and self-determination of the weak and oppressed people of Europe as a means of permanent peace and goodwill abroad, let us apply the same program at home.

NEW YORK'S CHINATOWN CHRISTIAN "MAYOR"

He is Lee Tow, a Christian, who for years struggled against great odds in the vicinity of Pell and Mott Streets. Recently he was elected president of the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association, which office practically makes him "Mayor" of Chinatown.

The papers have been filled with what followed his election; how the Association voted to do away with their idols and to close the joss house at which they had worshiped their ancestors for many years, and how they stripped it of its gay trappings and smashed and then burned the idols and all that went with them, refusing an offer of $500 for one of the idols.

Rev. Huie Kin, pastor of the Chinese Presbyterian Church in New York, said that he attributed the result to the fact that the new official had braved the Confucians by going out into the open air with the gospel.

The Responsibility of Wealth

Bishop Samuel Fallows, D. D., Addresses an Open Letter to Mr. Carnegie

The following appeared in the Episcopal Recorder nineteen years ago this month. Its republication just now seems timely.—Editors.

DEAR SIR:—I have read with intense interest your views, just published, as epitomized from your new book, The Gospel of Wealth. I must compliment you on the clear and forcible manner in which you express your thoughts. Many a man, whose sole profession is literature, might well be proud to possess, as you do, the art of "putting things."

I must also declare my great delight regarding the views you hold upon the administration of wealth. No minister of the gospel could give better advice upon the subject than you have done. Large fortunes ought not to be left to children. "It is," as you say, "no longer questionable that great amounts bequeathed often work more for the injury than for the good of the recipient."

Looking at the usual results of enormous sums conferred upon legatees, the thoughtful man must shortly say: "I would as soon leave my son a curse as the almighty dollar." You are pre-eminently right in your position that the State should tax estates heavily at death, and that "such taxes should be graduated, increasing rapidly as the amounts swell, until of the millionaire's hoard, as of Shylock's at least,

> The other half
> Comes to the privy coffers of the State."

You hold also to the opinion of the most advanced students of sociology when you say that "it were better for mankind that the millions of the rich were thrown into the sea than so spent as to encourage the slothful, the drunken, the unworthy. He only is the true reformer who is as careful and as anxious not to aid the unworthy as he is to aid the worthy, and perhaps even more so, for in alms-giving more injury is probably done by rewarding vice than by relieving virtue."

You have uttered ringing words, which will live long after your translation to another sphere, when you say: "The day is not far distant when the man who dies leaving behind him millions of available wealth, which was free for him to administer during life, will pass away 'unwept, unhonored and unsung,' no matter to what uses he leaves the dross which he cannot take with him. Of such as these the verdict will then be, 'the man who dies thus rich will die disgraced.'"

Where the Bishop Disagrees

But I cannot agree with you when you teach that civilization is founded upon laws which throw wealth into the hands of the few, that the contrast between the palace of the millionaire and the cottage of the laborer with us today measures the change which has come with that civilization.

I do not agree with you in the fundamental proposition with which you set out in your book, that "the problem of our age is the proper administration of wealth, that the ties of brotherhood may still bind together the rich and the poor in harmonious relationship."

The problem of our age is the proper acquisition of wealth. The way in which many colossal fortunes are acquired is in the highest degree inequitable and unjust. Your own gains, if you will pardon me in saying it, most conspicuously illustrate the statement.

Your active brain and Scotch tenacity and pertinacity, combined with your hereditary gift of always getting the best of a bargain, carried you forward.

There came a time in your own career when the United States government, by its protective tariff, gave you the chance to sell railroad iron at twelve dollars a ton, which afforded you enormous profits.

Neither your skill nor exceptional ability were the main factors in producing such profits. The American people furnished you the opportunity to acquire them.

I thoroughly believe in protection, at a certain period in the country's history, as a means to an end. That end is the betterment of the condition of the American laborer. The protective tariff has greatly helped him, as a comparison of his position with that of European laborers will unmistakably prove. But the thousands of laborers in your employ were benefited proportionately far less than you were.

The Days of the Homestead Strike

I approach with the greatest reluctance a brief consideration of one of the most tragic events in the history of American labor, with which you were directly connected. I cannot avoid it and justly review the work which you have given to the world.

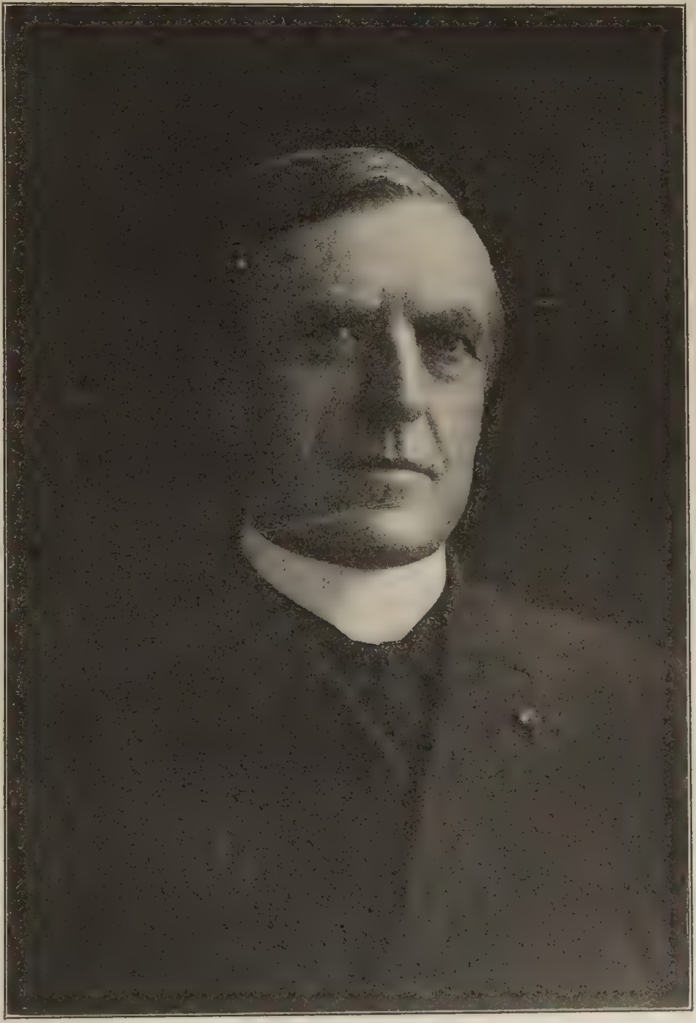
In that book you have thrown to the wind a cold-blooded, heartless, conscienceless political economy, and have taken your stand on the moral and social principles which must actuate the conduct of men. Wealth must be used, as I have already quoted from you, "that the ties of brotherhood may still bind together the rich and the poor in harmonious relationship." The man in you today is speaking, and not the employer in the days of the Homestead strike.

I may ask the question whether the ties of brotherhood were not unduly torn and lacerated on that occasion? Your immediate representative cut down the wages of the men who were performing the most exacting and exhaustive kind of work. I know they were paid well in comparison with the laborers, who received only $1.50 a day. The excuse for the reduction was the diminution of profits, an economic excuse. He would not arbitrate, "for there was nothing to arbitrate."

The strikers must accede to his terms or go. It was an arbitrary, peremptory claim of absolute, czar-like authority on one side, and unconditional submission on the other.

I saw those men, talked with them face to face in their private place of meeting, besought them not to commit any acts of violence, but to stand like a rock for arbitration. They were defeated. Homes were broken up and families scattered. Their earnings were dissipated and their property sold under foreclosure.

What has time disclosed? If the newspaper accounts are correct, you recently had a falling out with the man who so grievously mismanaged the Homestead affair, and to quiet him gave him $12,000,000. You, yourself, are credited with the possession of $125,000,000. There may be exaggeration in these statements, but enough has come to light that there was not the slightest justification in taking a few thousand dollars out of the labor of the men who enabled you to pile up riches that a Croesus might envy.



Rt. Rev. Samuel Fallows

Some Practical Advice

Let me close with a suggestion or two.

In my judgment, you can show your consistency with the sentiments of brotherhood you now advocate by employing every agency possible in hunting up the members of the households affected by the strike, and do whatever the promptings of a generous, brotherly heart may urge you to perform.

In the next edition of The Gospel of Wealth, urge upon all employers the duty of keeping up wages to the highest possible point, and to meet the requests of their employees in a courteous and conciliatory spirit. Teach them that "the ethics of the million lies not in the question of how you are going to spend it, but how you came by it; that a million which ought never to be a man's possession cannot be justified by any righteous use of the same; that the iniquity is already perpetrated, and that neither the man nor the dollar can be saved by such a vicarious method."

Samuel Fallows.

College Education and the Christian Ministry

By Rev. J. H. Ralston, D. D.

LET it be understood at once that the author of this article believes that ordinarily, other things being equal, a college education should be a part of the preparation of a man for the Christian ministry.

What Is the Gospel Ministry?

This question is to be considered from two or three standpoints. There is quite a large company of most refined people, people of high morals, and at least formal religious standing, who consider the gospel ministry a profession, and many fond parents look upon it as a profession into which they would be delighted to have their sons enter. Until very recent times, a reasonably profitable living was guaranteed to a minister, and a high position in social life. This was looking upon the work of the ministry as one would look on the law or medicine or professorial work. In our own day the ministry as a profession is at quite a discount, but still some young men have it in view.

Probably not very frequently in this democratic land, the ministry has been thought to offer a field for intellectual culture. Some have chosen this work because it really offered an opportunity of going further afield in thought and investigation than any other. The German theologians, and indeed others, have illustrated this very well, the result of which is obvious.

But is there no other sense in which the ministry is to be viewed? Is not the ministry a calling? Is not a man who enters it one who has something imperative back of him, pushing him on? The Apostle Paul said, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." The lives of many successful ministers show that this thought gripped them. There was a call of God to the ministry that brooked no denial or compromise. Fortunate is the man who has never had a doubt in his mind that his work was the preaching of the gospel, and who entered that great work and spent his life in it; but the man is to be commiserated who has heard the call to this great work, and has persistently declined to heed it. There are many men in advanced life today who had that call in earlier years, but they did not heed it and struggled through life with indifferent success, or with practical failure. If a man does not have a grandmother Lois, or a mother Eunice, to lead him gently as the instrument in the hands of God into the ministry, he must have other definite leading of God to that work. With many this call is loud and imperative and unmistakable, and it is heard when man is at his best, when he is wide awake, when his best powers are at his command, and it is a question of obedience or disobedience to a heavenly vision. It must be said at this point that certain circumstances of life may have much to do with diverting a man of God from a call to the ministry, and he is justified in not entering it.

The Work of the Gospel Minister

What is the work of the minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ? May we not define it as the giving of the entire life to the proclamation of the gospel to men and women who are dead in trespasses and sins, to the end of rescuing them from the penalty, the guilt and the power of sin, and for the building up of those thus delivered in the Christian life that has been then started? If this is not the work of the ministry, one or other of the alternatives already referred to must be accepted.

The question immediately arises, how is man to be qualified to do that work? Tradition has a loud voice at this point with very many men and women of the highest moral and religious, even spiritual, culture, especially in some of the leading denominations of the land. Such traditional preparation is, first, a long intellectual training, usually in academy, college and theological seminary. Many churches are positively closed to men who have not taken a college or university work, usually to the point of graduation. When such churches are calling or seeking a pastor, the leading question is, "Does this candidate have a university or college training?" With such churches the naming of one of a half dozen universities or colleges in the country is a door of entrance without any further inquiry. In some theological seminaries only college men are looked upon with favor, some indeed advertising themselves as for college men only.

Another qualification for the ministry of the gospel is thought to be popular ability, as far as speaking before audiences is concerned, with acceptance and persuasiveness. It is a rare man who lacks speaking power who serves acceptably as a minister. Another qualification that a great many simple minded people, but people who live near to God, believe important is, a knowledge of the Bible, so as to know what the message is that God desires the minister to give out, and this is, in the minds of many, the chief qualification, but is often put aside when the other qualifications, especially that of the collegiate curriculum, has been approved. In this respect, a man who enters the ministry should feel like the prophet Jeremiah of old, in whose bones the Word of the Lord burned as a fire and needed some expression.

We might ask whether a combination of these qualifications would not produce the ideal minister. We are very free to answer in the affirmative, but that the illustrations of this class of ideal ministers are not very many in our day.

It is the purpose of this article, from this to the end, to bring into close consideration the question of the relationship of the university, or college education, or even theological seminary education, to success in the gospel ministry. With the concession of the first paragraph of this article in mind, we are ready to proceed to ask the question whether the intellectual culture of college does not in very many instances tend to the weakening of the spiritual life, or the diverting of attention from it, and even to dealing a death blow to it, with very sad visible results.

The Call for Preachers

There is a question that in this day, as in no other, probably in all the history of the church, calls for serious notice. Never was there such a need for ministers of the gospel as today. Detailed recital of reasons for this fact is not here attempted. Like the accent in the nominative case in the Greek noun, we simply know it by observation. Thousands of churches are vacant in the land, hundreds of communities in the land are now without religious services of any kind, and in the cities are hundreds of thousands of people who never hear the gospel, and for whom no effort is being made. The reputed small advance of the great denominations is along material or physical lines, rather than something more spiritual, and in matters no more serious than matters that belong to fraternal organizations, reform societies and social clubs. The raising of vast sums of money, the erection of great buildings, and scientific organization of churches and denominations are not in themselves, nor in chief part, evidence of success in gospel work.

A Minister's Musings

Very recently there appeared in the Presbyterian Banner of Pittsburg an article entitled, "A Minister's Musings on an Order of Lay Preachers." This minister was a cultured Presbyterian clergyman, probably of mature years and long observation. He makes a formidable plea for the ordination of laymen to the ministry, arguing that the preaching of laymen, Peter being one of the first, has never disappeared from the Christian church altogether. He refers to various companies of men that through the centuries have been sent out by great Christian leaders, who did not have college education, nor ordination of the churches, and yet who did great work. He spoke of the thousands of men, who went out over Europe and prepared the way for the great reformation work of Martin Luther. He called attention to the work of the Quakers, who do not ordain men to the ministry, as other denominations do, and to work of the Wesleys, who sent out preachers broadcast over England, many of them thoroughly uncultured. He recites an incident of John Wesley's mother, to whom Wesley went and made complaint with reference to a layman who was preaching. Susanna Wesley said to her son John, "You must not permit yourself to interrupt the preaching of this man, for he is as truly called to preach the gospel as you are," and that reproof of Susanna Wesley was probably one of the elements in the great success of John Wesley in Great Britain. The preaching of these laymen was a primary source of the great success of the Methodist churches all over the world to this day, but alas! that kind of preaching is not encouraged as in former times.

College or University Education of Today

In a former day with many who are now a little beyond the meridian of life, there was practically no danger to one's faith in the ordinary college. Denominational colleges were practically schools of religious culture, and evangelical truth. Professors were, as a rule, men of distinguished piety. The highest ideals of life service were kept before the student, and no sphere of activity was pressed upon the attention of students as assiduously as that of the ministry of the gospel.

The writer was graduated from an eastern college more than a third of a century ago, and of his class one-half went to the theological seminary in the fall. Three years ago that college sent out a class of seventy-two men, and just two were definitely preparing for the gospel ministry. It is notorious that in many colleges the simple faith of students is weakened or destroyed. The son of a distinguished judge in the South was sent to a university to take a course preparatory to entering a seminary, looking to the Christian ministry. Long before his university course was completed, he had lost his faith, and of course did not enter the ministry, and the heart of the Godly father was saddened to the end of his life.

A young man completed a full course at a leading university in the country, one of a half dozen of the greatest, and was finishing the second year in a theological seminary. He said that he had lost his faith in the teachings of the Christian religion. By the power of the Holy Spirit he was led back to the truth.

It is because of such facts, and they are many, that there is serious question as to whether an ordinary college course is of any advantage to a man preparing for the gospel ministry. Whether it was skeptical teaching alone while certain men were in college or not, a test was made very recently as to whether a college education was of real advantage to students graduating from theological seminaries or not. A professor in a well known theological seminary, and now at the head of the educational work of one of the greatest denominations of the country, carefully watched the course of several young men, who had graduated from his seminary. His desire was to make a scientific survey. At the end of a time chosen to properly make the test, he found that the men who had not had college education had actually done better work in the ministry than those who had such education. And it is to be noted that this was in one of the leading denominations of the country, which has always prided itself on an educated ministry.

A minister of that same denomination has recently testified that young men who worked in a certain state in the Union, who had only received their religious training in The Moody Bible Institute, did better work than men who had been trained in the theological seminaries.

In passing, it is to be said that there are colleges in the country where the spiritual life of the student is a matter of special attention. Christian students are built up in their faith, and students not Christians are made subjects of special evangelistic effort.

The General Board of the Presbyterian Church in the United States publishes widely that thirteen per cent of its ministers have not had full preparation for the ministry. More than one-half with neither college nor seminary preparation, the remainder with either college or seminary preparation only. Attention is drawn by the Board to the fact that of the total number without full preparation, about one-half of them came from other denominations. The denomination is urged to encourage young men to secure full preparation for the ministry in college and seminary. We might ask, "Will this bring the church back to its former fruitfulness?" The recent minutes of that denomination show that for several years there has been a decreasing number of additions to the churches on confession of faith. Would it not be well to sound an appeal for the church to pray for laborers for the vineyard of the Lord, for men full of the Holy Ghost, such as Amos, and Peter and other fishermen of Galilee, as the "Poor Men of Lyons," as the "Poor Brothers" of St. Francis, as Dwight L. Moody and Gypsy Smith, and from among these there was probably very rarely a person of collegiate or university education.

The minister, to whose musings we have called attention, says, "Moody did much by his own powerful lay ministry to bestir the Calvinistic churches to the value of such preaching, but he was at last compelled to create an outside agency for the training and direction of these consecrated men and women. Why should The Moody Bible Institute train thousands of lay workers who are left outside our ranks, except that we have encased ourselves in such seclusion as to forbid their entrance into our church organization. Why is this great work supported by the wealth of godly men and women, except that they see the need and attempt to meet it outside, because their own churches are too iron-clad to incorporate this work within their own boundaries?"

After this consideration, the writer, who has had academic, collegiate and theological seminary course in full, would ask whether there is not some ground for hesitation as to making so much of college education for the gospel ministry. As said earlier in this article, other things being equal, the college education for a man entering the ministry is desirable, but there may be question as to whether other things are equal or not.

Theological Seminary Training

It is to be kept in mind also that a mighty difference exists between the theological teachings of former days, and those of the present day. In those days when a collegiate and theological equipment was imperatively demanded, there was no danger of the students' receiving, while pursuing their educational work, anything but that which was in strict accordance with the standards of belief of the various denominations, and with the accepted teachings of the evangelical faith. Twenty-five years ago it was a very rare thing to hear of a professor in a theological seminary but was thoroughly evangelical, and consequently the more intellectual culture a student could get in going to such an institution the better. There are many alumni of theological seminaries today in the country who would not recommend students, who have the ministry in view, to go to them. In these seminaries, some positively and openly deny the fundamental truths of the confessions of the churches to which they belong, and the beliefs of the Christian churches through all the centuries. In others, expressions are given of theological truths in such way that the student has no concrete conviction, and goes out with a doubt in his mind as to the sincerity of the teacher in his own beliefs in those truths. It is notorious that a professor in one of the oldest theological seminaries of this country said positively to his students, "Gentlemen, I want you to understand that I do not believe all that I teach you."

A LEAGUE OF BIBLE ASSOCIATIONS

The American Bible Society is proposing a league of all the Bible societies of the world. In forming such a league, the questions of the fields of operation are to be considered; there should be joint action in the translation and revision of the Scripture; a determination of the various agencies to be used in the distribution of the Scripture; the relations of governments in the various countries, and an appeal to the whole Christian world for contributions.

Standing for God and the Right

I Kings 18: 17-24

In order to stand for God and the right, one must be sure of God, and must have faith to stand his ground. Elijah was not only sincere, he was sure; sure that Jehovah was the only and true God, sure that the nation could only be blessed by loyalty to God and His revealed will.

This assurance of faith is the best qualification for leadership. It is the chief element in true heroism. The following true story from the war illustrates this point.

It was early morning. All along the trenches the expectant thousands were waiting the command which would send them "over the top" and across "No Man's Land" into the hell of shot and shell. With these British heroes was a detachment of engineers whose duty it was to go over with the fighters and give attention to the guns and, as the trenches were captured, turn the captured guns against the fleeing enemy, and prepare against a counter-attack. At last the command rang forth.

Among the first to go over was one of these engineers, a Scotchman. He had no gun. He did not have to lead. His place was in the rear. But up to the top of the parapet he climbed and caught a flag from the hand of a falling soldier, and unfurled it amid the blinding sheet of flame. He stood with one hand holding the bullet-torn flag, and with the other he pointed across "No Man's Land" to the Hun lines, and with a mighty voice above the tumult he cried out, "On, Scotchmen, on! On, Scotchmen, on!" Moved by this heroism, those invincible Scotchmen went "over the top," swept across that fearful stretch of death into the enemy's lines, and miles of trenches were captured. One man had been a hero and that had inspired ten thousand more. Sure of the righteousness of his cause he stood for it even unto death.

Elijah lived at a time when his nation had departed from God and apostatized from the faith of Israel. His example therefore is the more forceful and timely because we have fallen upon a similar time in the history of the Christian faith. Another gospel, "which is not another," is taking the place of the gospel of Christ. Social salvation through the works of men is substituted for individual salvation through the work of Christ. We rejoice in the social emphasis as a supplement to the individual salvation "through faith in his blood" but as a substitute for it, we loathe it with all the powers of our being.

The gospel of self improvement has no power to save. We need Elijahs today who will stand for God and the right in this matter, four-square and unashamed of the glorious gospel of His Son.

A famous Scotch preacher speaking to a group of ministers, said: "Men still, as in our Lord's days, wish to be saved in their own way. They will often receive without objection preaching which aims at their improvement along lines of conduct on which they have already made progress. But they shrink and hesitate when they are called to take the great step from life in self, to life in Christ—the great step to a present acceptance of a righteousness in Christ and in His blood."

How To Avoid Failure

Joshua 1:1-8

The conditions of success as outlined in our Scripture lesson are perfectly obvious and quite simple.

First, there is the revelation of the divine will as seen in the commission of verses 1, 2, followed by the program and promise contained in verses 3-5. The promise is that of the divine presence which is more than the general and providential control of which we commonly speak. It is that conscious presence of God realized through faith, which makes a man sufficient for his given task. The New Testament equivalent is found in Ephesians 3: 18.

In view of this promise and all that it involved, the directions in verses 6, 7 and 8 are natural and logical. "Be strong and of a good courage." "Be thou strong and very courageous." Why? Because of the promise of verse 5, "As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee, I will not fail thee nor forsake thee." The appropriation of this promise through faith would make anyone strong and ready for battle. But faith may weaken or become dim. What then? "This book of the law," as in verse 8, for "faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God." Meditation in that Word leads to prosperity and "good success."

We never fail till we fail within and we fail within only when faith fails. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Joshua avoided failure by meditation in the Word of God which created within him the energy of faith, and in this faith he conquered. The far reaching influence of his life and the full measure of his success is seen in chapter 24, verse 31. He not only touched his own generation but succeeding ones, too.

Co-operation in Christian Service

John 17:20-23; I Corinthians 3: 5-10

The following, taken from The Christian (London, Eng.), is so pertinent to this theme, that we reproduce it here:

"Recent years have witnessed many movements toward unity on the part of various Christian bodies. Earnest followers of Christ have come to view their separation on the ground of things unessential as indefensible. Of common origin, faith, and aim, they have realized that there should be a closer identity in life and energy, and have in pursuance of this object been willing to make mutual sacrifice of things which, though cherished, are not vital. And in all such coming together in outward association of those who are already 'one in Jesus Christ,' there is everything to commend. Every movement from the circumference toward the center of things is in the nature of approximation of His ideal and answer to His prayer.

"We believe that coming days will witness much more attempt at the creation of a common life and enterprise by evangelical Christians; and we hail with joy every such effort as really tends to conservation of resource, to effectiveness of work, and to strengthening of testimony. In presence of a united foe, the people of God must close up their ranks for successful defence and offense. Those who hold firmly to the Head cannot on any ground claim excuse for holding aloof from each other. To deny the fellowship of one body is but to deny to ourselves the baptism of the one Spirit. And we are confident that in the near future there will be a coming together, upon the strong basis of simple faith in Christ, of many who have learned that the preservation of mere denominational loyalties is nothing in comparison with the larger communion of all who love Him in truth, and with the demands of the work He has committed to them. They will make the smaller sacrifice for the sake of the greater issue. And may God speed the day!

"At the same time there is much to guard against along this line. One of the greatest dangers and weaknesses of the present day is the growing prevalence of a spirit of loose tolerance and comprehensiveness. It always has been a device of the enemy to counterfeit the good gifts of God and to deceive His people into the acceptance of such counterfeits. And he is certainly successful today in respect of Christian unity. Without any regard to fundamental truth men are beguiled into entering upon loose federation with others whose intention may be worthy without being at all necessarily Christian. The ideal of broad comprehensiveness—which includes everyone who is well-intentioned in regard to moral causes—seems to have captivated not a few. We see the boundaries of old fellowships being pushed further and further back in order to take in those whose positions in regard to Christian truth is yet quite unchanged. We see fields in consequence being sowed 'with divers kinds of seed,' and old land-marks being ruthlessly removed. And we must candidly confess that we have yet to see one good thing accruing to the work of the Kingdom of God by any such imitation of the unity of the Spirit.

"We are aware that in saying this we shall be charged with lack of charity, for this sacred word has apparently lost much of its meaning to those who are obsessed with the modern spirit of unquestioning inclusiveness. They have annexed it as their watchword, and have given to it a content agreeable to their practices. In its name they justify, not only their departure from, but their positive denial of, convictions they once resolutely declared. To differ from them, or even to question their doings in the light of the plain teaching of God's Word, is to be 'uncharitable.' And there, for our part, we are content to leave it."

We commend the above to the earnest consideration of our young people.

How May We Practice Thanksgiving?

Ephesians 5:20; Psalm 67: 1-7

"Giving thanks always for all things" is the best way to practice thanksgiving. This may be done not in word only but in deed also. But whether in word or deed it must be spontaneous and enthusiastic, the overflow of a heart that can truly say, "The Lord is my shepherd . . . my cup runneth over."

Thanksgiving is a matter of the heart. Some of the most grateful souls have lived amid adverse and trying circumstances. They have rejoiced in the opportunity to serve. The love of God shed abroad in the heart caused them to love the unlovely and to serve as the representatives of Christ.

"Giving thanks always for all things" involves cheerfulness. By a cheerful spirit thanksgiving finds practical expression in daily life. "Be of good cheer" is the oft repeated counsel of the New Testament. "Singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord" is the fruitage thereof.

Again we can practice thanksgiving by faithful stewardship, a joyful giving of means entrusted to us. The world is very needy, millions yet remain to whom the salvation of God has not been preached. No finer expression of thanksgiving can be made than generous and sacrificial giving to the end that the world's great need of the knowledge of a Saviour may be met.

Our lesson Psalm is suggestive. It begins with prayer for the blessing of God, but the blessing is not sought as an end in itself but as a means to an end, as in verse 2, "That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations." This is the great objective, the millennial age when the earth shall yield her increase and "all the ends of the earth shall fear him." To live and labor, to serve and suffer and sacrifice in order to hasten that glad day, this is to practice thanksgiving in a way acceptable to God and approved of men.

Christianity and the Health of America

Ezekiel 47: 1-12

The point of contact between the topic and the Scripture lesson is the idea of restoration which is common to both. In the Scripture lesson, life and health, activity and beauty are found wherever the river flows. (See verses 9 and 12). "The health of America" in its fullest sense is likewise dependent upon a river. The river may be called by the name of "Christianity" as used in our topic, but a better name is that of "Salvation," for much that poses as "Christianity" is simply a formal pretense of the real thing.

The river of our Scripture lesson, like "the river of the water of life" rises in a concealed or invisible place. "The waters issued out from under the threshold of the house" (v. 1). The source was hidden, the stream was seen. Compare this with Revelation 22:1. "The throne of God and of the Lamb" is the hidden source of the river mentioned there. The government of God, in Christ, is the source of all good. According to verses 1 and 8, the river of our lesson flowed toward the east into the sea, that is, the Dead Sea. Into this world of death, the river of God's salvation in Christ, flows. The result is the same as seen in verses 9 and 12. It is threefold—life and healing and fruitfulness.

The health of the individual—spirit, soul and body is dependent on the river that flows from the throne of God, and inasmuch as the nation is composed of individuals there is no national need comparable to that of contact with the river of life from which comes healing and fruitfulness.

Water is a symbol of the Holy Spirit who in His operations renews our souls, illumines our minds and quickens the mortal body. Christianity of the right type is vitally connected with the life of America, spiritual life, moral life and physical life.

Practical and Perplexing Questions

Answered by the Editors

BRIEF MENTION

Inquirer Unidentified: (1) "Do premillennialists rejoice in the fact that the world is waxing worse?"

We should hope not, except as the fact verifies God's Word (2 Tim. 3:13), and points to the nearer approach of the second advent of Christ for whose appearing they long.

(2) "Are not all the parables of Matthew 13 likenesses of the Kingdom of heaven?"

We believe that to be the teaching of the chapter.

F. E. M., Coloma, Mich.: "When did they first begin to sprinkle and who started that mode of baptism?"

This question is difficult, if not impossible to answer. Prof. A. T. Robertson (Baptist) says that as a substitute for immersion it was late, and finally triumphed in the West because of the decree of the Council of Trent (16th century). But Dr. T. M. Lindsay in the same publication, International Standard Bible Dictionary, speaks of the validity of sprinkling as having been raised, and settled affirmatively, by Cyprian in the middle of the third century.

Question: What are some of the things left out in the "Shorter Bible," translated and arranged by Professor Charles Foster Kent, with whom were correlated Frederick Harris of the National Y. M. C. A., and Ethel Cutler of the National Board of the Y. W. C. A.? I have had the book recommended as suitable for Sunday-school teachers.

Answer: This publication as yet only presents the New Testament, but it is proposed to publish the whole Bible in the same way. The entire work is prepared under the influence of the modern emphasis on intellectual and social culture. A sample of the flagrant violation of the Word of God is furnished by its treatment of First and Second Thessalonians, in which it is conceded by all honest students of the Word that the chief subject is the second coming of Jesus Christ. In the table of contents of those books, no reference whatever is made to the second coming, and large portions of the Epistles are omitted. No gospel appears in full, and the same thing is true of the Epistles. Second and Third John do not appear at all; probably not one-third of the book of Revelation appears. The publication cannot but contribute to the discredit of the supernatural in the Bible, and it is to be deeply regretted that the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations should have given encouragement to such a publication.

The New Testament, as the church has had it for hundreds of years, is easy of understanding, as it is in any of the recognized versions, and the attempt to eliminate any portion of it invites the denunciation of Revelation 22:19.

H. D. F., Great Deer, Sask.: "Is there no possibility for an individual that has been born again and received the Holy Spirit to fall away and sin wilfully, according to Hebrews 10:26, 27, so that he can not be renewed unto repentance any more?"

You are reading into these verses something that they do not state. They say nothing about being "born again" and "receiving the Holy Spirit." (See the answer to L. J. K. under No. 4.)

L. J. K., Excelsior, Minn.: (1) "Was Judas regenerated?"

We believe not.

(2) "Was Peter converted when he denied Christ?"

We think he was. Compare Matthew 16:16, 17.

(3) "Were the disciples sanctified at Pentecost?"

They were sanctified in the sense of being set apart for God when they believed on Christ, but they were filled with and baptized into His body by the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, the experience being unique on that occasion.

(4) "Will a regenerated person sin unto death?"

We believe not (John 10:27-29).

(5) "When our first parents sinned did they lose the image of God?"

If by the image of God we mean a likeness to His holiness, the question must be answered in the affirmative, but if by the image of God we mean the qualities which constitute His personality, the question must be answered in the negative. Passages of Scripture, throwing light on this matter, are: Gen. 5:1-3; 1 Cor. 11:7; Eph. 4:24; Col. 3:10; James 3:9.

(6) "If a sinner repents, and is forgiven, should he let that sin stare him in the face through life, thinking he must reap what he has sowed?"

It is difficult, if not impossible, for us to forget some of our sins even after we are assured of forgiveness, which in itself is reaping what we have sown. Furthermore, some sins in their very nature leave consequences that cannot be removed in this life. But still it is unspeakable peace to know that we are right with God through grace, and that such consequences will not follow us in the life beyond.

(7) "What indications are there that the world is growing worse?"

We cannot point out all of them, but we think a very impressive one is the defection from the truth of the gospel which is so widespread in the visible church.

(8) "What did Christ mean when He said blasphemy would not be forgiven in this world, neither in the world to come?"

The meaning of this phrase in Matthew 12:32 is fixed by the parallel place in Mark 3:29. It does not mean that any sins will be forgiven in the world to come, i. e., in hell; but simply that there were no possible circumstances under which such an offender could be pardoned (Albert Barnes).

H. S., Gotebo, Okla.: (1) "Is a trespass committed knowingly, a wilful sin, and if so, how can there be forgiveness of it, according to Hebrews 10:26?"

The passage quoted does not seem to be referring to a sin committed by a regenerated person who repents of and confesses it, but to an act of apostasy, i. e., a total and final rejection of Christ on the part of one who had "received the knowledge of the truth." In other words, the inspired writer in that place is dealing with the same situation as in chapter 6:4-6.

(2) "Do Hebrews 10:26; Heb. 6:4-6; and 1 John 5:16 all refer to the same sin?"

For answer to this question as well as those following in your communication, we refer you to Bible Problems Explained (Gray), pp. 63-68, obtainable in paper or cloth from The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 822 North LaSalle Street, Chicago.

Mrs. J. B., Weston, Ill.: "What is an Antichrist?"

The word is of Greek derivation and means an opponent of Christ, in which sense there are and have been, many antichrists (1 John 2:18). Nevertheless, as this same verse in 1 John indicates, there is an Antichrist to come, a real historic personage, of whom all others are simply foreshadowings. He is identified as the beast of Rev. 13:1-10; 16:13; 19:20; 20:10. For an account of the Antichrist, his history and doom, see A Textbook on Prophecy by Gray, obtainable from The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 822 North LaSalle Street, Chicago.

G. N. R., Lincoln, Neb.: (1) "Do you believe the heathen, who never hear of Christ, will be lost?"

The heathen, like all other people, are lost because they have sinned against God (Rom. 1:18-32). This is true whether they hear of Christ or whether they do not. But if they hear of Christ and believe on Him they will be saved.

(2) "Do you believe one can be saved and never join a church or be baptized?"

As an abstract question we answer "Yes," because the penitent thief on the cross was such an one (Luke 23:39-43). But such instances must be rare, and it would be wrong and dangerous to presume upon them. A truly saved man will be baptized and join the church unless unusual cirumstances positively prevent it.

(3) "Does one have to know the exact time of conversion, or experience a change, to be a Christian?"

He does not have to know the exact time, nor is it vital that he should experience a change at the time of accepting and confessing Christ. But if he has really accepted and confessed Him his life will indicate it more and more.

(4) Your three inquiries about the inspiration of the Bible are answered in a pamphlet entitled The Bible's Testimony to Its Own Inspiration by Gray, to be obtained of The Bible Institute Colportage Association.

Peter's Great Confession
Matthew 16:13-24

Golden Text:—"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."—Matthew 16:16.

The time has now come for the King to take account of His ministry.

This confession in some sense marks the turning point in Christ's ministry. Hereafter it is more restricted to His disciples. Two reasons are sufficient why this should be (vv. 1-12). (1) The Pharisees and Sadducees show their attitude towards Him in their demand for a sign, His answer is that none shall be given save that of His death and resurrection, as symbolized in the experiences of the prophet Jonah. (2) The disciples show their inability to understand the spiritual nature of His teaching. When He warned them of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees they understood Him to refer to bread, when He meant their doctrine. It was at this crisis when Christ turned from the nation which had rejected Him that Peter made this great confession. It was made in the borders of Caesarea-Philippi, practically Gentile territory.

I. Peter's Confession (vv. 13-16).

Two questions of Christ provoked this confession:

1. The question as to the opinion of the people concerning Him.

They recognized Him as a teacher or a prophet of more than human authority and power. Today, as then, there is a diversity of opinion among the people as to Jesus Christ. Some think He is only a man; others, that He is a great teacher, but nothing more. Had He been content with this He would not have been molested in Jerusalem, for the Jews willingly acknowledged Him as more than a human teacher. It was His persistent claim to be the God-man, the Son of God, that sent Him to the cross.

2. The second question involved the personal opinion of the disciples concerning Him. To be able to tell what others think of Jesus is not enough; there must be definite, correct and personal belief in Him.

II. The New Body, the Church, Announced (vv. 17-20).

Peter had made a noble confession of Christ, so now Christ confesses him. If we confess Christ He will confess us (Matt. 10:32, 33). Christ declared His intention of bringing into existence a new body to the members of which He will give eternal life, and to whose hands He will entrust the keys of the Kingdom. Peter was to have a distinguished place in this body. The keys entrusted to Him were used on the day of Pentecost, and again in the case of Cornelius. Association in this new body cannot be broken by death, for the gates of hades shall not prevail against it. This body, the Church, is of a heavenly origin, a heavenly calling, and a heavenly inheritance.

III. The Cross the Way to the Throne (vv. 21-33).

This was, no doubt, startling to the disciples. They did not realize that redemption was to be accomplished through the passion of the cross. So unwelcome was this announcement that Peter cried, "This shall not be unto thee." Peter later saw through this darkness to the glory on the hilltop beyond. A new hope then filled his breast (1 Pet. 1:3, 4). Victory through death is yet the stumbling block of many. Many are stumbling over the doctrine of salvation and redemption through the suffering of the cross. All such are under the control of the devil (v. 23). The devil hates salvation by blood.

IV. The Cost of Discipleship (vv. 24-27).

To follow Christ means suffering. To follow Him is to turn one's back upon the world. Life can only be saved by losing it. If we are going to be Christians we must share Christ's suffering. We cannot go to heaven on flowery beds of ease.

1. There must be denial of self (v. 24). There is a wide difference between self-denial and denial of self. Self-denial is practiced every where by all people, but only the disciples of Christ or Christed people deny self. Christ takes the place of self.

2. "Take up his cross." This cross is the suffering and shame which lie in the path of loyalty to God. To do our duty will mean suffering (2 Tim. 3:12).

3. Follow Christ. This means to have the mind of Christ, to do like Christ. All such shall be rewarded when Christ comes in glory.

Witnesses of Christ's Glory
Luke 9:28-36

Golden Text:—"This is my beloved Son: hear ye him."—Mark 9:7.

While it is true that in this lesson the disciples are witnesses of Christ's glory, the full truth is that the manifestation of Christ in glory was to give to the discouraged disciples a foregleam of the Messianic Kingdom. The hopes of the disciples were crushed when Christ announced His death on the cross. They were unable to see how victory could issue from death.

Jesus took with Him Peter, James, and John, and went into the mountain to pray. His chief aim in retirement was to get the disciples apart and into a state of receptivity so that He might show them the method of the Kingdom. Before going to the mountain He declared that there were some standing in His presence who would not taste of death till they should see the Son of man coming in His Kingdom (Luke 9:27; Matt, 16:28). That their drooping spirits might be revived and their confidence restored, He is transfigured before them. Two men from the upper world are sent to converse with Him about His approaching death in Jerusalem (v. 31)—the very thing about which the disciples refused to talk. Then, too, God's own voice was heard in words of approval of Christ's course, directing them to hear the Master. Surely they cannot doubt His ability now to carry into execution His Kingdom plans. The purpose, then, of the transfiguration is to give the disciples a foregleam of the coming Kingdom, to enable them to see the Kingdom in embryo. That this is true is not only shown by the context and circumstances, but by the inspired interpretation of one who was with Him and knew all that transpired. Peter said, "For we did not follow cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but we were eyewitnesses of his majesty, for he received of God the Father honor and glory when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory; This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased: and this voice we ourselves heard come out of heaven, when we were with him in the holy mount. And we have the word of prophecy made more sure; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts" (2 Pet. 1:16-19, R. V.). To those who believe in the inspiration of the Bible these words are final. Let us therefore note the outstanding features of the Kingdom as displayed in the transfiguration:

I. Jesus Christ the Glorified King on Mt. Zion (v. 29).

The glorified King on this mount was intended to symbolize the messianic Kingdom when Christ returns to the Mount of Olives in Jerusalem (Zech. 14:4-17). This is still in the future, and will be literally fulfilled.

II. The Glorified Saints with Christ (vv. 30, 31).

1. Moses, who was once denied an entrance into Palestine, appears now in glory, representing the redeemed of the Lord who shall pass through death into the Kingdom. Many thousands of the redeemed have fallen asleep and at the coming of the Lord shall be awakened to pass into the Kingdom.

2. Elijah, now glorified, represents the redeemed who shall pass into the Kingdom through translation. Many shall be living upon the earth when the Lord shall come, and shall without dying be changed, and thus pass into the Kingdom (1 Cor. 15:50-53; 1 Thess. 4:14-18).

3. They talk of the very thing which the disciples refused to believe, namely, the death of Christ.

III. Israel, in the Flesh, in Connection with the Kingdom, represented by Peter, James, and John (v. 28).

Israel shall be called from their hiding place among all nations of the earth and shall be gathered to Jesus Christ the King, as the central people in the Kingdom (Ezek. 37:21-27).

1. Peter proposes to build three tabernacles (v. 33). The Feast of Tabernacles looked forward to the glorious reign of Christ. Peter caught a glimpse of the significance of the transfiguration. His proposition showed that he thought of the Feast of Tabernacles, and therefore of the millennium.

2. The divine voice (v. 35). At this time God himself uttered His words, assuring them that this one in glory was His Son Jesus Christ.

IV. The Multitude at the Foot of the Mountain (vv. 37-43).

This is representative of the nations which shall be brought into the Kingdom which shall be established over Israel. See Isaiah 11:10-12. The people here were grievously oppressed by the devil. There are times when the devil is especially active in his oppression of men. About the time of Christ's first coming he did his best to harass men. Just before Christ's coming again he will be especially active, for he knows that his time is short.

Jesus Corrects John's Narrowness

Luke 9:46-56

Golden Text:—"Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."—Ephesians 6:24.

I. Jesus Teaches True Greatness (vv. 46-48).

1. The Occasion (v. 46).

A contention among the disciples as to who should be the greatest.

Jesus had just announced His coming death on the cross, admonishing them to let his sayings sink down into their ears (v. 44). They were so steeped in selfishness that they could not enter into fellowship with Him in His sufferings. They were disputing among themselves as to who would be the biggest man in the Kingdom. The imagination cannot depict a condition where rebuke and teaching were more needed.

2. The Method (v. 47).

He "took a child and set him by him." Teaching by object is one of the finest of methods. In this Jesus showed Himself to be the master-teacher. Christ was qualified to meet the supreme need of all teaching, namely to know the pupil and to translate knowledge into terms adapted to the comprehension of the pupil. He perceived even the thoughts of the disciples and met their need. When they were conscious of His knowledge of them they were ashamed (Mark 9:34). Our ambitions are open to the Lord. We should so direct our lives that we need not be silent and ashamed before Him.

3. The Teaching (v. 48).

(1) "Whosoever receiveth this child in my name receiveth me." So completely is Christ identified with those who are childlike in spirit that He regards treatment of them as treatment of Himself.

(2) "Whosoever receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." Christ and the Father are one, therefore whatsoever attitude one has toward Christ he has toward God. Rejection of Christ is rejection of God.

(3) "He that is least among you all the same shall be great." The one who in self-forgetful service takes the lowest place is truly the great one. This is the supreme law of Christian discipleship. In Jesus we see the one who was incomparably great identifying Himself with humanity, humbling Himself not only to wash His disciples' feet, but to die the ignominious death on the cross. True greatness, therefore, is not to have the first place—to be given the applause of the world, and to be served, but to possess that willing mind to stoop to any place in order to serve others in Christ's name.

II. Religious Intolerance Rebuked (vv. 49, 50).

1. The Case Cited (v. 50). The disciples saw one casting out devils in Christ's name, but because he refused to follow them they forbade him. This spirit is liable to seize those who are really zealous for Christ. It often expresses itself against those who do not belong to one's particular church or sect. In determining as to whom we should fellowship, two questions only need be asked, (1) Are devils really being cast out? (2) Are they being cast out in the name of Christ? The plain implication of Christ's words in Matthew 7:22, 23, is that one may even cast out devils and be a stranger to the Lord. There is a supernatural work which is not divine, so, unless the mighty works are done "in the name" of Christ, a Christian should not fellowship the miracle worker. All who are really doing such deeds in the name of Christ we should bid Godspeed.

2. The Principle Declared (v. 51). "He that is not against us is for us." This truth is positively stated in Luke 11:23, "He that is not with me is against me." When it comes to man's attitude toward Christ there is no possible neutrality.

III. Resentment Rebuked (vv. 51-56).

1. Farewell to Galilee (v. 51.) As the time had come for Him to be received up He set His face to go to Jerusalem. The time of His sacrifice was come and Jerusalem was the place where it was to be accomplished.

2. The Samaritans Refused to Receive Him (vv. 52, 53).

This refusal was due to the impression that He was going to Jerusalem. Their national prejudices were so strong that they regarded His action as a national insult, therefore refused hospitality to Him. They warmly received Him when He passed through their country, even many of them believed on Him when they heard the testimony of the woman of Samaria; now they refuse even to entertain Him and His disciples.

3. James and John Vehemently Resent this Action of the Samaritans (v. 54). They regarded it as an insult to their Lord. Their love was so vital that an affront to the object of their affection was most bitterly resented. This is ever the case with true love; it can brook no insult to the one loved.

4. The Lord's Rebuke (vv. 55, 56).

(1) "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." He did not minimize the insult or question their motive. He who knew their hearts was aware that they were being moved out of love for Him. He told them, however, that such insults were not to be met by violence. Religious persecutions are always wrong. The spread of truth is not to be by means of carnal weapons. If Christ's teaching had been heeded throughout the centuries much bloodshed would have been prevented.

(2) "For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

Jesus Teaches Peter True Greatness
John 13:1-16

Golden Text:—"The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many."—Matthew 20:28.

This chapter begins the second section of the body of the book of John, namely, the inner revelation of Christ to His disciples. The people at large having rejected Him, He turns His back upon them and devotes His few remaining hours to instructing and comforting His disciples.

I. Christ's Amazing Love For His Own (vv. 1-3).

Jesus was fully conscious of what was upon Him. He knew that the cross with all its anguish was just before Him. He knew that His disciples would shamefully forsake Him in a few hours. He knew that one of that number would be the instrument in the hands of the devil in His betrayal. He knew that all things were in His hands; was fully conscious of His deity. Notwithstanding all this He displayed patient and untiring love. He did not withdraw His love from them because of their weakness and the shameful failure which He knew would soon be made manifest. He loved them to the uttermost. True love does not consider circumstances or the shortcoming of the person loved. His thoughts might well have been of the eternal light and glory upon which He would soon enter, but it was mainly of His own.

II. Christ Washing His Disciples' Feet (vv. 4-11).

This act is symbolic of His amazing love for His disciples. Jesus did not regard His hands too holy to do this menial service. The true Christian does not allow his rank in society to keep him from acts of lowly service.

1. Steps in This Service:

(1) He riseth from supper, (2) laid aside His garments, (3) took a towel and girded Himself, (4) poured water into a basin, (5) washed His disciples' feet, (6) wiped them with a towel wherewith He was girded. These steps symbolize Christ's entire work of redemption. His rising from supper represents His rising from His place of enjoyment in the heavenly glory; His laying aside His garments, His putting aside His vesture of majesty (Phil. 2:7, 8); His girding Himself, His taking the form of a servant (Phil. 2:7); The water in the basin, His cleansing blood; His washing of their feet, His actual cleansing of men through His Word (John 15:3; Eph. 5:26); His taking His garments again, His return to His place and position of glory.

2. Peter's Impetuous Ignorance.

He goes from one extreme to another. It is his failure to understand the significance of this service that caused him to behave so strangely.

3. The Significance of This Service to Those Who Participate in It.

(1) It is a spiritual cleansing (v.8). Fellowship with Jesus is only possible as we are continuously cleansed from our sins. "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit" (v.10). The cleansing here is not the washing of regeneration, but that of sanctification. Even regenerate folks need the continual cleansing of Christ's blood in order to have fellowship with Him. He that is regenerated—washed in the blood of Christ (symbolized by baptism), does not need a repetition of the act; he only needs the cleansing of sanctification, symbolized by the washing of the feet. After regeneration, as we go through this world we are contaminated by its sins. He is willing always to cleanse us from our sins if we allow Him.

(2) A badge of brotherly affection. This act showed His abandonment to the service of His own. This is a lesson that is much needed today. We need more and more the fulness of brotherly love. This love needs to be manifested so that it may be seen and realized. Only can true love be proved by the service it renders.

(3) A proof of humility. This was a lesson much needed by the disciples, and much needed by us all. They had just been disputing as to who should be the greatest in the Kingdom; their selfish ambition was expressing itself. On every hand we see expressions of pride, vanity, and even arrogance on the part of those who are professed followers of the lowly Jesus. Christ's action was a concrete expression of His Spirit. If the Son of God was not ashamed to stoop to such lowly service the disciple should not regard it beneath his dignity to follow in His steps.

(4) Equalization. As they would thus stoop to serve each other in the name of Christ there would be the sure destruction of caste among them.

Such service in the spirit of Christ is the great leveler of humanity.

III. An Example for Us (vv. 12-16).

The disciples of the Lord are under obligation to do to each other as He did unto them. This obligation rests upon His Lordship (v. 14). All who call Him Lord in sincerity will obey Him. To refuse to obey Him is to put one's self above his Lord. Obedience to the Lord should proceed from our love for Him, but in addition He promises happiness to those who practice these things.

Peter and John Asleep in Gethsemane

Mark 14:32-42

Golden Text:—"Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation."—Mark 14:38.

I. Christ Suffering (vv.32-34).

1. The Place (v. 32). The garden of Gethsemane—an enclosure containing olive and fig trees, beyond Kidron, about three-fourths of a mile from Jerusalem. The name means olive-press. The name is significant of the occasion. Edersheim says, "It is an emblem of trial, distress, and agony." Perhaps the garden was owned by some one of Jesus' friends. It afforded Him a suitable place to retire with His disciples in this trying hour.

2. His Companions (v. 35). He took with Him the eleven disciples that they might share so far as possible, this sorrow with Him. Being a real human being He craved human sympathy. He bade them watch with Him. While He knew that He must "tread the wine-press alone," He had a keen appreciation of sympathy so far as those who loved Him could give it. The behavior of the disciples shows the utter limitation of human sympathy.

3. His Great Sorrow (v. 34). This is the same as the "cup" in verse 36. It was not primarily the prospect of physical suffering that was crushing Him; it was the suffering as a sin-bearer—the sensations of His pure soul coming into contact with the awful sin and guilt of the world. Only pure and refined natures can understand this. In addition to this there was the judgment stroke from the holy God as it fell upon His Son instead of the sinner. God caused the iniquities of the world to strike upon Jesus (2 Cor. 5:21; Isa. 53:6).

II. Christ Praying (vv. 35-42).

Though He prized human sympathy in the hour of supreme need, His only recourse was prayer. The sympathy of our friends is helpful, but in the great crises of life we can only find help as we go to God in prayer. "Is any among you afflicted, let him pray" (James 5:13).

1. The First Prayer (vv. 35-38).

(1) His posture (v. 35). He fell on His face prostrate on the ground. In the hour of our great need we naturally prostrate ourselves before God—a becoming posture. (2) His petition (v. 36). "Take away this cup from me." By the cup is meant His death on the cross. No doubt it was most grievous to Him to face its shame, but He pressed on knowing that for this cause He had come into the world (John 12:27, 28, cf. Heb. 2:14). He prayed that the "hour might pass from him,"—the burden was so great that it seemed His life would be crushed out. His prayer was heard (Heb. 5:7). When God hears our prayers He grants the petition desired (1 John 5:14, 15). Angels ministered to Him, giving the necessary grace to endure to the end (Luke 22-43). (3) His resignation (v. 36). His will was in subjection to the Father. He knew that His death on the cross was the will of God the Father; for He was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. (4) The disciples rebuked (v. 37). He singled out Peter, since he had been the most conspicuous in proclaiming his loyalty (John 13:38). Though he would go with Him to death he could not watch one hour. (5) Exhortation to the disciples (v. 38). "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." The only way to be able to stand in the time of trial is to be watching and praying. Jesus knew that although the disciples meant it well they would fail in the trial unless aided from above. The flesh is too weak to stand the strain.

2. The Second Prayer (vv. 39, 40).

He withdrew the second time from His disciples and uttered the same words in prayer. This was not vain repetition. It is proper to repeat our requests. He found the disciples asleep again. Their shame and confusion were more marked than at first.

3. The Third Prayer (vv. 41, 42).

He uttered the same words in His third prayer (Matt. 26:44). He tells the disciples to sleep on and take their rest, as the hour had now come for His betrayal. There is such a thing as being asleep when wanted and awakening when it is too late. If the disciples had been praying they would not have fallen asleep.

Sunday-School News, Methods, Appliances and Questions

By Hugh Cork

NOTES AND NEWS

If the life of the teacher is the life of his teaching, how important that much attention be paid to the teaching life.

A "weakly" teachers' meeting has killed many Sunday-schools, while a live, efficient school will require a "weekly" meeting for teachers.

If you use the blackboard or any other method of object teaching before the school or class, always keep in mind the carpenter's rule, "Never construct ornament, but only ornament construction."

The shepherd who knowingly allows one of his flock to remain out of the fold one single night without seeking it has no right to herd sheep. What about the teacher whose scholar is absent and who might within a few hours by personal visit, 'phone call, or letter manifest concern but does not?

If it is true that "The boy without a playground is father to the man without a job" who shall furnish and supervise his playground? The devil will if the church does not. Shall the church provide any play life for her children? Or shall she discourage play among her young? What? Why? When? Where?

That superintendent does his best work who makes his school move without much evidence of work on his part. A division of responsibility and labor, with little for him to do but see that each officer gets his share and accomplishes his task joyously, is the best evidence of executive ability and management spirit.

The skilled laborers in the big mills are charged with every pound of raw material placed in their care and the management requires and looks for a certain amount of finished product. Has your church entrusted to each Sunday-school teacher certain lives of raw material and are holding them responsible for the finished product in church membership and training? If not, why not?

We are puzzling our brain to find ways to help Sunday-school workers through these columns. Will you tell us what will help you most? What are your problems? Where do you fail most often? What have been your outstanding successes? What are your questions? Please be free to write us so we may be better informed as to how we may help. While we are busy on the teaching staff, we can take a limited number of convention or special meeting dates. Can you use us this way?

One church after carefully and prayerfully selecting Sunday-school officers and teachers set aside the Sunday morning church service before they started upon the year's work to publicly install them into office. The music, the sermon, the charges to the officers and teachers were as thorough and solemn as those of that service when the pastor was installed. It goes without saying that not only those engaged in the work of the Sunday-school—officers, teachers, and scholars—but the church members themselves were impressed at that service with a higher rating for the Sunday-school. Try it and see.

We spoke last month of the proposed organization of "The Bible Institute Sunday-school" which, at that time, it had been decided was to open on October 5. After further consideration, it was decided for various reasons to postpone the organization of the Sunday-school for a few weeks, and begin October 5 with a service for Bible exposition where the spirit of worship and devotional Bible study will be the outstanding characteristics. That service was held, as it will be each Sunday at 4 p. m., and over 1,200 were in attendance the first day, more than half of whom were people not connected as faculty or students at the Institute. Dr. Gray had charge during October and Dr. W. H. Griffith Thomas is the leader this month. We expect the Sunday-school, which will begin at 2:30 p. m., to be an evolution from this four o'clock hour within a few weeks.

MAKING MORE OF OUR HYMNS

Many people, not only in Sunday-school but in church, sing "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" with little or no thought as to the meaning of the words, but with their attention centered only on the melody and harmony of the music. This is the more unfortunate since the music, which has a language all its own, often reveals other thought than what the poet tried to frame in the words. Therefore to give hymns and spiritual songs their proper place and full force in worship attention might well be called to the origin and incidents of at least one hymn each Sunday.

Take for instance the spiritual song, "It Is Well with My Soul." It was born out of deep sorrow in 1873. Mr. H. G. Spofford, a Christian lawyer of Evanston, Ill., who had lost his fortune in the Chicago fire two years before, had prospered enough to send his wife and four younger children to visit relatives in England. Crossing the ocean a collision with a sailing vessel sank their ship in thirty minutes, with nearly all on board lost, including Mr. Spofford's four children, whom he fairly idolized, especially the baby. Mrs. Spofford was picked up and landed in Wales, from whence she cabled, "Saved, but alone."

When the message reached their Evanston home it seemed a blow heavier than the father could bear. He paced the floor nearly the whole night trying to say, "Thy will be done." Toward morning the dark storm clouds of the night parted, the troubled spirit was quieted, and a peace he had not known before flooded his soul. His bowed spirit looked up while the thought in his heart prompted him to say "It is well," and out of this experience, he sat down and wrote:

When peace like a river, attendeth my way,
  When sorrows, like sea billows roll;
Whatever my lot, Thou has taught me to say,
  It is well, it is well with my soul.

THE CALL FROM EUROPE'S CHILDHOOD

The children of war-ravaged Europe are presenting one of the gravest post-war problems. A church leader of international reputation writes the following from Switzerland to Frank L. Brown, Joint General Secretary of the World's Sunday-school Association: "The great problem in reconstruction is not the rebuilding of houses and towns, the replanting of shell-plowed fields, the manufacturing of tools and machines, important as all this no doubt is. Nobody has been injured more—physically, morally, spiritually—than the children and young people. I have made a special study of the effects of the war upon child life in the various European countries and the results of my observations are alarming. We must do more than we ever thought was needed for the coming generation."

The Sunday-school situation in Germany is pathetic indeed, and is clearly given in a statement made by one of the most active Sunday-school leaders of Germany. "Our Sunday-school work has suffered greatly during the war for many reasons. Our statistics show a great decrease in teachers and pupils. Through the revolution in our country the socialists have thrown over all of our good plans which were based upon religious instruction. Now we find quite a new situation. The public schools will to a great extent remove religious instruction quite out of their plans. Therefore all religious people, I hope, will learn to lay more stress upon Sunday-school work in general.

How the former State church will develop it is hard to tell at present. Many plans are discussed, but nobody knows what will be the result. Circumstances are altering continually and we fear that worse revolutions are still coming. All the free churches are not touched by separation of Church and State and they will take up Sunday-school work with more energy than ever, for they see in Sunday-school work now one of the chief means to fight against the coming heathenism in our country."

Has the time come for some Moody to plant a Bible Institute in one of Germany's large cities to meet the training needs of those who are called to lead her children out of the present darkness into God's marvelous light? S. D. Gordon tells us that in 1911 he held a ten-day conference in Central Germany similar to Keswick in England, or Northfield in Moody's day. Nearly, if not quite, two thousand delegates from all parts of Germany were in attendance. Of the delegates he says, "I have never looked into more thoughtful, earnest, Spirit-lit faces than those that looked up into mine daily, during those ten never-to-be-forgotten days. They belonged to what is called over there the 'Gemeinshaft,' that is, the 'fellowship' groups, those who had fellowship together with the Lord Jesus." It seems to us these fellowship groups with a Bible Institute as their training center is the key that will unlock the spiritual situation and supply the needs of Germany in a large measure. Let us pray to this end.

DO YOU LOVE CHILDREN?

By Fannie Crosby

Love the children? What a question!
  Cold indeed the heart must be
That can turn without emotion
  From their laughter gushing free;
Yes, with all my heart I love them;
  Bless the children, every one!
I can be a child among them,
  And enjoy their freaks and fun.

Quick, impulsive, and confiding,
  Innocent without disguise,
Faces all aglow with pleasure,
  Mischief dancing in their eyes—
In my garden of affection
  They will share the greenest spot;
And I say without compunction,
  Woe to those who love them not!

Are your children sometimes wayward?
  Teachers, are your scholars wild?
Do not blame them, but remember
  Each of you was once a child;
Learn to govern with discretion,
  Govern with a loving hand;
Ne'er correct them in your anger,
  Learn with mildness to command.
Do not crush their tender feelings;
  Win their confidence, their trust;
Treat them kindly, and be always
  Merciful as well as just;
Pastors, don't forget the children;
  They are looking up to you;
By a word of admonition,
  There is much that you can do.

Love the children? I can never,
  Never pass them in the street
But my every pulse awaking
  Thrills with love to all I meet;
I have heard the children singing
  When my heart was lone and sad;
I have heard them in the distance,
  And their music made me glad.

MAKING MISTAKES

When a plumber makes a mistake, he charges twice for it.

When a lawyer makes a mistake, it is just what he wanted, because he has a chance to try the case all over again.

When a carpenter makes a mistake, it's just what he expected.

When a doctor makes a mistake, he buries it.

When a judge makes a mistake, it becomes the law of the land.

When a preacher makes a mistake, nobody knows the difference.

But when an editor makes a mistake—good-night!!!—Exchange.

HOW THE LIGHT CAME TO LOK TZ TSING

Paul's words to the Corinthians about "not many mighty, not many noble" being called, has correctly described the Christian church in China hitherto. But things are rapidly changing in China and in no particular more significantly than the growing accessibility of the gentry class to the message of the gospel. In illustration of this Mr. L. D. Patterson, of Sungkiang, China, tells of a typical case in the following:

"His name is Lok Tz Tsing. He was baptized and received into the church on Sunday, June 10. His father, mother, two younger brothers, and wife live in Shanghai. He has been for five years in the most important bank in Suangkiang. Although but twenty-two years of age, he is now teller in that institution. The president of the bank, himself a member of the Provincial Assembly and one of the leading business men and statesmen of this Province, once said to me that Tz Tsing is the finest and most promising young man in his acquaintance. His happy conversion and his joining the church mark an era in the development of the Kingdom of God in this city. How was he won? That is the question this article is designed to answer.

"To any one with half an eye who knows conditions, it is clear that soon after the close of the present world war there will open in the Yangtse valley a period of vast industrial development. Railroads, factories, and commercial enterprises of all kinds will be built on a large scale. It is to be done chiefly with English and American money, and under the leadership of Englishmen and Americans. Farseeing Chinese youths are keenly aware that now is the time for them to prepare for the big opportunities ahead, and that the man who has thorough command of the English language will be first in demand by the captains of industry. Consequently, the teaching of English is the 'open sesame' to the best blood of China.

"It was for that reason we established a night school in Grace Church in East Sungkiang. It has now been going a year and a half. The sons of the best families, the clerks in the leading business concerns, and the scions of the gentry and officials are among those who attend.

"The school was opened with a dinner to the officials, gentry, and leading business men, to which the president of the bank was invited. After hearing all the speeches and getting a clear idea of what we were about, the banker said to me, "I have three young men in the bank who will come to the night school."

"The next evening they came. Lok Tz Tsing was one of them. I shall never forget my first glance at him. His form was erect and strong, his face fine and thoughtful, his dark eyes shone with a mild, steady, winning light, and his every aspect bespoke a man. He was not long in proving himself a man of clean, studious, business-like habits. He made rapid progress in reading and speaking English. I felt strangely drawn to him. I was not surprised to hear from the banker of the esteem in which he was held by the business men of the city. And the more I thought about him, the more I wanted him for my Lord.

"The classes in the night school are preceded by twenty minutes of worship; I do not think I have ever started to that service since the first few weeks without making specific prayer to God that the message of the evening might 'find' Lok Tz Tsing. After a few months the pastor and teachers were praying daily for him. A little later he was placed on the prayer list of the local missionary body, and every Saturday night for a year has been the object of earnest supplication by that group. A few months after our first acquaintance, my wife invited the three young men from the bank to our home for dinner and a social evening. Two of the Christian Chinese workers were invited with them, and special prayer was made in secret and in the mission meeting that this social fellowship might bring these three nearer to Christ. A week after this dinner, at the close of last spring's session, all three of these men signed a card promising to read a chapter in God's Word each day.

"This sort of prayer and work has been kept up all during this year. We have been rejoiced all along to feel that Tz Tsing was drawing nearer and nearer each day.

"About three months ago we decided to ask him to join the Sunday-school Teachers' Training Class and become a teacher of a class of boys. To our great joy he accepted and I think has never missed either Teachers' Training Class or Sunday-school since.

"Towards the end of the present session of the night school we began to feel that there were a number of the students that were 'almost persuaded,' and to devise plans to make them 'altogether.' We arranged for special appeal and decision services the last week of school—next week. As preliminary to that meeting I was making some chapel talks direct to the hearts of the boys, calling on them to be ready for anything for the sake of Christ. One evening about two weeks ago the passage was Matthew 16:13-28, and I stressed the call of a divine Christ for men to follow Him to suffering and death in the service of others. I have never been more sensible of His presence than while speaking that night. I have never had greater liberty. While I was speaking Mr. Lok's eyes fairly glowed and I felt that the long prayed for moment had arrived; that his heart was genuinely touched, and he was ready for the surrender. All through the first lesson period I was silently praying for God to open a convenient opportunity for a personal interview. At the recess it came. Mr. Lok withdrew from the crowd into the dark, where he stood alone taking arm exercises. It was dark and no one was near. The Spirit said, 'Now is the time; speak to him.' I stepped up to him, laid my hand on his shoulder and said, 'Mr. Lok, we've been praying for you a long time. When are you going to be baptized?' Suddenly there came over his face a look of utmost joy, he threw his arms around me, and with deep feeling said, 'Just as soon as you can arrange to do it.' My heart beat wildly with joy and gratitude. I could hardly wait to break the news to my wife, who had been teaching him shorthand, typewriting, and bookkeeping. When she heard it she clapped her hands and said, 'Oh, how glad I am I did not give up. I am so tired in the afternoons that two hours teaching wears me out, but this is worth it all.' The faith of the whole missionary community has been wonderfully strengthened, while our native church has taken on a different aspect and has been, as it were, born anew. Let all who read this join us in thanksgiving, and continue in prayer that this sort of work may go on conquering and to conquer."

TO CANDIDATES FOR THE FOREIGN FIELD

The daughter of Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, who laid down her life in the missionary work in India, wrote her brother, a prospective missionary, the following weighty counsel:

"I write words for you to ponder and pray over. Do not go to any foreign field until you know beyond a doubt that God Himself sent you to that particular field at that particular time. If you marry any mission field in haste, you will repent at lesiure. There is a romance or halo about being a missionary which disappears when you get on the field, I assure you. And, believe me, from the first minute you step upon shipboard upon your way to a foreign field, the devil and all his agents will attack, and entice, and ensnare you, or try to do all these, in order to defeat the purpose for which you cut loose and launched. Nothing but the fulness of the Holy Spirit will carry any one through; and if you do not know that you have received this, do not fail to obey the command to 'tarry until ye be endued with power from on high.' Believe me, the foreign field is already full enough of prophets that have run, and He did not send them. Because of this, things are in a bad state in India, in the missions themselves.

"If you know beyond a doubt—and you may—that God is empowering and sending you there and now, go and fear not, and when through days, months, and years of suffering that are sure to come in this cross-bearing life, the questions arise again and again, 'Why is this? Am I in God's path?' the rock to which you will hold in this sea of questionings and distresses is, 'God sent me here, I know beyond a doubt, therefore I may go on, fearing nothing, for He is responsible, and He alone.' But if you do admit, 'I do not know whether He sent me or not,' you will be thrown into an awful stress of mind by the attacks of the great adversary, not knowing what will be the outcome, and you will find yourself crying out, 'Oh, that it were time to go home. What a fool I was to run ahead of the Lord.' Do not think, my brother, that God sends us to the field to sweetly tell the story of Jesus, and that is all. He sends us there to do what Jesus came into the world to do—to bear the cross. But we will be able to trudge on, though bowed under the weight of that cross of suffering, and even of shame, if our hearts are full of Him, and our eyes are ever looking upon the One who is invisible, the One who sent us forth, and therefore will carry us through. I pray that this message may shake in you all that can be shaken, that that which cannot be shaken may remain on the Rock of Ages."—Selected.

"COALS OF FIRE"

By Willis R. Hotchkiss, of the Friends African Industrial Mission

The long line of patients had been attended to; only one, a young woman, remained, and I was binding up her foot, the whole upper portion of which was one great sloughing ulcer. Occupied with my task I did not notice the approach of my boy, Vui, until I heard him say, "Bwana, nimepiga Mkamba"—"Master, I have hit an Mkamba." Finishing my work I looked up and, used as I was to scenes of blood, I gave an involuntary shudder at sight of the lad. A ragged, gaping wound in his head fully three inches long was pouring a stream of blood down over his face, and his shirt and loin cloth already crimson.

He said nothing about his having been hurt himself, so I said, "What is the matter, Vui? Who has done this?" "I went to the river to get some water," said he, "when a man sprang upon me to kill me. I beat him off with my club and cut his head, and he broke his club over my head. And, master, there is a great crowd down there and they are going to kill us all."

I had been only a few months among them and had not yet succeeded in breaking down their natural suspicion against white men, a suspicion which had been created and fostered through contact with unscrupulous traders and some government officials. At once it struck me that this incident might in some way be turned to account for the Master, though I scarce knew how.

So I said to Vui, "We will go down and see about it." I went into the house and got a sponge with which to wash off his wound, and came out just as I was, in my shirt sleeves, and started off. Vui looked at me curiously, hesitated and then said, "Bwana, usimepta bunduki yaku?"—"Master, have you not taken your rifle?" "No," said I, "we are here on God's business, and He will take care of us, and we will be safe anywhere without the gun." At such times I found it much better to display no weapon, for its very presence created suspicion, and was thus an element of danger rather than of safety.

Arriving at the river, which was about two hundred yards away, sure enough the whole river bed was filled—there being no running water in it at the time—with a howling mob of painted savages, armed with bows and poisoned arrows, spears and short swords. They were evidently bent on mischief. Decisive measures had to be taken, and that quickly. So with a wordless prayer I walked into the midst of them, much to their astonishment. This was the best course I could have pursued, for they have at first a superstitious awe of a white man, not knowing but that he has some unseen method of defending himself.

The leader of the band, who likewise had a huge gash in his head from Vui's club, made a dash at him, but springing between them I began talking to the crowd, asking them if I had ever harmed them in any way; if I had not paid them well for everything I got from them; if I had not ministered to their sick; if I had not showed them in many ways that I was their friend.

Gradually they cooled down and became silent as I talked, and when the arrows were taken from the bows, and the hands quit playing with the swords, I took Vui to a water pool, cleansed his wound, and sent him off down the river for his water. Then to their amazement, I took the wounded leader, pulled him to the water-hole and began to do the same with him. They could not understand it. "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," yea, a life for a life, is the only law their poor minds can grasp and they rigidly adhere to it. That the white man should take his worst enemy, and do to him the same kindness he had done for his own boy was so foreign to their ideas of justice that they simply stood and looked on in wonder.

Having cleansed the wound thoroughly, and noting the advantage I had gained, I followed it up by saying: "Now if you will come up to the house, I will put on some medicine." Slowly they followed me up the path, thoroughly vanquished. Getting out my instruments I shaved the head, sewed up the ragged wound, bound it up carefully, and they went away. From that day their attitude changed, the stubborn opposition melted away, sufferers thronged the station, and some of those who had been most troublesome became my staunchest friends. Thereafter I could go anywhere through that country unarmed, so far as danger from the people was concerned.

How long shall Africa remain the "Dark Continent," a reproach to Christianity, a menace to the world?

—The Southern Evangel.

HE SMASHED THE GLASS

An African chief once was presented a mirror by a missionary. The African looked into it and for the first time saw his face and it was an ugly face. He had sense enough to know that it was ugly. He threw the mirror to the ground, smashing it to pieces. Smashing the looking glass did not make the chief's face any more beautiful, but he could not see it.

In like manner some people treat the Bible, J. Campbell White says. They look into the Bible and see themselves, and because the heart looks ugly in the heart of the Bible, they throw the Bible away. Maybe they just put it on the shelf and leave it there unread. Some smash the Bible for themselves by denying its divine authority; they seem to think that thus they get rid of their moral ugliness.—Selected.

WHAT OF THE TASK?

In the Etah District this is no less than the giving of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the entire population of this field, approximately 450,000. There is no other organization now, nor likely to be, within the present generation at least, and probably never, to whom the people living within these bounds can look for this knowledge.

In February, 1915, the following action was taken by the Etah church:

"Believing that our Lord's command to give the gospel to every creature applies to the Etah church in regard to its own section, therefore, we officers, members and missionaries connected with this church and its activities would make it our aim and purpose to give the knowledge of Jesus Christ to the 'every creature' of our field. In this application of the general policy of complete evangelization of this field, we regard the church which has been established here as an agency of first importance in the work of evangelization.

"We accept the command to Christ as applying to the present generation. The command of the King urges and presses us forward. We believe that He expects us to hasten His return by witnessing and seeking out the lost. We have made it one of our aims, that every believer be a missionary."—The Assembly Herald.

Your love has a broken wing if it cannot fly across the sea.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

Win China to Christ and the most powerful stronghold of Satan upon earth will have fallen —Mr. Wong.

The word discouragement is not to be found in the dictionary of the Kingdom of heaven. —Melinda Rankin.

Prayer and pains, through faith in Jesus Christ, will do anything.—John Eliot (on last page of his Indian grammar).

We are the children of the converts of foreign missionaries; and fairness means that I must do to others as men once did to me.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

Forget not that your first and principal business as a disciple of Christ is to give the gospel to those who have it not. He who is not a missionary Christian will be a missing Christian when the great day comes of bestowing the rewards of service.—Dr. A. J. Gordon.

When some one asked a missionary if he liked his work in Africa, he replied, "Do I like this work? No; my wife and I do not like dirt. We have reasonably refined sensibilities. We do not like crawling into vile huts through goat refuse. We do not like association with ignorant, filthy brutish people. But is a man to do nothing for Christ he does not like? God pity him, if not. Liking or disliking a thing has nothing to do with it. We have orders to 'go' and we go. Love constrains us. Such love begets the strength to do the 'all things.'"—Missionary Review.

THE MASS MOVEMENT AT ETAH

In 1899 the mass movement in connection with the work of our Mission began in the Etah District. During that year 467 were baptized by Rev. Henry Forman, and for the next 15 years there was an average addition of about 350 a year. In one year the number reached over 1,000 who confessed Christ in baptism. In 1911 the number of converts and of workers, both Indian and foreign, had grown to an extent that justified a division of the work, and a second station was opened at Kasganj. At the present writing, probably not more than 600 or 800 of that particular caste of "untouchables" of this district are outside the pale of the church.

CENTRAL AMERICA

Centrāl America, the beautiful region lying south of Mexico, is divided into five republics (Guatemala, Nicaragua, Honduras, Salvador and Costa Rica) with a total area of 195,000 square miles, a population of over 5,000,000, nearly one-half of whom are Indians. The prevailing religion is a superstitious form of Roman Catholicism, but all religions are tolerated. Many missionaries are needed and there would be no danger of "building on another man's foundation." There are over one million to whom the gospel message would be "news" indeed.

"Too good, this Word, to hear alone," thus thought
Samaria's daughter standing by the well:
And hastening villagewards she quickly brought Others to hear what Jesus had to tell.
"Too good to hear alone, and I must share
With other folks the gladness of this Word."
So spoke a daughter of Ceylon, who ne'er
Before the gospel of God's grace had heard.
And we, who know the power of Jesus' name
And countless precious gospel blessings own,
Can we account ourselves as free from blame
Whilst myriad souls in heathen bondage groan?
Oh, may these women make us feel some shame,
And deem that Word "too good to hear alone."

COSTLY

"I want you to spend fifteen minutes every day praying for foreign missions," once said a pastor to some young people in his congregation. "But beware how you pray, for I warn you that it is a very costly experiment."

"Costly?" they asked in surprise.

"Ay, costly," he cried. "When Carey began to pray for the conversion of the world, it cost him himself, and it cost those who prayed with him very much. Brainard prayed for the red-skinned savages, and after two years of blessed work it cost him his life. Two students in Mr. Moody's summer school began to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more servants into His harvest; and, lo, it is going to cost our country thousands of young men and women who have, in answer to this prayer, gone forth to foreign fields, or pledged themselves to this work." —Forward.

CONSOLATION IN CHRIST

"If there be, therefore, any consolation in Christ."—Phil. 2:1.

I. True and Real Consolation Is in Christ.

Simeon waited for the "consolation of Israel" (Luke 2:25), and Paul mentions it in 2 Corinthians 1:5.

1. Christ's Name Full of Consolation. Especially His name "Jesus"—the Saviour; man's only deliverer from wrath to come. His name "Christ"—the anointed Son of God, anointed Messiah of the world.

2. Consolation in the Constitution of His Person. Divine, therefore able to save to the uttermost. Human, bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. Capable of suffering; His sufferings of infinite efficacy and value.

3. Consolation in the Work He Effected. Magnified the law; opened heaven's gates, by the shedding of His blood; procured all the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit. Died the just for the unjust, that He might bring man to God.

4. In the Offices He Bears. The true prophet enlightening man; the High Priest who offered the eternal sacrifice for sin. A King whose throne shall endure forever.

5. In the Station He Now Occupies. Our Intercessor before God. Our Advocate with the Father. By whom we have our prayers, services, and persons accepted.

II. There Is Consolation in Christ, for:

1. The Convicted Sinner. He who has had his eyes opened to his sin and misery. Who sees his poverty, danger and nakedness.

2. For the Contrite. The gospel especially for the broken-hearted.

3. For Afflicted and Tempted Believers.

4. For Dying Saints. He has overcome and destroyed the sting.

5. Everlasting Consolation for the Glorified Spirits in Heaven. He gives them a mansion, crowns them with life eternal, and gives free access to the tree of life. —J. Burns.

THE DEVIL HAS NONE OF THESE

One day A. J. Gordon met an old man singing. "Friend," said Doctor Gordon, "why should an old man be so cheerful?" "Not all are." "Well, then, why are you?" "Because I belong to the Lord." "And are none others happy at your time of life?" "No, not one, my friendly questioner," said he, and his form straightened. "Listen to the truth from one who knows, and no man of three-score and ten shall be found to deny it: The devil has no happy old men!" —Biblical Recorder.

COMMUNION THOUGHTS

"This do in remembrance of me."

1. The Lord's Supper is pre-eminently a memorial feast. It commemorates Jesus' death. It assures us that He really died. His death was no feigned death. When His poor, bruised, blood-stained body was taken down from the cruel cross, it was wholly, completely, totally dead. He foretold His death: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me. This spake he, signifying by what death he should die." The evangelists declared it when they recorded, "He cried with a loud voice, and gave up his spirit." His resurrection requires it. A feigned death could only be followed by a feigned resurrection. "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, you are yet in your sins." Anything else than the actual death of Christ robs the Christian of all hope.

2. This memorial feast emphasizes the death of Christ, as compared with His life and teachings. Why did the Saviour not leave us an ordinance commemorative of His life and preservative of His teachings? Evidently, because His death is the event of greatest importance. We are not saved by Jesus' life, nor by his teachings. Atonement with God is purchasable only by the sacrifice on Calvary. The eye of the Saviour, looking down the corridors of time, foresaw the danger of putting the emphasis on His life and teachings at the expense of His death, and to forestall this established a memorial commemorative of His death, that the Christian church might never be led astray, and lose the point that sacrifice is essential to salvation.

3. But this remembrance of Christ looks forward as well as backward. We are to "proclaim the Lord's death till he come." Let not those significant words, "till he come," be obscured by prejudice or unbelief. The Lord's Supper is a permanent, authoritative reminder that He is coming again. We neither need nor are able to know when. We are free to interpret Scripture on these points as God enables us, but the important fact is, "He is coming," and every communion feast reminds us of this next greatest event in all human history.

4. The Saviour said, "This do." We have no choice. We have the direct command of Him whom we are professing to obey. He says distinctly and authoritatively, "This do." In the face of this direct command, can we be indifferent, negligent, or lacking in obedience? There are some among us who explain away by a kind of sophistry the need and practice of communion, and yet call themselves Christians. The Saviour distinctly says, "This do," yet they explain it away and refuse the Holy Communion. Others are careless in the celebration of this sacred feast, and go for months and sometimes for years without obeying this important command. Let us hear and heed our Lord and Master as He says to all the church, "This do."—Herald and Presbyter.

ANSWERING GOD'S CALL

"What shall I do, Lord?"—Acts 22:10.

Remember, you can be a prophet to one soul as well as to a nation. Elijah was just as truly a prophet when he went and called Elisha at the plough-tail as when he stood on Carmel and by prayer brought down fire from heaven. You may not be a prophet to a whole land, but you may be the messenger of God to one soul, and that one may be the servant in your house. You may be called of God to be an intercessor, not for hundreds of people, or churches, but for one person's soul, and that one soul may be your own unconverted child. You may be called of God to rule in some very narrow sphere. The great thing is to get the anointing that trains and fits for service, and then obedience to the leading of the Spirit and humble dependence upon Him will do all the rest.

—Chas. Inwood.

THE WASTE OF CHRISTIAN INFLUENCE

Sermonette

"Let the redeemed of the Lord say so."—Ps. 107:2.

It is their duty. The man who has been blessed is in duty bound to become a witness. The enriched disciple must become a busy apostle. He who has heard the word of life must himself become a messenger. "Let him that heareth say, Come!" Experiences must record themselves in expression. The world is waiting for witnesses, and especially for witnesses of the lay and unofficial order. The witness of the regular minstry is partly discounted because of our calling. Our testimony is expected, and it is thereby deprived of the element of surprise. But when a business man witnesses to the power of redeeming grace the testimony runs with arresting strength. It is this kind of witness who captures the interest of the jury and wins their verdict. The world, I say, is waiting for lay witnesses, and too often their testimony is hid like a lamp put under a bushel. "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so!" It is their duty to add the power of their experiences to the record of redeeming grace.

But it is also their sacred interest. Experiences which are denied expression speedily fade away. Expression confirms experience, it sustains it and enriches it. Sentiments which find no voice find it hard to live. Gratitude which never says "Thank you!" pines away in its silence. Expression gives air to sentiments and quickens and strengthens them. It is ever so with a truth of revelation. We confess our hold upon a truth when we become its witness. Many doubts melt away like mist when our souls go into the open air of public testimony. When the disciple of truth becomes its apostle it clothes itself in more radiant glory. And so do I say it is our interest to declare what the Lord hath done for our souls.

"Ye shall be my witnesses!" That was our Lord's command. The world is waiting for our obedience.—J. H. Jowett.

GOD'S INDIVIDUAL CARE

I have read of two professors' wives in one of our colleges who decided to help the students by paying them attention. One of them sent out invitations written thus:

"Mrs. Pool. At home from 7 to 10 p. m."

Some of the boys came, found servants in livery, and everything cold and formal. One of them declared, when he had reached his room, that he was more wearied than if he had been at a recitation. The other wife simply sent an invitation to the class of students through her husband. He told them that he and his wife would be glad to see them at their home for tea and a pleasant evening; no special preparation needed. The boys went and were received, each one being greeted with a cordial handshake. They chatted and sang around the piano, a little out of tune, but they enjoyed it all the same, and when the time came to leave, the professor's wife said:

"This is your home. I may not be here all the time; but the books, and the room, and the fire, and, in the spring, the garden, will be open to you. They are all yours. Come, and enjoy them whenever you like."

That house was a home to a score of boys for several years, and the professor's wife was looked up to by them as a mother.

It was personal, individual attention that made the difference in the two receptions. God does not invite us in crowds. He calls us by name. He talks to us face to face. He wants to help us Himself.—A. C. Dixon, in Heaven on Earth.

CORRESPONDENCE OF GENESIS WITH REVELATION

(a) First heaven and earth (Gen. 1).
  (b) Husband and wife (Gen. 2).
    (c) Sentence pronounced upon Satan (Gen. 3).
    (c) Sentence executed upon Satan (Rev. 20).
  (b) Husband and wife (Rev. 21).
(a) Last heaven and earth (Rev. 22).

The opening and the closing facts of history are substantially one, and the order of them is such as to preclude mere coincidence, and to establish divine correspondence.

(a) Heaven and Earth are first and last;

(b) Then, a Husband and Wife degraded at the beginning, and glorified at the end;

(c) And, centrally, sentence is pronounced upon the devil at the beginning, and executed upon him at the end. It is little wonder that he hates both Genesis and Revelation, and strives to get Christians to believe that the one is all myth and the other all mystery.

—W. Graham Scroggie.

HOW TO KILL THE PRAYER MEETING

1. Don't go near it.
2. If you go, go late.
3. Go, but don't pray.
4. If you do pray, pray long and low.
5. In prayer, mention everything, but ask for nothing.
6. Yawn and stare while others are praying.
7. Commence praying when it is time to close.

HOW TO BEAR THE ROD

It is difficult to conceive anything more beautiful than the reply given by one in affliction, when he was asked how he bore it so well. "It lightens the stroke," said he, "to draw near to Him who handles the rod."—Herald of Holiness.

The Evangelistic Field

SUGGESTIONS TO OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

Evangelists and other Christian workers reporting items or contributing any matter for this department will please arrange to have copy reach the magazine not later than the 6th of the month preceding date of issue.

"The Evangelistic Field" department is intended for news in concise reports of revival meetings, soul-winning campaigns, and a record of evangelistic work in general. We do not invite statements eulogizing the leaders or participants in this line of work, nor can we promise to print them.—Editors.

David F. Nygren and party report they have been conducting meetings in Texas during October.

J. W. Mack has succeeded E. W. McCaslin in charge of the work at the Hope Gospel Mission, Detroit, Mich.

I. E. Honeywell, assisted by the Prestons held a meeting the early part of October at Kewanna, Ind. They go next to Toronto, Canada.

Joseph C. Ludgate of Wheaton, Ill., reports having conducted union meetings at Muscotah, Kan. The services were held in a tent, and large crowds attended.

Rev. and Mrs. J. C. Cardiff, who have been located at Caldwell, Kan., where Mr. Cardiff was pastor of the Baptist church, will again take up work in the evangelistic field.

James A. Armstrong writes as follows from Eolia, Mo., under date of September 18: "We are in the midst of a glorious meeting under the big tent. We go from here to Cyrene, Mo., for meeting in October."

Gypsy Smith, Jr., and party report a great revival in Chester, S. C., the latter part of September. The crowds filled a tent seating 2,500 people, to overflowing, and the Spirit of Christ was manifested in great power.

W. C. Moorman writes from Cameron, Mo.: "Our meeting at Arley, Mo., with the Methodists, was a great success. The church folk were greatly revived. Rev. H. L. Irmiger is the pastor, and in great favor with his people."

H. Evan McKinley, writing from Royal Center, Ind., says: "Just closed my sixth revival meeting here in radius of twenty miles and have one more yet. The Lord is wonderfully good to me. Eight delegations attended our meetings here."

In a meeting at Armstrong, Mo., Dr. H. P. Dunlop and wife found the largest auditorium too small to accommodate the people who crowded in to hear the gospel of Jesus and His love. Prayers of God's people are requested for these workers.

The Vom Bruch Party closed a three weeks' union effort at La Salle, Ill., with sixty-two at the altar seeking Christ, and one hundred eighty-two decisions were recorded. The meetings were counted a great success, as the town is 90 per cent Catholic. The party next went to Los Angeles, Calif.

R. G. Heddon reports a meeting in St. James, Ill. He held services at this point two years ago and they urgently requested him to come back after his return from overseas. He announces that he has accepted a pastorate with the Congregational church at Tomahawk, Wis. beginning November 6.

John M. Linden, with his Singing-Evangelist, Wm. S. Dixon, is now in the midst of a great tent revival campaign with all of the churches co-operating at Cairo, Ill. Miss Sarah C. Palmer is the women's worker of the party. The first ten days' services indicate that God is owning and blessing the campaign.

John Imrie, and Mrs. Imrie, singing evangelists, were engaged in a union meeting of four churches at Ripon, Wis. The churches were greatly revived and the town was awakened. The revival was held in the college gymnasium. From Ripon they went to Dighton, Kan., to join Evangelist W. A. Burch.

The John S. Hamilton Party report having closed a successful tent meeting at Howe, Ind. Three townships, nine churches, united in this effort. Hundreds of reconsecrations and decisions were made. Lily Grace Matheson, pianist and young people's worker, and Harry Storrs, chorister, assisted in the campaign.

T. L. Muir reports as follows: "We closed at Georgetown, Pa., with an old fashioned revival, many new decisions and much prayer. We are now in a union campaign at Greenville, N. Y., with large crowds attending and much interest shown. Russell E. Kauffman, of Dayton, O., is assisting as musical director and soloist."

W. A. Bodell, who has been supplying the First Church of Springfield, and First Church of Lincoln, Ill., while the pastor was overseas for a year and a half, resumed evangelistic work, October 1. His first meeting opened at La Plata, Mo., October 1, assisted by Mr. H. O. Echols. Mr. Bodell's home address will be 603 E. Grove St., Bloomington, Ill.

Evangelist John C. O'Hair has just closed a union evangelistic and Bible-teaching campaign at Kenedy, Tex., with large numbers enjoying the opening up of the Word of God. After Bible teaching work for two weeks at Yoakum, Tex., he will return to Oak Park, Ill., to commence again the winter circuit of Bible teaching classes in Chicago and vicinity.

The Colegrove Evangelistic Party finished a most successful union campaign in the Congregational church of Saranac, Mich., where a former M. B. I. student is pastor (W. S. Ross). Joseph S. Waugh and Elizabeth Goble Meyer, also former students, are members of the party. From there the party went to Potterville, Mich., where they will conduct a union tabernacle campaign—Oct. 15-Nov. 9.

A. J. Hall, Omaha, Neb., sends the following report: "Rev. H. H. Rayburn closed a two weeks' meeting at Hillside Congregational Church, September 19. The church received six new members Sunday, and at a business meeting Wednesday, increased their pastor's salary from $780 to $1,200. The outlook for the coming year is promising. Mr. Rayburn preaches a straight, sound gospel."

A. J. Fitt, Fort Logan, Colo., writes: "Our work goes along nicely. The opinion of our speakers is that it is the greatest opportunity for soul winning anywhere round here. All churches are represented in our speakers, and the Gideons do fine work. In September there were eighty definite decisions for Christ, 126 signed for rededication, 798 Testaments were given away, 1,240 tracts distributed, and there were sixty-two personal interviews."

S. D. Goodale writes: "We closed our meeting at Norwich, Kan., last Sunday night. It was a real revival of religion. This is what most churches sadly need, rather than a lot of new members. We had quite a number of conversions, fourteen responding to the gospel invitation on the last night. Almost all who came forward in the meeting, were, or had been members of the church. We began here in Osborn, Mo., on Tuesday night. I held a meeting here about seven years ago. The outlook is great."

Clyde Lee Fife writes:

"In five weeks' work down here in Arkansas, we have won about one thousand people for Jesus Christ, added them to the churches and raised the pastors' salaries thousands of dollars to meet the new conditions of living since the war. Thousands of dollars were easily raised for all phases of work of the meetings and no guarantee was asked for anything in advance. The tabernacles were built in one day from lumber cut, hauled, sawed and built in one day's time from the time it left the stump until the roof was on and seats in."

Harry Dixon Loes and Miss Birdie C. Loes report meetings at Burlington, N. Dak. Mr. Loes is associated with Evangelist P. E. Wells. The first campaign of the season was held at Mayville, N. Dak., in a large rink—the largest hall available. The drawing power of the meetings extended as far as fifty-seven miles. Mr. and Miss Loes gave an informal musical program on Monday night, following the close of the revival. The latter part of the service was devoted to testimony on the part of converts, and the power of the Holy Spirit was unusually manifested therein.

Pat B. Withrow writes from Charleston, W. Va., as follows: "Miss Sara C. Palmer has just closed a three weeks' campaign. The work was unique inasmuch as it touched all classes in the city, from the drawing rooms of the wealthy, through Sunday-school convention audiences, to the congregations assembled at the Union Mission. Many are praising God for the splendid way in which the gospel was presented, and many more for the new vision of Jesus Christ received through the teaching of the Word of God. Miss Palmer has left a host of friends behind her in Charleston and our prayers follow her wherever she goes."

F. A. and Mrs. Geisenheiner with a Ford car left Chicago July 8, returning September 4, having made a 2,200 mile trip through Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Iowa, visiting the rural communities, where they had held revival meetings, to encourage the converts and if possible to get others to see the wisdom of becoming Christians. These evangelists were much encouraged to find that many of the converts were still faithful and doing telling work in their communities. Mr. Giesenheiner is now assisting in special meetings on the field of Rev. C. F. Geiger at Chatfield, Minn., and at the present writing, though three services have been held, the power of God has been manifested in the saving of a number. The friends of this work are asked to remember it in prayer.

"Lucky Baldwin," known to many of our readers, reports encouraging work in his position as chaplain at the House of Correction, Chicago, and as Prison Gate Missionary. He has expressed a willingness to conduct meetings on Sundays for churches near Chicago, and may be addressed at 153 Institute Place, Chicago. Mr. Baldwin has recently written a statement, as to how he acquired the name, "Lucky Baldwin."

"Every time I speak I invariably receive a dozen inquiries as to how I acquired the name of 'Lucky Baldwin.'

"When I left home as a young man, whatever my misdoing I was always anxious to shield my mother and family from any stain. They were numerous and highly respected in our neighborhood. So I changed my surname from Balfe to Baldwin, chiefly because the first syllable was the same in each. For most of my years in sin, I was known to the world as 'C. J. Baldwin' and to my companions as 'Lucky.'

"My many escapades without punishment, or enough punishment to fit the crime, earned me the sobriquet of 'Lucky,' hence the name of 'Lucky Baldwin.'

"After my conversion I unconsciously went under the name of C. J. Baldwin (I had worn the name for about twenty-five years). My first Bible has that name engraved on its cover.

"One day I was leaving the Old Jerry McAuley Mission, where I was converted and an old family friend saw me, and said, 'Hello, Balfe.' Then it dawned on me that I was a Christian and under an assumed name. I hastened back to the mission, and explained my unintentional duplicity to the superintendent and was assured it was all right.

"My family never knew of the awfulness of my life until after the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleansed me from all sin, and I told it for His Glory."

Book Notices

Any book favorably mentioned below may be secured at prices named from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 822 North La Salle Street, Chicago.

Il Profeta Daniele

This is a translation into Italian of Mr. Gaebelein's excellent work on the prophet Daniel. It is offered for free distribution among Italian Christians desiring to start Bible classes in prophecy, and can be obtained from the office of Our Hope, 456 Fourth Avenue, New York City. All friends of the truth will rejoice in this enlarged ministry of such a helpful book.

Social Christianity in the New Era, by Chaplain Thomas Tiplady.

The author here employs his fine literary talent in depicting the conditions and needs in the present crisis; and in a larger way, the significance of the present crisis, with a hope for a better order in the new era. This will come by a slow process, but a league of the churches will, when once formed, achieve this result. The Chaplain has had a wide experience with the more unfortunate, and has a heart for them. But is social service the supreme task of the Church? Is it not rather evangelism?

Paul's Conversion, by Chas. F. Reitzel.

This book purports to be a study of "the dualism in the record of Paul's Conversion," which came into the author's consciousness by "inspiration or revelation" some eighteen years ago. The hypothesis is that there are "couplets" of Scripture descriptive of the particulars of this conversion, the two passages, jointly, suggesting themes for the respective chapters or discussions. Some of the couplets are similar, some, complementary and some, antithetic in content. Many of the passages are from the ninth chapter of the Acts; others, from later chapters, and still others, from the Pauline epistles.

A Text-Book on Prophecy, by Rev. James M. Gray, D. D.

The content of this volume appeared as a series of prophetic studies in The Christian Herald of New York. They now appear in book form, by request, in the belief that they are worthy of a wider perusal. It is the author's hope that "this simple text-book may be useful to beginners and stimulate them to broader and profounder study of prophecy." Especially interesting, helpful and stimulating are the expositions of disputed scriptures and the prophecies relating to the Roman Empire and Russia; also the prophecies of Benjamin Wills Newton, and of the author, that have had such startling fulfilment after the time of the writing by these two men.

The book is most helpfully pedagogical in spirit and form, and the more helpful by the successive reviews and the questions appended to each chapter.

The Preacher's Ideals and Inspirations, by William J. Hutchins.

This engaging and scholarly volume by the Oberlin Professor of Homiletics is "for the average man who in a small parish in the face of grave difficulties tries to continue true to the dreams of his youth, to the teachings of his seminary days, and to the demands of the living present." The themes are, The Preacher and His Times; The Preacher and His Sermon; The Preacher and His Bible; Abraham Lincoln; The Preacher's Teacher; The Preacher and His Master. There is here much of worth and permanent value. But there is an avowal of the higher criticism and interpretations of Scripture colored by modern Biblical scholarship.

Quiet Talks on the Deeper Meaning of the War and Its Relation to Our Lord's Return, by S. D. Gordon.

This is the author's third book on the Lord's return, and is based on the Old Testament prophecies, with such references to the New Testament as demand consistent treatment. Here are embodied both his literary and spiritual virtues together with a superb evaluation of the crises of history, of which the recent war was one. Visits on spiritual errands, to the two leading belligerents before America joined the Allies helped him to an appreciation of the real issues. There were other causes but supremely it was Satan's latest effort to gain entire control of man. As such it was symptomatic and clearly indicates the certainty of the final combat, to be followed by the Lord's return and the glories of the millennial age, according to prophecy.

DR. TOWNER WITH THE LORD

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them." Revelation 14: 13.

The last but one of the great gospel soloists and composers who were intimately associated with D. L. Moody—P. P. Bliss, Ira D. Sankey, James H. McGranahan, D. B. Towner and George C. Stebbins—has joined the illustrious company which has gone before to be with the Lord and one another.

Dr. Towner passed away suddenly on October 3 at Longwood, Mo., where he was engaged in evangelistic meetings, about his Master's business until called, with but a few hours' warning to lay his armor down. The cause of death was acute uraemia.

Dr. D. B. Towner

The news of his departure has saddened many hearts and called to mind the world-wide extent and exceeding fruitfulness of his service in the gospel.

Those whose hearts as well as ears have been reached by Dr. Towner's voice in song during the past forty years would number a vast multitude; a great company of students and singing evangelists were trained under him for their gospel-music ministry during the twenty-six years of his work as director of the Institute's Music Course; and the host of others throughout the world who have been blessed by his ministry in hymn composition no man could estimate.

Wherever gospel songs are sung D. B. Towner's name is known and loved, and none but God can measure the blessing ministered to millions through the heavenly endowment given him.

Whether in the Institute classrooms or in the Moody Church (of which he was chorister and an elder) as conductor, soloist or composer, or in the evangelistic field at home or abroad, he was a tower of strength in the work of the gospel; of striking countenance, tall, massive figure, buoyant temperament, alert mind and ready wit; masterful not only in his musical labors, but also in charge of the evangelistic after-meetings he was often called upon to handle. His keen sense of humor enlivened the sessions of all his classes and contributed much to his popularity as an instructor.

Born in Rome, Pa., in 1850, Dr. Towner began his musical training under his father and studied later under those famous musicians, George F. Root, John Howard and Frederick Root.

It was in 1883 at Cincinnati that he first met Mr. Moody. There he trained and conducted a chorus of one thousand voices for Mr. Moody's meetings, the largest chorus Mr. Moody had ever had up to that time. Thereafter he was associated with Mr. Moody until the latter's death. In 1893 he became director of the Institute's Music Course and chorister of the Moody Church, continuing in the latter capacity until 1916 and in the former until his resignation last January.

Verily, his works do follow him. While the Lord tarries it can scarcely be doubted that the saints will continue to sing "Trust and Obey," "Anywhere With Jesus," "My Anchor Holds," "Saving Grace" (O Golden Day), "Saved by the Blood of the Crucified One," "Only a Sinner Saved by Grace," "He's a Friend of Mine," "Immanuel, Prince of Peace," "Jesus Is Tenderly Calling for Thee," "Look and Live," "The Better Land," "Come Home," "God Calling Yet," "The Old Time Fire," "The Sunset Gate," "Speak Just a Word for Jesus," "Full Surrender," "Grace Greater Than Our Sin," and others of his Spirit-given melodies.

The total of Dr. Towner's musical compositions exceeds 2,000 and he also edited twenty-three hymnals.

It is our fervent prayer that the God of all comfort shall strengthen and sustain in this heavy bereavement all who were near and dear to him, especially his aged mother, past 93, his wife and daughter, Mrs. Willett, and his brother.

At the memorial service held in the Institute Auditorium Monday evening, Oct. 20, Dean Gray presided and gave a brief sketch of his relations with Dr. Towner, extending over a period of twenty-five years. He was followed by Mr. E. S. Lorenz, the music publisher of Dayton, and a friend and business associate of Dr. Towner. An appreciative letter was read from Mr. George C. Stebbins, who is the last remaining gospel singer and composer of distinction who was associated with D. L. Moody in his work. Messrs. E. O. Excell, Charles H. Gabriel and Peter P. Bilhorn were also present, and contributed reminiscences and songs. These great singers and composers had relations with Dr. Towner for many years, but were not similarly associated with Mr. Moody.

There was a large attendance, and Dr. Towner's hymns were featured throughout the service.

DR. GRAY ON THE PACIFIC COAST

Dr. Gray is at present conducting a series of Bible Conferences on fundamentals and prophetic themes in Oregon and California, in conjunction with the Rev. W. P. White, D. D., of the United Presbyterian church of Albany, Ore. The conference at Berkeley, Cal., has been organized by a former student, Mr. C. H. Coultes, in association with Dr. Lapsley A. McAfee, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of that city. In Los Angeles, the leader is another former student, the Rev. Dr. Gustav A. Briegleb, pastor of the Westlake Presbyterian Church of that city.

THE OPENING OF THE FALL TERM

Three hundred and nineteen new students entered the Day Classes for the Fall Term, 141 men and 178 women; returning students numbered 233 men and 225 women; making a total enrolment of 777, which is an increase of 115 over a year ago. Seventeen foreign countries, besides most of the States, are represented in the Day Classes, and returned soldiers and sailors number 82.

The enrolment in the Evening Classes is 840, a gain of 136 over last year's figure, and the total enrolment for both Day and Evening Classes is 1,617, giving a total increase of 251.

The reception to the new students by the Faculty and Business Staff was given in Keith Hall on the evening of September 11, Dr. Gray presiding. His brief and happy welcoming remarks were followed by an enthusiastic "sing-song" of favorite gospel hymns led by Professor Latchaw, after which at intervals Professors Holzworth, Schuler, Fellers and Miss Carlson, of the Music Faculty, demonstrated the beautiful tone qualities of the new pipe organ in Keith Hall, and Professor Coffin sang. Refreshments were then served and a most happy evening of fellowship and delightful entertainment ended.

SOME CHANGES AND PROMOTIONS

With the opening of the Fall Term a number of changes were made affecting various departments of the Institute. George V. Kirk was relieved of his duties as Assistant Superintendent of Men and transferred to the Dean's office, in a capacity as yet unnamed, but the purpose of which is to lighten the increasingly heavy burdens resting upon Dr. Gray.

Grover C. Prince, a graduate of August '18, has taken the position of Assistant Chief Clerk of the Employment Bureau, making it possible for the Chief Clerk, Mr. George E. Leslie, to assist Dr. Dale in the Superintendent's office pending the appointment of Mr. Kirk's successor.

Miss Edna Gray Johnson has been made an Assistant Superintendent of Women, with special relation to oversight of the women students in the Institute buildings other than the Women's Building.

Mr. John R. Riebe, who has served heretofore as assistant to the Secretary of the Correspondence Department, has been made Assistant Secretary, and as such assumes the Secretary's responsibilities in the latter's absence.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON BIBLE EXPOSITIONS

Sunday, October 5, there was inaugurated in the Institute Auditorium a service devoted to Bible exposition, with praise and prayer, to be held regularly at the 4 o'clock hour Sunday afternoons. To the large audience which gathered on that date Dr. Gray announced that an inspirational hour was likely to be added later; also that an Institute Sunday-school would be started in the near future, intended not only to minister to the children in the vicinity who do not attend Sunday-school elsewhere, but also to be a model Sunday-school which will afford training of a practical nature in Sunday-school work to the Institute students, under the guidance of Mr. Hugh Cork, of the Faculty, as superintendent. The Sunday-school will meet at 2:30 o'clock, starting at a date to be announced later.

The principal speakers for the fall season at the Sunday afternoon Bible expositions will be Dr. Gray, and Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D., late of Wycliffe College, Toronto.

These Bible expositions have been undertaken under a sense of the pressing need for opening the Scriptures in the simple expository way which all can understand. The marked interest manifested at the service already held is at once a proof of the hunger of God's people for Bible exposition, and a promise of deepened interest and greater blessing to follow.

ORDINATION OF MR. SELLERS

Professor E. O. Sellers was ordained to the ministry on Monday evening, September 22, in the Belden Avenue Baptist Church of this city.

The sermon was preached by Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., the ordination prayer was offered by Rev. A. S. Carman of the Baptist Home Board, the charge to the candidate was given by the pastor of the church, Rev. S. J. Skevington, and the right hand of fellowship extended by Rev. M. P. Boynton.

Mr. Sellers' examination in the afternoon was before one of the largest ordaining councils on record, and his statement of personal experience and doctrinal belief was highly satisfactory.

He left on the following day for his new field of labor in New Orleans.

MR. HUSTON'S ADDRESS

Mr. Charles L. Huston, vice-president of the Lukins Iron and Steel Company of Coatesville, Pa., is one of America's industrial leaders who takes a deep interest in the Lord's work. In the midst of the steel strike he kept an engagement to deliver an address to our students on "Some Confirmations of the Scriptures by Science;" in which, among other interesting points, he explained how science can answer "NO" to the question, "Was there a rainbow before the flood?"

With strikes and non-production and six-hour days in mind he said also: "In these days we must recognize that as long as we are on this earth, man must abide by God's word to Adam, 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread.' He must get his bread from the ground, cursed with thorns and briers through sin. If a man won't work, Paul said, don't let him eat. If some won't till the ground, others have to sweat for them. If we are going to get anything out of this old ground we have to work for it."

THE REDECORATED AUDITORIUM
(Concluded)

In those parts of the building devoted to class rooms and other purposes, there is found the same care in combining convenience and beauty shown in the Auditorium. The same color scheme has been used throughout, and the same wood in the furnishings.

In Keith Hall (formerly church lecture room) the light tan walls, with cream ceilings and pillars, have produced an effect of spaciousness and light, similar to that noted in the Auditorium. New chairs in light oak, semi-indirect suspension lights, and a recently installed pipe organ for the use of the students, have transformed this historic room which is to so many a place of hallowed memories. Besides its use as a class room, it is here at 8:30 on Saturday mornings that the prayer meeting is held in which the entire Institute gathers as a family.

Passing from Keith Hall we enter the Sarah B. Capron room, once the ladies' parlor, and later the Executive Committee room and Sunday-school offices of the Moody Church, now remodeled and occupied as the offices of the Evening Classes.

Foyer to the Offices of the Evening Classes

Here are found the offices of the Superintendents of Men and Women, the Registrar, the Director of Practical Work, and also the post-office for the Evening Classes. The old church office opening from the vestibule of the LaSalle Street entrance has been fitted up for the Director of the Evening Classes.

In the Emma Dryer room, known in earlier

The Moody Bible Institute Auditorium and Buildings Looking North on LaSalle Street days as the "Birdies' Room" and also used for Miss Content Patterson's Bible class, are now held the classes in Elementary English. On Tuesday and Friday each week the suppers for the Evening Classes are served here, folding tables being used that will seat 150 at one time. During the day these tables are stored in cleverly arranged closets built over the kitchen sinks.

The system of preparing and serving these suppers has been carefully worked out with a view to conserving time and labor and insuring the comfort of all. Steam tables holding the hot food, large coffee urns, and supervised serving, adequately provide for the increasing number who avail themselves of the opportunities offered in the Evening Classes.

The kitchen is supplied with a new range, two sinks for washing and rinsing dishes, a third for the cooking utensils, and the necessary cupboard room.

In some of the rooms there are double windows to deaden the street sounds. Two systems of ventilating are used, one furnishing washed air pumped in from outside, the other removing the foul air.

New chairs in all the rooms, new covering on the stairs, exit lights wherever called for, and paint and varnish have all shared in making the entire building a place that pleases the eye, and that speaks in all its details of consecrated ability and effort.

"THE FLOODS DESCENDED"

This is the story as Mr. Haavind relates it:

"At about a quarter of six on Sunday morning, October 5, I received a telephone call saying that the hot water pipe in the kitchen had burst, and that the new engineer could not find the shut-off valve. Hurrying to the kitchen I found Mr. Stauffer already there and in a moment or two was able to locate the valve to shut off the water. By this time, however, the entire kitchen and dining room, as well as the storerooms, had been flooded with scalding hot water.

"We discovered that the accident was caused by the steam backing up in the stock kettle, causing it to explode, and when the kettle exploded it knocked down the canopy, and in knocking down the canopy the hot water faucet over the stock kettle was wrenched out of place, also the steam valve, causing the steam to escape, which added to the confusion.

"Mr. Stauffer hurriedly secured some of our janitors who live in our buildings, and with the assistance of a few students the floors were mopped up so that breakfast was only five minutes late.

"Then after breakfast the terrific rain storm caused the sewers to back up, and we immediately closed all the back-water gates. But that did not provide for the water that came through the down-spouts, and again the kitchen and dining room were flooded with about three inches of water, also the gymnasium and laundry. This time it was dirty water. My, oh my, what a sight! It was enough to discourage almost anyone, and again we called upon the students and janitors to help out as soon as the rain had subsided so that we could open the traps, and again proceeded to mop up the water and scrub all these various rooms.

"Judging by the papers we did not suffer as much as a great many of the places downtown. One inch of water fell in nineteen minutes, the heaviest rain-fall since 1896. In view of the fact that the damage in other places was so great we feel grateful to the Lord that we got off so easily."

CORRESPONDENCE DEPARTMENT CROWDED OUT

The third floor of the Guild House is being fitted up as the future home of the Correspondence Department, providing about double the space now occupied on the third floor of the Men's Building.

Besides the rapid growth of the regular work of this department there is to be added shortly that of the Bible study courses of the Christian Herald of New York, including the enrolment of the Christian Herald students, supplying their lessons, and examination of their lesson papers.

The far-reaching ministry of the Correspondence Department in conducting systematic Bible study is indicated by the following facts:

Two thousand six hundred and fifty new enrolments were entered in the year ending August 31, 1919. These represented every state in the Union and 27 foreign countries.

Four thousand six hundred and twenty active students were under instruction at the above date.

Six thousand five hundred and forty-eight students were under instruction during the entire year or a part of it. Four hundred and fifty persons completed their courses of study during the year.

The Department has grown in six years from 443 new enrolments in a year to 2,650. The total for the six years is 10,592, and since organization, 18 years ago, 16,971.

The department has been in correspondence with more than 50,000 people within the last six years.

New enrolments for September, 1919, numbered 302 as compared with 172 a year ago, a gain of 70 per cent; and at the time of writing, October enrolments are in advance of those in September.

A REUNION IN CHINA

Those present were Miss Hattie Bailey, '18, Miss Minerva Weil, '17, Miss Mary E. Cameron, '15, Miss Carrie Olson, '10, Miss Agathea Fast, '16, Miss Kathleen Anderson, '16, W. H. Nowack, '00, Mr. H. C. Ramsey, '96. Several hours of happy fellowship were enjoyed, with songs, testimony, personal reminiscences and prayer.

REUNION AT MONTROSE

A reunion of M. B. I. students was held during the Montrose Bible Conference in August. Those present were, Miss Anna B. Palmer, '15, Miss Fannie Reed, '99, Dr. William Evans, '92, Miss A. A. Pollard, '93, Albert Johnson, '15, S. E. Lewis, '13, W. H. Caldwell, '93, Theo. Brown, '13, Lewis B. Bryden, '15, L. J. Derk, '07.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT NOTES

Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe will give his series of popular lectures known as "Ten Weeks through the Bible," at the Pittsburgh, Union Bible Class which, last season, was under the efficient leadership of the Rev. John C. Page who is now teaching in the Institute. He will also give the same series to classes at a number of adjacent points as follows:

During October Rev. George E. Guille conducted a Bible Conference at Blacksburg, S. C., and evangelistic meetings at a union of churches at Cape Charles, Va.

Mrs. Margaret T. Russell began her work in Texas at Beaumont under Y. W. C. A. auspices. From there she went to Nacogdoches at the request of the pastor of the Baptist church.

Miss Elinor Stafford Millar is with the Union Mission, Wheeling, W. Va., for the first two weeks of November. Then she goes to Lancaster, Pa., to give a series of addresses in the building recently dedicated by the Young Women's Christian Association.

Dr. Henry Ostrom and Dr. Gray were among the speakers at the Cleveland Conference on Christian Fundamentals held October 7 and 8, following which Dr. Ostrom taught on "Prophecy and the Jews" at conferences in Boston and Minneapolis arranged by Rev. Joseph Cohn.

Mr. C. E. Putnam conducted a Bible Conference at Berrien Springs, Mich., and assisted pastors in an evangelistic campaign at Rochester, Ind., where his teachings stressed the evangelistic note and confirmed Christians in the faith.

VISITORS FROM FORT SHERIDAN

Sixty wounded soldiers from Fort Sheridan were entertained by the Institute all day Tuesday, October 7, under the direction of Mr. Hugh Cork. In automobiles furnished by friends they visited Lincoln Park in the afternoon, and were piloted through the "Zoo" by Superintendent Parker, successor of Cy de Vry, who knows every one of the "Zoo's" 2,800 animals. Dr. Fitzwater led the procession in his automobile and other autos were furnished by Mr. Thomas S. Smith.

PERSONALIA

I. E. and Mrs. Holtzman, '19, held evangelistic services at Zearing, Ia., for three weeks in October.

Miss Bessie Williford sailed in August for China under the Baptist Board. She will be stationed at Nanking.

Miss Cora Van Koevering, '19, is enjoying her work in Rehoboth, N. M., where she is teaching in a school for Indian children.

H. D. Kennedy, '93, conducted union evangelistic meetings in Peterborough, Can., during June, and many conversions were recorded.

Miss Ruby Burgess, '17, is now a member of the faculty of the John C. C. Mayo College, Paintsville, Ky., teaching Bible and music.

Charles H. and Mrs. Judd, '96, for many years missionaries under the China Inland Mission, were among the October callers at the Institute.

R. G. Heddon, '05, Fennimore, Wis., who was engaged in Y. M. C. A. work overseas, has returned and expects to enter the pastorate again.

L. P. Cassel, '13, has resigned his pastorate at Grace Baptist Church, Chicago, and accepted a unanimous call to the Baptist church at Utica, Ill.

John D. Warkentin, '17, completed his course at the Northern Baptist Seminary last spring and entered Bluffton College, Bluffton, O., this fall.

Homer Stanley Morgan, '12, has resigned his pastorate in Contoocook, N. H., and accepted a call to the Immanuel Baptist Church of Cambridge, Mass.

Ludwig C. Schaumberg, '18, received the A. B. degree in Grove City College last spring and is taking his final year in Princeton, preparatory to work abroad.

Miss Annie Rosie, '89, resumed her position as housekeeper in the Women's Building October 1, greatly refreshed by her eight months' furlough, spent chiefly in California.

J. B. Murray, '17, a recent caller, is located at Lac du Flambeau where he and Mrs. Murray have been working for a year among the Indians under the Presbyterian Home Mission Board.

William S. and Mrs. Dixon, '13, have settled in a home of their own, 201 W. Madison Ave., Wheaton, Ill. Mr. Dixon will continue his work as singer in the Linden-Dixon Evangelistic Party.

W. L. Naumann, '94, pastor of Calvary Evangelical Church, Cleveland, O., visited the Institute on his way to General Conference at Des Moines, Ia. His church has the largest Sunday-school in Cleveland.

Charles Best, '92, working under the China Inland Mission, is home on furlough for the first time. Mrs. Best is with him, and their son, Wilber Hooker, who will enter Park College this fall.

Orlando Alves, '18, was ordained Aug. 3, in Brazil, S. A., the examination and services being in the Portuguese language. The Baptist church, of which he is now pastor, is the mother of many other churches there.

J. Burnett Grimshaw, '19, writes, "I look back upon my stay at the Institute as the best days of my life, * * and it is my daily prayer that the Spirit of God may mightily use that place to the raising up of faithful witnesses."

Allen N. Cameron, '91, reports 16 baptisms in his mission in Chang-sha, Hunan Province, China, 14 of them boys and girls from the mission orphanages. He speaks of the great need of more young men workers there, and says $300 will support one for a year.

A copy of the bulletin of the Steffan Prison Evangelistic Association has been received from John and Mrs. Steffan, '18. They held 22 prison meetings the past summer, in which more than 200 prisoners professed conversion; also 36 meetings in churches, rescue missions, etc.

A correspondent from Globe, Ariz., writes: "I am glad that this place has one good preacher, a graduate from The Moody Bible Institute, Rev. E. A. Gottberg, who is pastor of the First Baptist Church. He presents the whole Christ, God's gift to hungry hearts. He is so preached that none need leave the church without salvation."

Charles R. Beittel, '17, pastor of the Emmanuel United Brethren Church, Royalton, Pa., is rejoicing over blessings that have followed his year of service there. During a revival early in the year there were 33 conversions, and over 30 were received into the church, which was rededicated in September upon completion of extensive improvements.

A letter to Mr. Gosnell from James Matheson, '15, tells of his work this past summer in the logging, mining and construction camps along the cost of British Columbia between Vancouver and Price Rupert, and also on Vancouver Island. The gospel has been preached and copies of the Gospel have been distributed in English and fifteen foreign languages.

He says, "We are often just like Abraham of old, not knowing what is before us. We trust the Lord at all times to open up the way for us, and to supply our needs and I can truly say we have had some wonderful experiences."

C. E. and Mrs. Mapes, '19, are in Sunday-school missionary work under the American Sunday-school Union, with headquarters at Tabor, Ia. The prayers of the Institute are asked for their work, especially for the provision of a much needed auto. Their territory covers 1900 square miles, including Fremont, Mills, Page, and Montgomery counties.

Ralph A. Brown, '18, sends a paper published in a mountain district of Kentucky, in which appears an article on the Sunday-school lesson by Dr. Fitzwater, an account of a feud, and the breaking up of a still—"just as an example of how dear old M. B. I. is sending the Word right into the very haunts of iniquity." Mr. Brown is connected with the Oneida Baptist Institute, Oneida, Ky. He asks that the work be remembered at the prayer hour.

The Gospel in Print

THE OVERLOOKED MINISTRY OF THE PRINTED PAGE

What a mighty weapon with which to foil the attacks of the evil one is available for every Christian worker who will lay his hand to it in the form of gospel literature!

Even in the line of meeting the modern delusions of religious cults, to say nothing of the possibilities presented by the more direct way of salvation in teaching Scripture truth, there are opportunities innumerable.

Every Christian worker, or active layman should keep himself supplied at all times with an assortment of appropriate printed matter in leaflet, tract, or booklet form. Too little value is placed upon the power of the printed page (under the blessing of God) to meet the spiritual need of the one dealt with. But when the reader realizes the influence of printed words upon himself, the argument takes on new force.

HOW GOD USES TRACTS

Addison, the great English author, is said to have been converted by a tract sent to his home under a cake by a Christian baker. We have heard of a dissolute cobbler who was converted by reading part of a tract which he found between the soles of a shoe he was mending. A carpenter, in tearing down an old house, read a torn tract which he found in a rat's nest, and declared that it was the means of the conviction which led to his conversion. An infidel young man in North Carolina, who never went to church, was sauntering one beautiful Lord's Day along the shore of a fish pond, and, for the lack of something else to do, picked up some torn pieces of paper which had been thrown from a fisherman's basket, and amused himself by putting them together and reading them. He saw written there his doom as a sinner, and hastened to seek the counsel of an earnest Christian. Truly these leaves for the healing of the nations can go where the voice cannot reach, and we need to scatter them far and wide, that they may be all the time doing their work of mercy.—A. C. Dixon.

The plainest row of books that cloth or paper ever covered is more significant of refinement than the most elaborately carved sideboard. Give me a house furnished with books rather than furniture. Both if you can; but books at any rate!—Henry Ward Beecher.

SPIRITUAL PROFITABLE "SPARE TIME" WORK

In nearly every community there are those who have some portion of the day, or a part of certain days, free from engagement. If such persons, followers of Christ, would devote this free time in Christian "book missionary" work, it would greatly strengthen their religious experience, prove a blessing to those approached, and incidentally bring a revenue to the purse of the worker. Happily, the conditions upon which this important work may be done, are so flexible as to make possible such an effort by anyone anywhere.

CHRIST OR CHRISTMAS.

Too many people, too many Sunday schools, make more of Christmas than they make of CHRIST. They make many Christmas gifts, because it is Christmas; but none to Him.

"White Gifts for the King."

The new Christmas service corrects this, and makes of Christmas only a day on which to honor Him, and make to Him the supreme gift of Self and be glad.

Because of this, in many places and in many cases the windows of Heaven have opened wide and blessings rich have poured down upon the school.

In this new service three forms of gifts are offered.

SELF SERVICE SUBSTANCE

These three but the greatest of these is "Self to Christ." Surely here is the whole blessed gospel of giving in three words.

Is it any wonder there is unusual blessing in the "White Gifts for the King" Service to all schools which use it?

A Distinct Loss.

It is unquestionably a distinct loss for any school not to know all about it. One school reports seven conversions, thirty-one reconsecrations, three hundred pledges of service, eighteen baskets of provisions and $81.46 in cash.

Would have anywhere from one to a score or more persons make a Birthday Christmas Gift of Self to Christ in your Sunday school?

Then use the only form of Christmas Service ever used, which gets such results, and you may confidently expect them, too.

How to Know All About It.

The whole beautiful story with suggestive plans is charmingly told and outlined by Mrs. Phebe A. Curtiss, and others, which may be had by ordering

"White Gift Outfit" Price 65c.

Early preparation means fullest benefits, and greatest success.

The Secret of Being a Convincing Talker

How I Learned It in One Evening

By GEORGE RAYMOND

"HAVE you heard the news about Frank Jordan?"

This question quickly brought me to the little group which had gathered in the center of the office. Jordan and I had started with the Great Eastern Machinery Co., within a month of each other, four years ago. A year ago Jordan was taken into the accounting division and I was sent out as salesman. Neither of us was blessed with an unusual amount of brilliancy, but we "got by" in our new jobs well enough to hold them.

Imagine my amazement, then, when I heard:

"Jordan's just been made Treasurer of the Company!"

I could hardly believe my ears. But there was the "Notice to Employees" on the bulletin board, telling about Jordan's good fortune.

Now I knew that Jordan was a capable fellow, quiet and unassuming, but I never would have picked him for any such sudden rise. I knew, too, that the Treasurer of the Great Eastern had to be a big man, and I wondered how in the world Jordan landed the place.

The first chance I got I walked into Jordan's new office and after congratulating him warmly, I asked him to let me "in" on the details of how he jumped ahead so quickly. His story is so intensely interesting that I am going to repeat it as closely as I remember.

"I'll tell you just how it happened, George, because you may pick up a pointer or two that will help you.

"You remember how scared I used to be whenever I had to talk to the chief? You remember how you used to tell me that every time I opened my mouth I put my foot into it, meaning of course that every time I spoke I got into trouble? You remember when Ralph Sinton left to take charge of the Western office and I was asked to present him with the loving cup the boys gave him, how flustered I was and how I couldn't say a word because there were people around? You remember how confused I used to be every time I met new people? I couldn't say what I wanted to say when I wanted to say it; and I determined that if there was any possible chance to learn how to talk I was going to do it.

"The first thing I did was to buy a number of books on public speaking, but they seemed to be meant for those who wanted to become orators, whereas what I wanted to learn was not only how to speak in public but how to speak to individuals under various conditions in business and social life.

"A few weeks later, just as I was about to give up hope of ever learning how to talk interestingly, I read an announcement stating that Dr. Frederick Houk Law had just completed a new course in business talking and public speaking, entitled 'Mastery of Speech.' The course was offered on approval without money in advance, so since I had nothing whatever to lose by examining the lessons, I sent for them and in a few days they arrived. I glanced through the entire eight lessons, reading the headings and a few paragraphs here and there, and in about an hour the whole secret of effective speaking was opened to me.

"For example, I learned why I had always lacked confidence, why talking had always seemed something to be dreaded whereas it is really the simplest thing in the world to 'get up and talk.' I learned how to secure complete attention to what I was saying and how to make everything I said interesting, forceful and convincing. I learned the art of listening, the value of silence, and the power of brevity. Instead of being funny at the wrong time, I learned how and when to use humor with telling effect.

"But perhaps the most wonderful thing about the lessons were the actual examples of what things to say and when to say them to meet every condition. I found that there was a knack in making oral reports to my superiors. I found that there was a right way and a wrong way to present complaints, to give estimates, and to issue orders.

"I picked up some wonderful pointers about how to give my opinions, about how to answer complaints, about how to ask the bank for a loan, about how to ask for extensions. Another thing that struck me forcibly was that, instead of antagonizing people when I didn't agree with them, I learned how to bring them around to my way of thinking in the most pleasant sort of way. Then, of course, along with those lessons there were chapters on speaking before large audiences, how to find material for talking and speaking, how to talk to friends, how to talk to servants, and how to talk to children.

"Why, I got the secret the very first evening and it was only a short time before I was able to apply all of the principles and found that my words were beginning to have an almost magical effect upon everybody to whom I spoke. It seemed that I got things done instantly, where formerly, as you know, what I said 'went in one ear and out of the other.' I began to acquire an executive ability that surprised me. I smoothed out difficulties like a true diplomat. In my talks with the chief I spoke clearly, simply, convincingly. Then came my first promotion since I entered the accounting department. I was given the job of answering complaints, and I made good. From that I was given the job of making collections. When Mr. Buckley joined the Officers' Training Camp, I was made Treasurer. Between you and me, George, my salary is now $7,500 a year and I expect it will be more from the first of the year.

"And I want to tell you sincerely, that I attribute my success solely to the fact that I learned how to talk to people."

* * * * *

When Jordan finished, I asked him for the address of the publishers of Dr. Law's Course and he gave it to me. I sent for it and found it to be exactly as he had stated. After studying the eight simple lessons I began to sell to people who had previously refused to listen to me at all. After four months of record breaking sales during the dullest season of the year, I received a wire from the chief asking me to return to the home office. We had quite a long talk in which I explained how I was able to break sales records—and I was appointed Sales Manager at almost twice my former salary. I know that there was nothing in me that had changed except that I had acquired the ability to talk where formerly I simply used "words without reason." I can never thank Jordan enough for telling me about Dr. Law's Course in Business Talking and Public Speaking. Jordan and I are both spending all our spare time making public speeches on war subjects and Jordan is being talked about now as Mayor of our little Town.

So confident is the Independent Corporation, publishers of "Mastery of Speech," Dr. Law's Course in Business Talking and Public Speaking, that once you have an opportunity to see in your own home how you can, in one hour, learn the secret of speaking and how you can apply the principles of effective speech under all conditions, that they are willing to send you the Course on free examination.

Don't send any money. Merely mail the coupon or write a letter and the complete Course will be sent, all charges prepaid, at once. If you are not entirely satisfied send it back any time within five days after you receive it and you will owe nothing.

On the other hand, if you are as pleased as are the thousands of other men and women who have used the Course, send only $5 in full payment. You take no risk and you have everything to gain, so mail the coupon now before this remarkable offer is withdrawn.

The Greatest Evangelizing Force in the World Today Is the Bible Itself—Study It with Dr. Gray

You, too, may join the Christian Herald's Bible Study Course by correspondence, now being conducted by Dr. James M. Gray and his associates of The Moody Bible Institute

THE 24 intimate, scholarly, yet simple, studies, in logical order, under the leadership of these Biblical authorities, will give you a surer knowledge of the Word of God, a clearer understanding of his dealings with humanity, a firmer foundation for your faith, together with a greater incentive and equipment for service. You, in company with tens of thousands of others, will gladly welcome this first opportunity ever offered to enter into companionship with Dr. Gray and his associates and to secure this remarkable Correspondence Course of Bible study through the instrumentality of the Christian Herald at a mere fraction of its regular price.

You may now join this course of 24 illuminating, enriching, inspiring studies, for one dollar, if you will become a six months' trial subscriber to the Christian Herald at the reduced price of one dollar—two dollars in all. You will then be a member of the world's largest and most remarkable Bible Study Group and you will have the companionship, for six months—26 big issues—of the Christian Herald, with its weekly feast that is now being enjoyed in three hundred thousand American Christian homes.

The Christian Herald is one of America's really great religious and social institutions. It is the best loved and most widely read interdenominational weekly family magazine in the world. It has been the means of relieving more distress, feeding more hungry, clothing more naked, than all other periodicals combined. It is dedicated to the service of humanity.

The Christian Herald is at the forefront in the effort to make of every church a community center for social and religious uplift. It tells the important news of every denomination, but is the organ of none. You and every member of your family need the stimulus, the inspiration, the vision of world service and the splendid literature the Christian Herald provides. A million new short term subscribers before 1920 is the Christian Herald's goal. The 6 months' reduced price offer is made without profit to the Christian Herald. One dollar in currency, check or money order sent now (at the Christian Herald's risk) is guaranteed to give you more and better literature than you could imagine possible. And remember—every subscriber for six months or more is entitled to enroll in the six months' of Bible Study to be conducted by the Faculty of The Moody Bible Institute on payment of one dollar additional (two dollars in all). Use the coupon.

IMPORTANT

During the 26 weeks for $1.00 period, Grace Livingston Hill's now and best serial story, "Betty Hope," will appear complete in the Christian Herald in advance of its publication as a $1.50 book. "Betty Hope" will be followed by another of those wonderful Courtenay Savage serials entitled "Morning," also to appear as a $1.50 volume after Christian Herald readers have had it. This will give Christian Herald 6 months' subscribers two gripping, wholesome serial stories without extra charge.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
635 Bible House, New York

I wish to join the Christian Herald's correspondence course—twenty-four Bible studies—and to have my name enrolled as a six months' subscriber to the Christian Herald. I enclose $2.00 in full payment. ($1.00 for the correspondence course and $1.00 for this special six months' trial subscription.)

We Are Reaching the "Uttermost Parts"

OUR appeals to readers for funds to send The Christian Workers Magazine to missionaries has brought encouraging responses. The missionaries are now sending us additional names of other workers to whom we can send the magazine, and we want to increase the circle. We have not space to print all the kind letters of appreciation we receive from the missionaries, but we will give you a few letters this month just to let you know how happy they are because of your generous gifts.

No better gift can you make to a missionary for Christmas, than a subscription for a year. You may subscribe for one, or more, as you are able, and we will supply the names, or if you have friends in the foreign field, send their names along, and if they are already on the list we will extend the subscription a year, or with your consent, when we find the missionary paid up for over a year, send it to another.

Join our "missionary subscription circle" today by sending $1.50.

WHAT MISSIONARIES THINK OF THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE

Anshun, Kwei., China. Aug. 15, 1919.

The Christian Workers Magazine,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Woodruff:

I am in receipt of your letter of July 3rd, and may say that I am very grateful indeed to be among those who are to have the magazine sent to them for one year. If it is within your power to do so, may I ask you to kindly express my grateful thanks to those who have made this possible. I have received the paper for a few years and value it very highly. One on the mission field (and especially if one stands quite single handed in a large medical work) has time only for the very best and that is, I dare say, the reason why I value The Christian Workers Magazine so highly.

I am enclosing herewith a list of fellow missionaries whom I know would be very grateful to receive the paper.

Wishing you much blessing in your ministry,

Yours sincerely, In Christian fellowship and Service,
(Signed) Edward S. Fish.

A Missionary's Wife and Children Enjoy The Christian Workers Magazine

Chang-sha, Hunan Prov., China,
August 6, 1919.

Dear Brother Woodruff,
Greetings:

"Delivered from the wrath to come—serving the living and true God—waiting for His son from heaven"—what a fine and expressive statement of the true Christian attitude in this age! Praise Him, we also, with you, are "redeemed, serving and waiting."

Thank you so much, both of us, for the letter just to hand saying some dear helpers have been enabled to send us (and other workers in the "far" countries) this blessed, helpful, spiritual Christian Workers Magazine for a year from date. We praise God for this, and it is especially helpful now, as prices here, like in many places, and perhaps with you, are still high, exchange is very low, and we would lose heart but that our eyes are above, and we see things and One above.

You see we are just two (in) dependent workers, supported by one local church in Denver, and have forty orphan boys and girls, we are looking after for our heavenly Father, a fast growing tract work which He has now, to our joy and wonder, let get above a million copies a year, and all this takes heavily in all we get, and we are glad to live plainly and with light pocket-books, and lighter hearts, for we expect to be in the air-ship most any day, and not to return here, so are getting ourselves, the children, our helpers, all we meet, the tract users, etc., ready as fast as we can for that meeting in the air!!! Great!!!

Talk about "pre" folks not working!! We wish we were a hundred, if that were right or possible, and yet want to do the work of 100, because it is His powerful Spirit who is working, and not us at all.

I sent some money a while ago for the paper, as I had someway let slip sending sooner, and hope that arrived safely, and you can credit it on future account, as I want the paper till He comes, or I fall asleep, so be sure and not let me miss some numbers, as I found I had last year.

Of course I get others, like Our Hope, Wonderful Word, King's Business, etc., and cannot read all, but I read as able, get lots of help, and pass them on, or send out samples as I send tract parcels. Only this week had a fine order for tracts from a "pre" and Presbyterian friend in North China for 6 ,000 assorted tracts for his fall work, and he sent the $40 we charge for these with the order. We want to help all possible, so sell these under cost, and are glad to print free (our orphan boys doing the work), and so His name and Word can be the more magnified. If you know of any good sound, happy "Pre"- folks who are really anxious to glorify Him in China let them know of this tract work, the prayer we are sending now up for $700 for paper for this fall use, and the ten more Gospel Day Schools we hope to open this fall, D. V., for the thousands of children unreached, and these will cost $100 each a year, this covering teacher, books, table, benches, paper, ink, etc

How we rejoice with you in these grand Bible Schools (I am one of the "titled" of earth, an M. B. I.) and also for the fine teachers and Bible and Prophetic Conferences.

Yours, thankfully, till He appear,
(Signed) Allen N. Cameron.

Christian Workers Magazine,
Dear Friends:

This summer while on Kikungshan—the summer resort mountain of central China—I heard a friend remark that you would be glad to send your magazine to a limited number of missionaries who would appreciate and be glad to have it.

I have often thought I would be glad to take it for the sound teaching given and helps in Bible study. If you deem me worthy I can assure you I would be only too grateful to take advantage of your kind offer. Yours in Christ's service.

(Signed) E. Roy Baker.

Quessua, Malange, Angola, Africa.
August 15, 1919.

Editor Christian Workers Magazine,
Dear Sir:

I feel that I must tell you what a welcome visitor The Christian Workers Magazine is at my station. When I receive my American mail I always read my home letters first and then I want to see the M. B. I. news and all the other good things which I find in the magazine. When one is away from Christian churches and influences it is a treat indeed to sit down and read the kind of articles found in your paper.

I find that one of my co-workers is a subscriber and that she is also a student in the Correspondence Course. She is a great admirer of Dr. Gray's books. When she learned that I had been in the Institute she said, "And did you really see and hear Dr. Gray?" When I told her that I had been in his classes she thought that I had enjoyed a great privilege and I assured her that I had.

On account of the war I could not leave America by way of New York last October, but sailed from Seattle, expecting to make connection at Yokohama for Cape Town. I arrived in Japan the day before the peace Armistice was signed and at that time the steamship companies changed their routes, going through the Mediterranean Sea, so I had to take my course a step at a time and in a very round about way. I touched Manila, Hong Kong, Singapore, Madras, and overland to Bombay from where I sailed to Africa. I waited in some of these ports a few days and in others a month. I arrived at my station May 16th, more than eight months from the time I left Ohio, September 4.

It was a great privilege to visit all these lands; it seems almost like a dream to think that I have been there. I have had a good opportunity to see where I would like to work and I can say that if I had the whole world in which to choose a place I would want to come to Africa, for it seems to be the place where the Lord would have me and how happy I am to be here. I praise God every day for the privilege of telling the Gospel story in this land.

I have two languages to learn; Portuguese, the government language and Kimbundu, the native language. I am so anxious to be able to speak to the people without an interpreter. My only wish is that God may use me for His glory in His service in Africa. Best wishes for each and every department of the Institute and may God bless the work that is being done there and send out many more to tell the glad story of redemption.

Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) Clara V. Ault.

A Post Card Picture of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Norton

A request came to us to send a picture of Mrs. Ralph C. Norton to a subscriber, with a suggestion that we get a supply for those of our readers who would like to have them. We sent the request to Mrs. Norton. At first she hesitated about selling their pictures—but after considering it she said, "It is not for us, but for the sake of the gospel," and sent 100 post card photos. No price was set upon them. She left the matter to us. Any one who desires to make a contribution to the Nortons Gospel Mission to the Belgians may have a complimentary copy of the photo—or for the nominal sum of........................ 25c

DANIEL'S PROPHETIC IMAGE, and the Stone Which Smote It. By A. Sims. The most striking feature of this prophecy is its remarkable fulfillment (in part at least) in the world-wide conditions of the present day. Studied in the light of the recent war it shines with surpassing clearness and power. No part of the prophetic Scriptures seem more applicable to the present time than this one. Paper covers, 15 cents.

THE GREAT TRIBULATION. By A. Sims. Answers such questions as what will be the nature of the awful calamities of that time? Who will go through them? How long will that dark period last? New edition. Paper covers, 10 cents.

THE COMING CRASH, between Capital and Labor. By A. Sims. Startling evidence of the alarming but ever growing hostility between the gigantic trusts and labor unions of these last days, and the terrible woes predicted in the Word of God, towards which these organized forces are rapidly but surely drifting. Paper covers, 10 cents.

THE MOST COMPREHENSIVE, EXHAUSTIVE, AND ACCURATE
CONCORDANCE TO THE BIBLE

311,000 References Young's 30,000 New Testament Readings

Analytical Concordance

Twenty-first and Only Authorized American Edition, Including Latest Revisions

By Robert Young

Author of a "New Literal Translation of the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures," "Biblical Notes and Queries," "Hebrew Grammar," "A Grammatical Analysis of the Minor Prophets in Hebrew," etc.

This magnificent work is recognized throughout the English-speaking world as the most satisfying of its kind in existence. It provides more information and in a more accessible form than any other Concordance. In accuracy and authority it stands easily supreme. It combines under one cover a Concordance, Greek, Hebrew and English Lexicon of Bible words, and a Scriptural Gazetteer. It is designed to fill the requirements of the simplest reader of the Bible as well as those of the most erudite scholar, for the layman seeking certain definite passages as well as for the student delving into theological questions. It enables the reader with no knowledge of Greek or Hebrew to decide for himself what is the meaning that most closely adheres to the original.

The Superior Plan of the Book

Every word in the English Bible is arranged in alphabetical order. The words are in turn arranged under their respective originals, Greek or Hebrew, also in their correct alphabetical order. To each of these the literal meaning is prefixed, and the pronunciation appended, thus distinguishing clearly between different shades of meaning.

The Best Bible Concordance in Existence

These Six Fundamental Features Show Why

1. Because every word is arranged in alphabetical order.
2. Because every word is classified under its own Hebrew or Greek original.
3. Because every Hebrew and Greek word is printed in the original characters, and the correct pronunciation given English letters, so that no one need hesitate in speaking or reading to give the original word, being able to pronounce it with confidence.
4. Because each proper and geographical name is arranged in its place in the Concordance, and the connecting history, with the latest information in Biblical and historical antiquities gathered by The Palestine Exploration Society, is given.
5. Because the prominent feature of the work is the analytical character of each reference. The Bible student can, at a glance, find out four distinct points: (a) What the original Hebrew or Greek of any word is; (b) its literal meaning; (c) a correct and trustworthy exegesis, and (d) what are really parallel passages.
6. Because a valuable summary of chief results from recent topographical and archeological research to the illustration of Scripture is given.

NEW FEATURES OF THE 21st AMERICAN EDITION—A marked advance on all previous editions: Not only has the work of REVISION been thoroughly gone into with scrupulous care—but valuable and important SUPPLEMENTS in the shape of INDEX LEXICONS TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS have been made, which will prove of great service particularly to those unacquainted with Hebrew or Greek. Also A COMPLETE LIST OF SCRIPTURE NAMES, showing their MODERN pronunciation, while an accurate transliteration of the ORIGINAL has also been given VALUABLE COMPLEMENTARY ARTICLES—Helpful supplemental articles greatly increase the value of this Concordance. The Rev. Thomas Nicol, D. D., of Edinburgh, contributes "A Sketch of Recent Explorations in Bible Lands," outlining the result of recent topographical and archeological investigations in their bearing upon the Scriptures. There are also 71 instructive "Hints and Helps in Bible Interpretation."

HOLDS THE SUPREMACY

The Watchman, Boston: "'Young's Analytical Concordance' has been for some years a much prized book of reference in this office, and we could ill afford to exchange it for an inferior substitute."

IT IS UNSURPASSED

Lutheran Observer, Philadelphia: "The most accurate, comprehensive, and best work of its kind in all respects that has ever appeared in the English language."

THE BEST PUBLISHED

The Episcopal Recorder, Philadelphia: "It is unquestionably the best and most complete work of the kind ever published."

THE VERY BEST

The Congregationalist, Boston: "There can be no question of the vast merits of this work. Such a work is simply indispensable, and none are worth using but the very best."

IT IS PERFECT

Western Christian Advocate: "How this work for completeness and excellence shall be ever surpassed by the genius or learning of man it is now difficult to perceive."

VALUABLE TO ALL

Presbyterian Banner, Pittsburgh: "This work is not only for the learned, but it is adapted to the use of all who can read the English Bible."

A large quarto volume, 1,244 pages. Bound in Cloth, $7.50; Half Morocco, $10.00; Full Morocco, $12.00. With Denison Thumb Index, 75 cents extra. Special Bible Paper Edition, easy and light to handle, a really superb piece of printing and binding, in full Morocco, $15.00; with Thumb Index, $16.00.

God's Method of Multiplying the gifts placed in the hands of Christ Jesus our Lord passes all our understanding.

We get a glimpse of it as we read of the five loaves and two fishes and the feeding of the five thousand men besides women and children, and the twelve baskets of fragments which remained.

And the following statement, by Prof. E. O. Sellers (now of the Baptist Bible Institute of New Orleans) regarding the late Dr. D. B. Towner's ministry of song through the students instructed by him in The Moody Bible Institute, illustrates God's marvelous multiplication of a consecrated life:

"Literally thousands of his students have gone to practically every nook and corner of the globe.

"A list of the prominent and successful song leaders at work today who have been his students will include at least 75 per cent of all thus engaged."

Think of the sunshine and gladness given of our Lord to multitudes through the great company of gospel singers who have gone forth from the Institute!

Have You Left Something Out in your giving list for this Christmas?

Have you provided "a gift for the King" to be multiplied by Him through the host of students—nearly 1,700—now receiving free training in the Bible, Gospel Music, and Practical Methods of Christian Work, in the Institute's Day and Evening Classes?

Multiplied by the Master's hand, how infinite will be the reach of even the smallest of such gifts!

When Ralph Norton Gave That Gospel to the Belgian Soldier on the London Street He Little Knew How Far That Deed Would Reach

For out of that simple Christian service grew a Gospel work among the Belgian soldiers in London on leave; then over in the trenches, where Mr. and Mrs. Norton were again and again among the men; and now, with some 15,000 Belgian soldiers listed as members of La Ligue des Saintes Ecritures (League of the Holy Scriptures), the Nortons have opened headquarters in Brussels, where they have started a Bible institute and training school, and from which their evangelistic work is reaching out to the home communities of their boys.

And now—right now—is the hour of most critical spiritual need in Belgium, while Belgian high officials agree that the need for material comforts will be as great this year as in any of the war years.

The work that would have been almost impossible because of destroyed roads and railroads has been greatly facilitated by these kind officials.

Shall Belgium Have the Gospel? That depends upon you, your prayers and your gifts. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is needed for the next year's work.

The Nortons are counting upon the readers of The Christian Workers Magazine under God, to see and to seize this opportunity to build upon the work already done.

There is already a converts' class of some forty persons at headquarters in Brussels—only a part of the new converts, some of whom come from long distances to the meetings; a Bible correspondence course for the training of selected students; and there are invitations from all directions to establish centers of work and worship, these to be under the direction of those now in training.

The Gospel given to that Belgian soldier in London began a work which grew marvelously during the war, and which can grow yet more wonderfully in reaching Belgium for Christ—if you will help by your prayers and your gifts.

Contributions for this work may be sent to C. G. Trumbull, Treasurer, 1031 Walnut Street, Philadelphia.

The Belgian Gospel Mission

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph C. Norton

In this way the Nortons began their Gospel work, and yours, among the Belgian soldiers on leave in London.

And now at the busy new headquarters in Brussels you see the extension of that work—your work.

The Queen of the Belgians, who has recently decorated Mrs. Norton with the Order of Elizabeth, is here seen on a visit to an orphanage during the critical war days. She seems pleased with the substantial check Mrs. Norton has just handed to her, in your name, for use among the children.

THOUSANDS OF CONTRIBUTORS In compiling the material for this marvelously useful reference work—encyclopedic in its completeness, not ONE mind, but hundreds of authorities have been consulted and are quoted. Every shade of meaning in every text is suggested. The clergyman or Christian Worker does not live who, with this splendid work, will not teach and preach with increased confidence, more intimate knowledge and telling effect.

Comments of Leading Authorities

"By its wealth of apt and unhackneyed illustrations it starts the mind on lines of thought reaching far beyond the text under review."—Rev. David Smith, D. D.

"In suggestiveness, originality, and practical usefulness, I should think the Dictionary stands alone."—Rev. G. H. Morrison, M. A.

"The preacher's originality and freshness are in no danger of being obscured, he simply finds the spark necessary to kindle the tinder of the sympathetic mind."—Rev. W. L. Watkinson, D. D.

"I have been much impressed with the amount of material brought together, and still more with the range of literature which must have been examined. The concise bibliographies will be found most helpful in directing preachers to sources of illumination and inspiration."—Rev. A. S. Peake, D. D.

A tree burning for 9 months

—Set on fire June, 1918, and still burning last March. Would your Sunday-school class want to hear more if you began your lesson on "Sin and Its Consequences" that way?

Death never means annihilation

—it means separation. Physical death: soul and body separated. Spiritual death; soul separated from God. Everlasting death; soul and body separated from God forever. Would this have made that lesson on Sin's Consequences clearer?

Motherhood and sorrow

—why have they always been linked together? And why is man, not woman the head of the race and family? Could you answer these questions when you taught that lesson on Sin?

Fishin' up ole Sucker Run

—when we were boys, and, feeling under the bank for a sucker, grabbing by mistake Mr. Water Snake! Yes, it made a great illustration for teaching the lesson on Sin.

A single grain of iodine

—will discolor seven thousand times its weight of water. See the point?

New Thought and Christian Science

—did you show your class their poison when you taught the lesson on Sin? "Sin is a delusion . . . unreal," says Mrs. Eddy. "Christ died for our sins," says God. Does your class know where the lie is?

All these vivid points were in one department of one recent issue of

“There Is Only One Book”

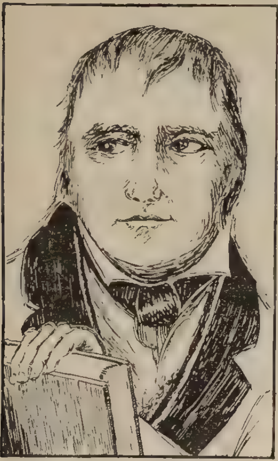
So said Sir Walter Scott, author of a score of books. On his deathbed he called his son.

“Bring me the Book,” he said.

“Which book, father?” inquired the son.

“There is only one Book,” replied Scott, “the Bible.”

At another time this great writer said of the Bible: “The more deeply he (the student) works the mine, the richer and more abundant he finds the ore.”



SIR WALTER SCOTT

Sir John Ruskin, famous author and artist said also: “To the Bible I owe the most precious, and on the whole the one essential part of my education.”

And John Wanamaker says: “I cannot too greatly emphasize the importance and value of Bible study—more important than ever before in these days of uncertainties. It is specially important that the value of Bible study be impressed upon our young men and young women who can make their lives count immeasurably more than if they wait for what they may consider ‘a more convenient season,’ but which in reality is the procrastination of uncertainty and death.”

Doubtless many readers of this advertisement have often felt inclined to enroll for a

Moody Bible Institute Correspondence Course

Don’t put it off for the “more convenient season!” While the matter again has your attention decide at once. Fill in and mail the coupon, and resolve that you will signalize this gift season by giving yourself to systematic study of the Bible, and thereby vastly deepen and widen your capacity as a channel for the pouring forth of God’s riches unto others.

Last year 6548 persons of 40 different vocations and of nearly all ages and nationalities were enrolled.

Letters of warmest appreciation are constantly received from our students. For example:

“I am enclosing the last lesson of my course. As I finish it I find no words to express my thanks for the help it has given me. Neither is it possible for me to tell how greatly it has enlarged my knowledge of the Word. The Bible means infinitely more to me because of this series of lessons.”

“Synthetic Bible study has been a wonderful blessing in deepening my interest in the scriptures, in deepening my spiritual life, and in increasing the power of my ministry.”

“I can truly say that these studies have been a delight and a blessing to me, revealing anew the depth and harmony of the inspired word of God.”

“I am receiving a great deal of good from the Synthetic Bible Study. I am giving it in outline to our people at our evening services, with a marked increase in attendance.”

“I am glad that I had the courage to begin when the outlook was not favorable for the continuance of the course, for it has been of great value to me, and I have thoroughly enjoyed it. I gladly recommend the Synthetic Course to every Sunday School teacher and every lover of Bible truth.”

WE OFFER THESE EIGHT COURSES

—scholarly, comprehensive, tested for a quarter of a century, and taken already by ten thousand students.

“I have been taking a Synthetic Bible Study Course for more than a year. Have I learned anything new? The Old Testament is a new book to me, and already I have a broader, deeper, richer conception of the Bible as a whole. Moreover, it has become my Bible, athrob with present import and attuned to every immediate need. I cannot tell you how I love it. I am sure that any person can find time for a correspondence course if he only has a real desire for it.”

“I am very much pleased with the course in evangelism. I had spent eight years in the pastorate and gone through many revivals, union and local, but found many helpful suggestions in this course.”

“I feel that this course (Scofield Course) has been of as great or greater benefit than a college education. It has been of untold blessing to me.”

Be a Regular Subscriber!

If every reader of The Christian Workers Magazine were a regular subscriber we would be happy. Will you help to make us happy? Do you ask what we mean by a regular subscriber? A regular subscriber, the kind we want, is the subscriber who keeps an account book, and regularly every year renews as soon as the last copy paid for is received.

It is so easy to forget. We had an interesting experience a few weeks ago. One subscriber was displeased with the September number and asked to have his name taken off the list. Off it went. Immediately we sent circular letters to a lot of old subscribers who had not been on the list for from a few months to two years, and told them about that man. The letter reminded them that they had failed to renew their subscriptions and we asked them if they had quit because they didn't like the magazine, or words to that effect.

Of course a lot of them got all worked up over the idea, and agreed with me that they were not mad, but had just put off their renewal for a more convenient season, and, they agreed with me that this is a good time to get their names back on the roll and they are still coming as we send this issue to press. And, a lot of them are asking for a copy of that book advertised so much the past year, "How to Memorize." We spoke to Mr. Norton about it and now he is going to print another edition of the book, so we can give a copy to anyone who renews a subscription for another year or sends in a new subscription for a year.

There are some subscribers who seem to like to read the letters we send out trying to get subscriptions—that is, they like to be reminded often, and one good friend wrote on the bottom of an order blank, "Appreciate your persistent efforts." These are kind words, and we pass them on to other readers for consideration. Will you please consider this appeal and not lay this page aside until you have renewed your own subscription for another year, even if it does not expire for six months or more and send us a new subscription; also ask for a copy of "How to Memorize."

The way old subscribers are renewing makes it seem like a real revival in the magazine business. The Christian Workers Magazine fills a place all its own in the hearts of its readers and it will bring blessing to others if you will give the little help that you can in sending it for a year to a friend for Christmas, or offering to take a subscription from a friend to forward to us. Please do it quickly. A Merry Christmas to all from

It gives stenographers a great advantage over those using other systems, since K. I. Shorthand is written without strain and read as easily as long-hand. It is so legible that employers prefer K. I. Shorthand writers because their notes can be transcribed with absolute reliability. It dispenses with all rules of light and heavy shadings, special positions on, above or below the line, and eliminates thousands of memory-burdening word signs—all of which makes old-fashioned stenography hard to learn.

Many who could not grasp the old systems are today expert practical writers of K. I. Shorthand—which proves its simplicity and learnability.

It is used in Government Civil Service positions, in church work, in courts, in Army and Navy, and in public and private business institutions—which proves its capacity to meet every demand of every-day service.

The Bible Success Band
Thy Word have I hid in mine heart
That I might not sin against Thee

THE 1920 BIBLE SUCCESS BAND BOOKLET

How Her Youth Was Renewed

A grey-haired woman, nearly 70 years of age says it was the systematic memorizing of Scripture according to the plan of the Bible Success Band that so trained her mind that she became a student at a Bible Training School with scholars half a century younger than herself. She tells of the blessing brought by the Band not only to herself, but to her community where one or more in almost every home were enrolled in the movement.

THE 1920 BAND BOOKLET CONTAINS:

1. An Illuminated Cover in full colors and gold like the old Missal work of the middle ages; also illuminated border on inside pages.
2. The List of Verses to be memorized in 1920.
3. Messages on Memorizing the Bible from Dr. Robert E. Speer; Mr. W. R. Moody; Dr. Russell H. Conwell; Mr. Robert P. Wilder; and Dr. Charles Ernest Scott of China. Dr. Scott asks for seven booklets so each member of his family can learn the daily verse while dressing. Dr. Conwell tells how each morning for forty years he has recited a chapter from the Bible before arising.

The 1920 Bible Success Band booklet is a work of art. It makes an ideal Christmas present for Sunday School scholars and friends.

"What a good thing it would be if all Christians could have this book. Most of the books that have come under my study on "The Last Things" are hard for the common reader to understand. Your book, while every page bears the marks of a ripe scholarship, treats the subject of the Future Life in a way so lucid as to interest and comfort the ordinary reader."

My Two Witnesses

A REVELATION FROM GOD

Something New

The value of this book is not in its quantity, or size, or artistic make up. But the knowledge of these TWO MEN and their relations to, and work with JEHOVAH. It settles forever a much disputed question. This was given to me by the Holy Spirit. And I do not believe that any other man has had it revealed to him, as it is given to me. Nor is it in print by any other AUTHOR. It contains more within its pages for the size of the book than there is in any other book published. It covers the time, and shows the work of these men for over five thousand years; and will continue on to the end of time. It is a REVELATION from God to us in these latter days. Everybody should have one in his possession as a ready reference. A valuable Christmas gift to your FRIENDS. With the Silent Preacher tract

CHRISTMAS IN CHINATOWN

"The halls were narrow, bare and dark. The stairs were dark too. As you tread them, you were conscious of creaky boards. A combination of stale odors thrust themselves upon you and life's greatest luxury seemed for the moment—fresh air. The rooms were what might be expected. They were small, one opening into another. Windows were few and privacy unknown. The airshaft seemed to be built for noise." (Excerpt from our Annual Report). What a striking contrast to

There Is No Gentile Church

Nowhere in the Bible will you find the expression, "Gentile Church." It is always, "the Church." We are expressly told that the Church is a remnant from among both Jews and Gentiles (Romans 11:5, Ephesians 2: 14-18). How then can we talk of a "Gentile Church"? Is not this an unwarranted arrogance? The expression, "fulness of the Gentiles" refers not to the "completion of the Gentile Church," but to the ending of Gentile world dominion.

Are there, then, enough Jews in the Church to make her truly the Church of Christ? And can the Rapture take place before the Jewish remnant is complete? Don't you think our Ecclesiastical ship is a bit light on one side? And what have you done to help bring a few of these Jews into their rightful place? There are two million in New York alone. Have they no claim on you?

Some day you too will wake up, as many before you have done, and you'll murmur, "Strange I never saw that before!" When you do you'll find us glad to hear from you.

Our literature is free for the asking.

Our Christmas Message

THE editor-in-chief is two thousand miles away as he pens these lines. He is engaged with one or two brethren in a tour of western Oregon and northern California in the interest of the fundamentals of the Christian faith. He and his companions are trying to do for some of the pastors and churches of that part of the continent what Jonathan did for David in the wood, when he "strengthened his hand in God."

Oregon is a beautiful and fertile land, especially the Willamette Valley where most of the traveling has been done thus far. The snow-capped mountains in the distance, the foot-hills luxuriant in trees of great variety, in shape beautiful, in color radiant, are a constant source of pleasure. And the rich soil yields such delicious fruit and produce, apples, pears, prunes, nuts, berries,—think of large and luscious raspberries fresh picked for a November breakfast! Sidewalks here are hedged with rose and sweet-briar bushes in full bloom, except where utility supplants beauty and the householder sets out kale instead.

The high cost of living is not much of a factor here because things are so prosperous, especially on the farms and ranches. They grow lots of hops.

"Where do they now find a market?" We asked.

"Abroad," was the reply.

"The crop must pay then?"

"You had better believe it does," said a banker, "hops cost about ten cents a pound to raise, and sell for seventy-five cents."

On the trains and trolleys, and in hotels meeting strangers, it is interesting to gauge public opinion. The League of Nations, for example, cuts no figure here. Men care but little about it except to get it out of the way. As between the President and Senator Johnson, the latter seems to have the right of way as might have been expected in this neighborhood.

The strikes present a more serious problem, and professional men and tradespeople are saying, "If the Labor Unions want a show down, let it come." And they say it with something of the grim determination in their tone that marked the inevitable when we had to go to war with Germany.

A journey like this opens many opportunities to talk to men personally about Christ, and one finds encouragement in their readiness to hearken. And yet here is where you realize at first hand the baneful effect of current literature and the weak and uncertain sound of many pulpits, especially those that receive the most attention from the Monday dailies. Men read these things and are confused, and like sheep having no shepherd they know not which way to turn.

Astonishing and saddening is the hold which evolution has upon the masses. They do not distinguish among the different schools of evolutionary thought, nor do they exclude from their thinking the conception of a personal God, but the story of Genesis is a myth and the incarnation of Christ a fable to them.

How greatly needed is positive and definite teaching in these days! The man on the street listens eagerly to that which will give him a reasonable excuse for retaining his mother's religion. He makes one think of Keats who, when he lay dying in Rome, begged Shelley to try to get him a copy of Jeremy Taylor, which he thought might aid him to get back his faith.

O, that pastors would expound the Scriptures to their people! Or, failing that, if they would only discard the worse than foolish reading in which so many of them indulge, and become imbued instead with the works of men taught by the Holy Spirit, who are able to point out to them the fallacies of evolution, and the destructive criticism and the wild isms of the day.

Here is what a coast pastor recently admitted in a farewell sermon to his flock, as he left them to take up a professorship in an eastern seminary for the training of young men for the ministry:

> "Man's life is the greatest fact, and therefore I have devoted my time since I first entered the ministry to a study of life.
> "My culture has been an attempt to explore literature as the masters through it have interpreted life.
> "I have studied philosophy because it is an uncovering to the workings of man's mind.
> "It has been the greatest passion of my heart and mind to understand man's life."

We have heard of the man who attempted to lift himself by his boot straps. How near to God, or heaven or holiness could this pastor ever lift his people by studying men?

God is the greatest fact, not man; and the true pastor devotes his time to studying Him and interpreting His Word to men, because thus it is that grace and peace are multiplied unto them, and "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" (2 Pet. 1:1-3).

The literature which the true pastor explores is the Bible, and the philosophy which he chiefly studies is that whose treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hidden in Christ. He does this that men's hearts may be comforted, being knit together in love unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding (Col. 2:1-3).

In the course of this trip we heard a man speak on the second advent. With clearness and simplicity he explained that it meant Christ's personal and visible appearing. He talked of the blessed time coming on the earth when Christ would set up His Kingdom, and pointed out what the event would bring to Israel, to the nations and to the Church as the body of Christ. Children could have understood him. And when the congregation was dismissed, a business woman of the city was heard to say to her neighbor:

> "Well, that's new to me, but I like it, because it gives you something hopeful, something worth while to think about."

How much do people just now long for something hopeful, something worth while to think about!

We could not but contrast that sermon and the way the practical woman felt about it, with the other, where the preacher continued to say to his people:

> "I have not pleaded with you to believe in God. I have not asked you to bring your sins to be forgiven primarily. I have not asked you to believe in the realities of the spiritual world. I have asked you to believe in yourselves, in the divinity of men, in the greatness of the human soul!"

This is the blind alley into which people are led whose pastors devote their time to studying men instead of God. There is not much outlook there, not much that is very hopeful or worth while thinking about.

In a few days we shall be again commemorating the nativity of our Lord. What does He mean to such people?

What does He mean to you?

Editorial Notes

James Stokes' Will

The last will and testament of James Stokes is as spiritually refreshing as anything we have read in some time.

He was always a warm and active promoter of the Y. M. C. A., especially in European centers, but his interest never swerved from the old time landmarks of evangelical truth and evangelistic service.

By his will, the chief part of his estate, which exceeds $2,000,000, is left to further Association work in Paris, Rome and Petrograd where he had already given buildings; but it is especially provided that the fund created shall be consecrated to and used for the furtherance of the Christian doctrine of the complete atonement for sin through the blood of Jesus Christ once offered.

He further conditions that secretaries and teachers shall be selected who are sound in the faith, believing in the divine inspiration and authority of the Scriptures, the Trinity, and the deity of Christ.

In these days when the leaders of the international work of the Y. M. C. A. are exercised over reconstruction problems this ought to give them something to think of. Shall they go forward along physical, educational and sociological lines chiefly, or shall they return to the old paths and seek out the old ways of Sir George Williams and Lord Kinnaird, of Robert McBurney and Cephas Brainerd, of John V. Farwell and D. L. Moody, of William E. Dodge and H. M. Moore?

To do this means that they must cease to expect financial support from men of the world, it means less material equipment and less popular acclaim; but would the actual salvation of the souls of the young men of this generation be an adequate compensation? Might some of these in their turn become James Stokeses and carry forward the same blessing to the generation to come?

Who can calculate how much of the social and industrial unrest of these days is traceable to the changed emphasis in the work and teaching of the Y. M. C. A. in twenty years? Could the Association have carried the old time fire into their shop, and mine and railroad work in this country and in England, what a different chapter in the world's history we might be reading today!

We are offering no criticism. The Y. M. C. A. has a great record and is doing a great work, but is it doing the best that might be done by it for the foreign as well as the American born youth of this age? This is a great question, and it is offered for prayerful consideration.

In the meantime The Moody Bible Institute, founded by a great Y. M. C. A. man, D. L. Moody, still believes as James Stokes believed. As its work multiplies, its equipment somehow gets provided. May some James Stokes in the far-away have his eye fixed upon it by divine grace, and have his heart stirred to leave to it a fund to perpetuate its usefulness in the advancing years, should our Lord delay His coming!

Ungodly Speeches

There is a remarkable verse in Jude's Epistle in which he refers to the prophecy of Enoch concerning the coming of the Lord. He is to execute judgment upon all and to convince all that are "ungodly" of all their "ungodly" deeds, which they have "ungody" committed, and of all their hard speeches which "ungodly" sinners have spoken against Him.

That word "ungodly" thus repeated, is terrible in its meaning and in the consequences to which it points.

The ungodly are not simply sinners, which were bad and awful enough, but they are the irreverent and impious amongst sinners, the actual blasphemers and despisers of God. According to the Psalmist, while the sinner has his "way," the ungodly has his "counsel." He is known by his speeches, and as Jude characterizes them by the Spirit, they are "hard speeches."

We were deeply impressed by this, last month, on reading the newspaper report of a speech by no less prominent a man than a United States Senator, a leader and counsellor of the people.

He was discussing the race riot in Omaha, where even the Mayor was twice strung up to a telephone pole by infuriated white men and boys, and he exclaimed:

"The conduct of the criminal at Omaha deprives me of all inclination and power to say one word against the crowd that captured the criminal and punished the crime. Race is greater than law now and then, and protection of women transcends all law, human, and divine."

When a man dares to say that race is greater than law, and that certain of his impulses transcend all law human and divine, what better is he in principle than the vile criminal he condemns? And if he may utter such a sentiment and go unrebuked and unpunished for it, why should not the same immunity be granted to the leaders of the cruel and blood-thirsty mobs that mark this atavistic age?

He was not unrebuked however. The Pittsburgh Gazette-Times, representing other journals, well said:

"It may be the riff-raff that engages in lynchings, that does the actual torturing and killing of the luckless blacks; but it is the men high placed who commend their deeds and encourage them to renewed lawlessness."

He was rebuked, but he was not punished. Men are slow to enact penalties of one another because all are sinners, and

"Thus conscience doth make cowards of us all;
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought,
And enterprises of great pith and moment
With this regard their currents turn awry,
And lose the name of action."

But it is not so above. There is no shuffling. There is an executioner of judgment coming, "and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears."

The ungodly must give account of his hard speeches, and by his words shall he be condemned.

O, the responsibility of the lips and tongue! How much better to be silent than to speak foolishly. And yet how foolishly must he speak who has not learned that fear of the Lord which is the beginning of wisdom.

Progress Against Error

In a private letter from Professor G. Frederick Wright, we are glad to learn that indications multiply that the scholars in Germany and England are beginning to give heed to the arguments urged against the destructive criticism. Dr. Driver's successor writes to Mr. Wiener that his views are considerably modified by recent light on the discussion, and Professor König, of Bonn, has just sent an article to The Bibliotheca Sacra, saying that there are more than seven thousand in Germany who have not bowed the knee to Baal. In other words, the destructive criticism does not represent all of Germany, but there is a large body of believers who stand by and defend the supernatural religion.

Effect of Prohibition

The prohibition of the liquor traffic is a good thing, and we are grateful for it, although we wish it might have been brought about in a different way. Nevertheless, prohibition does not save men, neither does it change their morals.

We have been making some inquiry as to the effect of prohibition on the rescue mission work of the country. It has not gone far enough to make the data of great value, but the superintendent of one mission has recently reported that there is no appreciable change for the better in the district where he is located. Indeed, he feels the situation is worse than before prohibition went into effect, and he says that there are fully as many drunken men coming into the mission now as then. Many of these are actually crazy from drinking lemon extract, fusel oil, wood alcohol, etc., any one of which has a more awful effect than the worst booze ever distilled.

"Safety First"

Present-day laxity in the proper observance of the Lord's Day, once one of America's bulwarks of strength, is to be deeply deplored. Especially do we regret that apparently the United States Railroad Administration is promoting such desecration.

During a recent trip into Indiana we noticed at least four Sunday railroad excursions all for the same Sunday—Koontz Lake, Lake Manitou, Michigan City, and Chicago. The poster for the last named point called public attention to "Special Attractions at Chicago! Baseball Game (National League), Riverview Park, White City Park," etc.

We talk about "Safety First," would to God that we practiced what we preach. The safety of this or any other country depends finally on reverence for and obedience to the law of God. O that our legislators and judges would so instruct and warn the people!

three contributions on the person and work of Christ appearing in this issue. They differ markedly, but when taken together they present quite a complete view of Him in whom our soul delighteth.

Professor Robertson gives us the bed-rock evidence of His deity from the inspired writings, Bishop Nicholson illuminates the nature and results of His atoning sacrifice, and Pastor Philpott helps us to realize His presence with us in the common experiences of life.

For next month we have in preparation a timely article on "Theosophy and the Current Revival of Spiritualism."

"Wilt thou not revive us again; that thy people may rejoice in thee? Shew us thy mercy, O Lord, and grant us thy salvation. I will hear what God the Lord will speak; for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints; but let them not turn again to folly. Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land." Ps. 85:6-9.

"And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." John 14:13, 14.

"But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Acts 1:8.

THANKSGIVING AND CONFESSION

THANKSGIVING—For the end of the great War, the signing of the Peace Covenant, and the foundation of a League of Nations. For new aspirations after the brotherhood of nations and men, and for growing recognition that such brotherhood is only possible through the gospel of Christ Jesus, and the coming of His Kingdom. For God's unspeakable gift in Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world, the Prince of Peace.

CONFESSION—That our faith in God has been so faltering, and that our lives have so failed to make Christ known among men. That the church, through divisions and strife, has been unable to draw more fully upon the inexhaustible resources of life and power available in Jesus Christ. That the primary duty of personal witness to Christ in the power of the Holy Ghost has been so neglected.

SCRIPTURE READINGS—Pss. 29, 103; Luke 24: 44-48; Acts 1:1-8.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 6

THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL—THE "ONE BODY" OF WHICH CHRIST IS HEAD

THANKSGIVING—For the more widespread desire to know the will of God concerning Christian reunion. For all conferences held during the past year and all steps taken which have furthered in any way the cause of Christian unity. For the intercession of our Lord "that they all may be one."

PRAYER—That new faith, wisdom, and courage may be given to the leaders of the churches. That guidance may be granted in all efforts to promote Christian reunion. That a fuller understanding may be granted concerning the Kingdom of God, and expectation increased in the coming again of our Lord Jesus Christ.

SCRIPTURE READINGS—Ps. 133; Isa. 35; John 17:1-23; Rev. 21:23-22:4.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 7

NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS

CONFESSION—Of the spirit of materialism and selfishness in national life, and of failure to acknowledge God. Of blindness to God's purposes; of all pride, and vainglory. Of acquiescence in low moral standards. Of neglect of God's Day, His Word, and Commandments.

PRAYER—That the League of Nations may be guided and developed under God, so that enduring peace and world brotherhood may result. That the spirit of self-restraint and submission to lawful authority may be given to all. That peace may be restored where there are peoples still in conflict, and that all settlements between them may be in accordance with equity and righteousness. That the nations which have been at war may be prepared in spirit and in aim to dwell together in unity and concord. That true vision and high ideals may be given to the leaders of the nations that they may execute justice and foster righteousness, liberty, and truth. That mutual respect may be deepened amongst employers and employed. That industrial strife and all self-seeking may cease.

SCRIPTURE READINGS—Jer. 3:21-25; Haggai 2:4-9; Hosea 14; 1 Cor. 13.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 8

MISSIONS AMONG MOSLEMS AND HEATHEN

THANKSGIVING—For the service of many of God's people on behalf of missions. For their prayers and gifts during the years of war. For the native church witnessing to Christ in many lands. For the courage, faith, and sacrifice of missionaries in all lands. For the testimony of missions to the power of the gospel and the Word of God.

PRAYER—That the church in the mission field may be filled with the spirit of evangelism. That new apostles, prophets, evangelists, and teachers, full of the Holy Ghost, may be raised up in all lands. That missionaries may be daily renewed by the Holy Spirit, and kept in health and strength. That help may be given to the officers and committees of missionary societies, together with their supporters, rightly to discern the needs of the hour, and boldly to enter into the opportunities of the new day. That God's people may have a clearer insight into the meaning and demands of the missionary task, and the spirit of sacrifice, steadfastness, and earnest purpose to attempt great things for Him, and to expect great things from Him. That God's people may seek more adventurously and resolutely to proclaim the gospel to the whole world.

SCRIPTURE READINGS—Isa. 61; Matt. 28:16-20; Rom. 10:1-15; Rev. 7:9-17.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 9

FAMILIES, SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, AND THE YOUNG

PRAYER—That the sanctity of marriage may increasingly be realised and prevail. That all teachers may have high ideals as to their vocation, and may seek to bring up in the knowledge and fear of God those who are committed to their care. That a deeper sense of responsibility may be given to parents, and that they may be an example of purity, goodness, and faith to their children. That young men and women may be protected and strengthened in temptations, and may be inspired with noble ideas of life. That those who are older may be given patience and understanding towards those who are younger, and may have grace alike to learn from them and to teach them.

SCRIPTURE READINGS—Eph. 5:22-23; 1 John 2:12-17; 2 Tim. 2:19-22; Col. 3:12-17; Mark 10:13-16.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 10

THE JEWS, AND HOME MISSIONS

THANKSGIVING—For blessings that have come to the world through the Jews. For Jews who have found Christ as their Messiah, and are witnessing to Him. For the devotion, prayers, and labors of the many who are taking part in the cause of home missions.

PRAYER—That the Christian church may be awakened to its duty towards the Jews. That the work of missions to Jews may be prospered, and that all grace needed by workers amongst them may be given. That unfulfilled promises concerning the land and people of Israel may soon be realised. That a deeper spirit of prayer for Israel may be poured out upon the church. That great love for souls may possess the hearts of all Christians. That gifts of faith, perseverance and hope may be given to all home-workers. That the moral conscience of the church may be quickened, and that all its members may be truer and braver in their witness to and work for social righteousness.

SCRIPTURE READINGS—Ps. 85; Isa. 55; Matt. 17:14- 1 John 3: 16-24.

Paul and the Deity of Christ

By Professor A. T. Robertson, D. D.

The critical value of this article justifies its leading place in our Christmas issue, although it is merely a reply to a reviewer and a reprint from a contemporary, The Baptist World—Editors.

The Outlook, of New York, in a very kindly review of my "Divinity of Christ in the Gospel of John," closes with these words: "The thesis to which the Gospel thus leads him up is, 'Jesus is God.' It is certain that Paul, in Epistles of earlier date than the earliest Gospel, and of undisputed authorship, never taught that."

The reviewer admits that John's Gospel does teach that view of Jesus, but pits Paul's Epistles against John's Gospel to the discredit of the Gospel.

Now, if the reviewer means that Paul did not say in so many words, "Jesus is God," he is correct. But neither does John say these words, though he evidently says the thing in substance. John says that the Word was God (John 1:1) and that the Word became flesh and dwelt among us (John 1:14). He makes it perfectly evident that he considers the incarnate Son of God, the eternal Logos. John also represents Thomas as addressing Jesus as "My Lord and my God" (John 20:28).

How is it with Paul? Luke in Acts 20:28 (correct text, margin of Revised Version) reports Paul as saying to the elders of Ephesus at Miletus: "Feed the church of God which he purchased with his own blood." The two oldest and best Greek manuscripts of the New Testament (Codices Sinaiticus and Vaticanus) read "God" here, not "Lord." But, it may be replied, this is simply Luke's report of Paul's speech.

In Romans 9:5, Paul himself says: "Whose are the fathers, and of whom is Christ as concerning the flesh, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen." This is the text of the Revised Version. The old Greek had no punctuation and one is at liberty to make his own punctuation. There is another semicolon after "flesh; he who is over all, God, be blessed for ever. Amen." This is possible, to be sure, but nothing like so natural either in the Greek or the English. Besides, the phrase "Christ as concerning the flesh" clearly suggests Christ not according to the flesh and seems to demand "God" in apposition to complete the sense.

But this is by no means all. The Epistle to Titus is not admitted as Pauline by all scholars, but the balance of evidence still turns that way. In Titus 2:13 we read: "Looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ" (margin of the Revised Version). The text reads "of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." The papyri and inscriptions furnish abundant proof that the expression "Our great God and Saviour" was a current formula in the worship of the Roman emperor. Paul simply took this formula and applied it to Christ (cf. my Grammar of the Greek New Testament in the Light of Historical Research, p. 786; Moulton's Prolegomena to New Testament Greek, p. 84).

In Colossians 1:15f Paul describes Jesus as "the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of all creation; for in him were all things created," language that reminds one curiously of the opening verses of John's Gospel.

Bacon (The Fourth Gospel in Research and Debate, p. 7) says: "All of the Logos doctrine but the name is already present in the Pauline Epistles." It is hardly worth while to split hairs over the word "God" when the idea is the same. Besides, as already shown, it is not at all certain that Paul did not apply the word "God" to Jesus. The balance of the evidence in Acts 20:28; Romans 9:5; Titus 2:13 is in favor of that position. Besides, Paul in numerous passages calls Jesus "Lord," a common word for God in the Old Testament and in the Gospels. He also places Jesus on an equality with God in various passages, even in the earliest Epistles, as "in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. 1:1), "peace from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. 1:1), "now our Lord Jesus Christ himself and God our Father" (2 Thess. 2:16), "through Jesus Christ, and God the Father" (Gal. 1:1).

And then in that famous passage, Philippians 2:6-11, Paul expressly asserts the preincarnate state of Christ "in the form of God" "on an equality with God." This great passage affirms the deity of Christ and the humanity of Jesus and the Lordship of Jesus Christ.

"No man can say, Jesus is Lord, but in the Holy Spirit" (1 Cor. 12:3). The preincarnate riches of Christ Paul asserts in 2 Corinthians 8:9.

This is by no means all that Paul has on this subject, but it is enough to controvert completely the opinion of The Outlook reviewer that "Paul never taught that" (the deity of Jesus Christ), as John's Gospel has it.

The simple truth is that all the New Testament books have the same attitude toward Jesus. Dr. Lukyn Williams has a new and able discussion of Matthew's Gospel under the title, The Hebrew-

Christian Messiah, in which he shows conclusively that the author of the first Gospel presents and proves the deity of Christ.

The same position appears in the so-called Logia (the Q of criticism).

Mark does no other.

Modern criticism has shown that all the sources of our knowledge agree that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God.

"Through the Veil, That Is to Say, His Flesh"

Notes of a Sermon by the late Bishop Wm. R. Nicholson, D. D., of the Reformed Episcopal Church

> "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith." Heb. 10:19-22.

"THROUGH the veil, that is to say, his flesh."

As extracted from the passage these words are a broken sentence, but if completed according to the connection the sentence would run thus: Jesus entered, and we enter, through the veil, that is to say, His flesh.

The allusion is to the veil of the Tabernacle. Call up in your mind a picture of that ancient house of worship. It was built by Moses after the pattern shown him in the mount, and every part of it was a revelation from God.

What now chiefly concerns us is the manner in which it was divided. First, the outer court; next the holy place; lastly the most holy place.

This last compartment, known indifferently as the most holy place, the holiest, the holy of holies, was the furthest in, the most sacred, and the most secret. There was the Shechinah, a bright cloud, the resplendent symbol of God's presence. If one had entered there he would have stood as it were, face to face with God. This is the place, entrance into which reference is made in the text. The holy of holies represented heaven—the place of the unveiled glory of God's presence. But also it represented the Christian's present communion with God, that intimate personal fellowship with Him, that freedom and confidence toward Him, which the gospel brings to the believer, and which has in it the likeness, and is the foretaste of the blessedness of heaven.

But a veil hung before the holy of holies, hiding its contents in profound concealment, especially screening from view the awfully glorious Shechinah brightness. Through this veil must go whoever might enter there, and the sole purpose of entering there would be to get into God's presence.

Fellowship with God

Accordingly, fellowship with God is the subject of the whole passage. "Boldness to enter into the holiest" says the text; boldness, confidence, freedom of access, freedom of speech and communication—before God and with God.

This freedom of entrance we have—"in the blood of Jesus;" or, varying the phraseology, we enter by a way which Jesus has opened for us—"through the veil, that is to say, his flesh."

So that to enter there in the blood of Jesus is the same as to enter there through the veil, or through His flesh. Thus the veil represented His flesh, and "through the veil" represented His death; and only by means of His death, therefore, can the inside of the veil be reached, and fellowship with God be attained.

Three points are involved;

1. The veil itself;
2. Through the veil;
3. Inside the veil.

1. The veil was a type of the Lord Jesus, the type specifically of His flesh—His human nature, body, soul and spirit. Not body as itself considered (Heb. 5:7) but His manhood. "Through his flesh"—His "blood," i. e. His death. But death is a separation of soul and body. "Flesh" then includes soul as well as body (John 3:6). The veil typified His entire human nature—His incarnation.

The office of the veil was to conceal—to hide from view the most holy place and the Shechinah. And this office was guarded and sanctioned by the death penalty (Lev. 16:2). Whoever dared to lift the veil, or push it aside would have been struck dead as by a lightning bolt from the Almighty. A wall of granite could not have shut out so effectually all intruders. Its office was to make impossible all approach into the holy presence of God, save that the high priest was appointed to enter there once a year. Only when the authority that hung it there should Himself rend it, would it be possible to go into the most holy place.

The Veil Represents Christ's Humanity

What is the application? The veil represented the humanity of Christ, but the office of the veil was to shut off all approach into the presence of God. Therefore, the very humanity of Christ was itself the expression of mankind's exclusion from God. And never till His manhood should be torn and rent asunder, could any soul of man find entrance into the favor and fellowship of God.

For He was a sinless man, "holy, harmless, and separate from sinners." His absolute purity and spotless obedience fitted Him for communion with God, even as the veil was in contact with the awful splendor of the most holy place.

But such as we are not fitted to have communion with God. We are sinful, we are by nature all impurity. The existence of His spotless humanity was a standing protest, on the part of God against our presuming to claim fellowship with Him, even as the veil in association with the Shechinah did at the same time shut off approach to it.

And thus we see it is not Christ becoming incarnate that saves us nor His holy example. The veil must be torn and rent asunder else no access to the glorious Shechinah. Christ's flesh must be torn and rent asunder else no coming to God.

As God incarnate He brought God nearer to us, and was indeed "God with us;" nevertheless, as a sinless man in communion with His Father. He was also God against us, and so continued to be till the nature in which He had become incarnate had been rent from top to bottom.

His saving of souls previous to his death was done in anticipation of His death; but His sinless human nature holding communion with God was the demonstration of the impossibility of our sinful human nature being permitted to do so.

Going Through the Veil

"Through the veil" implies a rending of the veil, and a rending of the veil represents the rending of Jesus' humanity, i. e., His death.

Even the high priest's going once a year into the holy of holies by means of pushing aside the veil, was an implied rending of it, since he did so only as carrying with him a vessel of sacrificial blood which typified the blood of Christ.

Going through His flesh, then, imports not merely that Jesus lived through a human state of humiliation, not merely that He passed through a human life, but distinctly and particularly that He passed through His human nature by death.

"And behold" at the very moment, "the veil of the temple," which like the antecedent veil of the Tabernacle was the type of His manhood, "was rent in twain from the top to the bottom." Distinctly then through His death it was that Jesus entered into the most holy place, into the presence of His Father.

And thus it results that the Lord Jesus came on purpose to die. His death was of God's appointment and did not take place by reason merely of men's murderous hatred of Him. They did their best to kill Him, but He would have died if they had not hated Him.

In fact, He did not die by reason of their infliction. He laid down His own life, no one took it from Him, not even the Father.

"Jehovah laid on him the iniquity of us all," but it was Himself who dismissed His own spirit. His flesh was rent by His own divine hand, as when the Temple's veil was rent in twain it was severed from top to bottom, as no human hand could have done it!

Therefore, not as a teacher He saves us, though as a teacher He guides us. Nor was His death that of martyrdom, but as a means to an end, and that end the propitiation of God toward us sinners, and that means, the expiation of sin, the satisfaction of eternal justice.

Jesus, our sin-bearer, opened up the way through death, and as our sin-finisher, entered Himself the most holy place and now appeareth in the presence of God as our fore-runner.

For as well our entrance as His is through the veil, i. e., in His blood. His deliverance is our deliverance, if only we believe on Him. His entrance through bearing our punishment is our entrance. His glory is our glory. "When thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death, thou didst open the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers."

Inside the Veil

Jesus Christ is there. He went through the veil of His flesh and having risen from the dead, He ascended up on high, the impersonation of salvation, the Father's beloved, the Father's delight, and is "in the bosom of the Father."

Inside the veil after the great sorrows of His life on earth—after the sin-bearing which had so burdened and bruised Him, harrowing as it did, His pure soul with the tasted bitterness of imputed guilt, well nigh delapidating His physical appearance, afflicting Him with the contradiction of sinners, plowing long furrows upon His back, breaking His heart.

Inside the veil after the agonies of Gethsemane, after the tortures of Calvary, after that wailing cry at the Father's desertion of Him for our sins.

Inside the veil—what rest, what ineffable blessedness, what glory, for the virgin-born manhood of our adorable Saviour! He is there and His human nature doth shine as the sun.

And because He is there, we, believers in Him, are here inside the veil. Reconciliation is ours, acceptance, fellowship, filial confidence, all these are ours. A real loving intimacy with God is ours.

And as thus we are here inside the veil, so He is Himself here with us, for we have Him as a great High Priest over the house of God. He is here inside the veil with us to teach us, to lead us by His Spirit, to present us to God, to comfort us.

Moreover, because we are here inside the veil, and He with us, we shall also be there inside the veil, and we with Him.

Paul has described him as being there our

Intercessor: that is, our representative and the security for our getting there. His manhood is our manhood, His death is our death, His ascension is our ascension, His being inside the veil is our being inside the veil.

What then? Draw near as believers, draw near! Realize your present location in the holy of holies. O, amid the trials and disappointments of life how much we need the comfort of knowing just where we are!

And ye who are not as yet inside the veil, not yet believers on Christ, will you not look? See the veil is rent, sin is expiated, the way is opened, God is upon His mercy-seat. Draw nigh, draw nigh, even ye, and He will draw nigh to you!

"Through Thy precious body broken
Inside the veil;
Oh, what words to sinners spoken
Inside the veil;
Precious is the blood that bought us,
Perfect is the love that sought us,
Holy is the Lamb that brought us
Inside the veil.

"Lamb of God, through Thee we enter,
Inside the veil;
Cleansed by Thee we boldly venture
Inside the veil;
Not a stain, a new creation,
Ours is such a full salvation,
Low we bow in adoration
Inside the veil.

"Soon Thy saints will all be gathered
Inside the veil;
All at home no more be scattered
Inside the veil;
Naught from Thee our hearts shall sever,
We shall see Thee, grieve Thee never,
'Praise the Lamb' shall sound forever
Inside the veil."

The Christmas Guest

By Mary Jourdan

Gather in the mistletoe, the holly and the pine;
Deck the house from roof to floor with garland,
bough and vine,
For there comes knocking at the door,
a Guest of royal line.

Gather in the tender smile, the word of gracious worth;
Change the scornful thought before it
mars the joyous mirth,
For there comes knocking at the door,
a Child of gentle birth.

Jesus, the Son of Man

A Sermon by Rev. P. W. Philpott, Hamilton, Ont., reported for The Christian Workers Magazine

"He is despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Isaiah 53:3.

EIGHTY times in the Gospels, Jesus is called "The Son of man." It was the title He delighted in more than any other, and always applied it to Himself.

To be the son of Abraham only would have confined Him to one particular race, to be the son of David only would have confined Him to one family, but to be "The Son of man" is the equivalent of being the brother to every man. It means that in the human nature of Jesus any man, every man, can find a response to his need.

There are times in my life when only a man can understand me. If the man we call our Saviour was only God, He would never be able to understand me. I need a man to understand my need. And then there are things in my life as a man, that only God can meet, so that I am glad that my Saviour is the God-Man.

How Jesus Differed

In one respect Jesus differed from every other man born of a woman. He was a sinless man, the only sinless man. There never was a sinless man born into this world before Jesus, and there never has been a sinless man born into this world since Jesus.

But while He was a sinless man He was not a sorrowless man! There never was a man born into this world without sorrow, but the remarkable thing is that this man was absolutely perfect, absolutely sinless, and yet He was the greatest sufferer of all!

Can you tell why? I know why I suffer. I am a sinful man. Nearly all my sufferings are a result of my sin; but why should the sinless man suffer? Why should He, who could say: "The prince of this world hath nothing in me," He, who was "holy, undefiled and separate from sinners," why should He be the greatest sufferer in the human family? You and I have sorrows, but ours are tiny bubbles that rise and burst on the stream of our daily existence. He was "The man of sorrows." Never any man suffered as He did!

I want to ask you that question and to build up my message on it. Why should He be the greatest sufferer of all in the human family? Why? There are three reasons:

Three Kinds of Loneliness

First: He was a lonely man. His was the sorrow of loneliness, the sorrow of unrequited love, vicarious sorrow.

There are three kinds of loneliness. First, the loneliness of seclusion—isolation. A man may be so far away from all human beings that he may be a very lonely man. I am not so sure that this is a curse. Sometimes I think it would be the greatest blessing that could come to some of us, to be away from other folks.

The Lord Jesus Christ seemed to enjoy the loneliness of seclusion. Frequently we find Him getting up a great while before day, and going out into a desert place to be alone with His Father. After a busy day preaching to the people, we find Him withdrawing to the mountains, that He might be alone, with God. So that loneliness is not so bad, after all.

But there is, secondly, the loneliness of character. I mean by that, that a man may be so different in his ideals, and ambitions, and desires, that he may be living with people called by the same name, and yet be the most lonely man on earth.

That also applies to a woman. She may be so different in her nature and character, and so far away from fellowship with any of her kind, that though she has thousands about her, she may be very lonely. There are people in Chicago lonely in the midst of multitudes!

Perhaps there is no word so pathetic in the New Testament as that in the fifth of John's Gospel, where Jesus came to a man surrounded by thousands of people, worshipers going to the Temple, and who when Jesus asked him why he was not made whole, answered: "Because I have no man."

Lots of people about him; but no man that he could call his own! It is a sad thing to be in that condition.

Thirdly, there is the loneliness of shame.

A mother may be shut off from everybody through the waywardness of her daughter. Did you ever look into the face of a mother who was suffering the loneliness of shame?

Did you ever think that the sorrow of Job is the sorrow of a man suffering shame, shame because of trouble that came to him when his neighbors misjudged him, and walked by him with a look of cruel judgment?

The other day the wife of an attorney called on me for advice. Her husband held a prominent position at one time, when he began to take other folks' money, and now he is in jail, while she is working as a servant.

That woman today is suffering the loneliness of shame. It's not the shame of being a servant, but the shame of her husband's sin. She could not go out on the street where she had been a girl any more!

The Shame That Jesus Bore

Why am I talking like this? The loneliness of Jesus was the loneliness of shame. Did you ever think of that? So awful was the shame He bore, that there was not a friend who stood by Him! Even the men who swore that if everybody forsook Him, they would follow Him even to death, when the crowd was crying out, "Crucify him, away with him," even they fled from Him.

Christ was alone! There is a sorrow of unrequited love! John says, "He came to his own, and his own received him not."

Did you ever hear of a girl or boy who had been away from home a long time, and had found the Lord Jesus Christ, and when they went back thought that everybody would be glad to see them again and to receive their testimony, but, who when they got there were not received?

You are prepared to have other folks make fun of you, but when your own mother or husband "receive you not," it's different.

I heard of a Hebrew who found Christ, and who for seven years had been away from home. The Hebrews counted him dead and buried. He said, "I feel as if I ought to go home and see the folks again." And he went. He was only gone a day and came back and said: "When my mother saw me come to the door, she said: 'Have you given up your Jesus religion?' Of course I told her I had not. Then said she: 'Go away from here; you are no more my son.' " That Hebrew came to his own and his own received him not.

Jesus came to His own. The first place He went to was Nazareth where He was brought up; and when He got there, what did He do? He went up in the synagogue and stood up, and read from the Scripture; "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; he hath anointed me to preach the gospel; he hath sent me to bind up the broken in heart, to preach deliverance to the captives, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

He did not say a word about judgment but simply: "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." Then they rushed upon Him, and would have killed Him. "He came to his own." And He keeps coming, coming, coming.

"He was despised;" He is despised.

Where is He despised? In our city tonight. "He is rejected of men." He is nailed to the cross tonight by hundreds of thousands of people in the city in which you are living, who only use His name in blasphemy. The only time they think of Him is when they want to curse God Almighty.

A Lesson From Carlyle

Years ago I read the Life of Carlyle. I was very fond of him until I came across something which told of his wife. After a while he forgot he was married, and she lived with him until he would go without ever speaking to her.

When she was dead and buried, they went over her journals and found that she had poured all her life into his, that his fame was largely her fame, and his genius largely her genius. But she had starved to death, just like some traveler away out on a desert, starved to death for the want of affection.

He would often be found at her grave after that, crying out: "O, if I only had known; if I only had known."

That's just how a lot of people are treating Jesus Christ! He is not following you as a policeman, or as a judge! That's not what He is doing! He is not walking around after you to condemn you. O, bless God for a Saviour like that.

Do I mean by that that He is condoning sin? No! He says: "I am not come to condemn; my mission is to save."

I do not believe any here are going to hell because they are born in sin. But because they won't have a Saviour! "He that believeth on the Son is not condemned." Thank God!

"He that believeth not is condemned already." Why? Because "he believeth not on the only begotten Son of God." In other words, because he is offered a Saviour and they will not have Him!

Showing the Way Out

The Bible does not give us an explanation as to all the details of sin entering the world, but it shows us the way out.

The mission of a preacher is to show men the way out! And the condemnation of the folks who hear the message is that they will not have the Saviour who is being offered them.

I do not know any sin that is more awful than the sin of rejecting Jesus Christ. Men and women are being urged right along to accept Christ—and they refuse to have Him. That is the sin that condemns folks—Christ rejection!

Then lastly: His sorrow was vicarious sorrow. Anything vicarious is what is done absolutely for another.

I said a moment ago, that He was the greatest sufferer ever born into this world. Isaiah says: "Surely he hath borne our griefs." That's why He suffered. He suffered for me! In my place He took the judgment, the penalty of my sin, and bore it all.

The universities have been minimizing the sacrificial work of Jesus Christ. Men have been making little or nothing out of it, and even saying things that are blasphemy about His sacrificial work.

Not long ago I read of a Baptist minister at the head of one of the New York conventions, who actually said among other things, that he did not believe in another man suffering for him, and if Jesus Christ died for him, he did not thank Him for it!

Why fifty years ago they would not have allowed a man to come into the church if he believed any such thing! Think of a man being president of an intelligent body of Christians saying he does not believe in vicarious suffering! It is the one thing we do believe in! We do not believe anything else.

The Gary Hero

A few years ago, in Indiana, a girl had been terribly burned, and the doctors thought she would die, but they said: "If we could get enough human skin, we might be able to save her."

In Gary there was a newsboy, named William Ruff, one of whose legs was practically of no use to him. He found out about Ethel Smith's condition, and going to the doctor, "Do you think there is enough skin on that leg," he asked, "to save Ethel's life?"

"Yes!"

"Well, then take it off."

And they put William Ruff under the anesthetic and took the skin off the leg and put little bits of it over the poor burned parts of Ethel Smith, who in a short time began to show signs of improvement. But William Ruff died.

When he was dying, the doctor said: "Billy, do you know you are dying?"

"Yes," he said, "I thought I would die, but, it's all right. I always thought I would be of no use in this world with that poor leg, if I had to drag it that way all the time; but now I have saved a life, I am satisfied."

The people of that town so believed in vicarious suffering that they put up a monument in the center of it to commemorate the sacrifice of William Ruff.

I go there, and I see a girl coming with a bouquet, which she places on the monument.

"What are you doing that for?" I say.

"O, don't you know? Why, this man died for me! I am Ethel Smith. William Ruff gave his life for me."

You know what I mean, and yet, there are some people who never have in any way expressed gratitude for the sacrifice of Jesus Christ!

This afternoon, some one said: "What shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits to me?" It seems to me that if we believe this, the natural question in the human heart should be: "Now, what can I do?" "What should I do?"

The tenth verse of the fifty-third chapter tells you what you can do. If you brought millions of dollars tonight, up here, and said: "I am a sinner, and I want to show my appreciation, so I am going to give a million dollars to the Lord's work"—I do not believe that would count for anything with God.

There is only one offering a sinner can make.

The tenth verse says: "When thou shalt make his soul a sin offering"—for that is the real meaning of the word,—a "sin offering"—"he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied."

"He shall be satisfied." He will be glad He died for you, when He sees you accepting Him as your sin offering.

Do you see it, friends? "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied." There is joy in heaven over one sinner who repents. Jesus is glad. And I am sure there will be joy in your heart, too, if you repent and believe.

THE MAYFLOWER TER-CENTENNIAL

Plans are now formed in Great Britain and America for the International celebration of the Mayflower ter-centennial. Rev. M. G. Aubrey, honorary secretary of the Mayflower committee of the Free Church Council of Great Britain, has presented certain plans to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America for such celebrations. He says: "We must admit that some of our high idealism has been lost or obscured by the stress of the war. The note of selfishness, both national and individual, has been recurring. We need to go back to the true sense of social and moral values for which the Pilgrims stood. These might be summarized under three headings: First, Christian democracy: both civil and religious freedom were dominant notes with men and women who came to your shores on the Mayflower. Second, higher educational ideals: the Pilgrims left Holland because they felt that the surroundings there were demoralizing to their children and they sought to create an environment where they might rear them in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Thirdly, missionary zeal: these pioneers did not come to America in any selfish spirit of merely seeking to work out their own social and religious problems, but they sought to further the Kingdom of God through the evangelizing of the people with whom they came into contact. And today the churches still stand for these great principles. Whatever may be the outcome of the correspondence between Great Britain and the United States, the quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council to be held in Boston, December, 1920, is to be an opportunity of concentrating for a great work of international celebration of the Mayflower ter-centennial.

THE NORTHERN BAPTIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

This institution has just completed the purchase of a fine property, 3040 West Washington Boulevard, Chicago, possession to be secured July 1, 1920. The buildings on the site are well adapted to school work and there is room on the lot for other buildings. This institution was founded to afford young men of the Baptist faith who desire to avoid the destructive critical teaching of some seminaries a place of safety, and at the same time to offer the best opportunities for intellectual culture along theological lines.

The – Christmas – Oxen

by Mary Jourdan

The air was filled with wintry chill;
The eve was growing late,
As Joseph stood with Mary,
Before the inn-yard gate.

"No room have we," the keepers said,
"But still the night is cold;
It may be they can shelter you
Within the cattle-fold."

So Joseph turned his ass's head
Along the stony way,
And Mary spread her linen sheets
Upon the dusty hay.

They moved the feeding cattle back;
The restless beasts with solemn eye,
Kept watch until the mid-night hour
Brought forth a tiny, new-born cry.

And Mary, turning from His face,
Gazed where, among the scattered straw,
The kneeling oxen bowed their heads
Before her Son in puzzled awe.

* * * * *

'Twas long ago, the cattle knelt
Before the Christ in Bethlehem;
But still, upon the Christmas eve,
The waiting children watch for them.

The Story of the False Messiahs

From Palestine, The Rebirth of an Ancient Nation, by A. M. Hyamson; Alfred A. Knopf, New York

UNFORTUNATELY for the peace of mind of Jewry, the ceaseless longing for the Messiah led to many false hopes and disappointments.

In fact, from the days of Bar Cochba until the last century, except for brief intervals, Jewry in one country or another was never without a claimant to Messianic attributes.

Every one of these pseudo-Messiahs, no matter how obvious his charlatanry, has had a following. Every one has included the restoration to Palestine in his program. Every one without exception has brought misfortunes on his people.

Moses of Crete, in the fifth century, led the Jews of the island into the sea, where many of them were drowned. Isaac ben Obadiah, of Ispahan, two centuries later, was, with many of his followers, killed in battle by the army of the Caliph. Serenus, a Syrian, not many years later admitted when arrested that he had been deluding his followers. David Alroy, the hero of Lord Beaconsfield's Zionistic novel, was killed in battle against the Sultan. His followers had to pay the penalty for the rising. Abraham ben Samuel Abulafia in the thirteenth century actually attempted to convert the Pope to Judaism.

The reaction which followed the failure of fulfilment of the prophecies of Nissim ben Abraham, of Avila, led to the adoption of Christianity by many of his deluded followers. Asher Lämmlein, of Istria, at the beginning of the sixteenth century drew disciples from among Christians as well as Jews, but his prophecies were not fulfilled. David Reubeni, the ambassador of the Jewish King of Khaibar to the Portuguese Court, had Messianic attributes thrust upon him against his will, by the suffering crypto-Jews of Portugal. His contemporary Solomon Molcho, himself one of these crypto-Jews, claimed to be not the Messiah himself, but his prophet. He gained widespread adhesion to his claims, and even the personal protection of the Pope Clement VII, not only by his eloquence, his fervor, and his sincerity, but also by the fulfilment of his non-Messianic prophecies. Isaac Luria, in the same century, claimed also to be the forerunner of the Messiah, the greater office being taken to himself by his disciple, Hayyim Vital Calabrese, who had, however, to contend with a rival Messiah in the person of Abraham Shalom.

Of all the pseudo-Messiahs, however, the most influential, the one fraught with the most serious consequences to the fortunes of Jewry, was Sabbathai Zevi of Smyrna (1621 or 1626-1676).

His claims and adventures affected the politics of Europe. At one period of his romantic career the exchanges of Germany, Holland, and England were idle while the merchants discussed his claims and their possible authenticity. Tributes and embassies came to him from all quarters of the world. His birthday was made a day of rejoicing in the Jewish liturgy. Solemn fast days were abrogated in his honour. The Jews of the East and of the West abandoned their daily work and prepared for the return to Zion. Prophets arose in all the Jewries of Europe and Asia, and proclaimed Sabbathai as the Messiah. Christians, both in Turkey and in Europe, also accepted his claims. The Protestants of Hamburg appealed to their pastor to direct them in their great emergency. "What will become of the Christian doctrine and the belief in our Messiah?" they asked.

The Sabbathai Messiahship, however, burst like a bubble, pricked by the threat of the Sultan. Sabbathai, in order to save his life, became a Moslem, and the number of his supporters who followed his example almost threatened Turkish Jewry with annihilation.

The apostasy of Sabbathai, and even his death nine years later, did not mean the end of the Sabbathaian cult. It was claimed that his Mohammedanism was merely a necessary phase in the career of the Messiah. The controversies that surrounded him continued to divide Jewry for generations after his death, and even today in Salonica and Constantinople are to be found the Dönmeh, a sect of Moslemized Jews, descended from Sabbathai's followers, to whom his claims still hold something of the truth.

After Sabbathai came many other pseudo-Messiahs, none of whom, however, attained to anything like the notoriety of the prophet of Smyrna. Most prominent among them was Jacob Frank, of Podolia, who ultimately led his followers over to Christianity.

As recently as the year 1889 one Joseph Abdallah, a Jew, appeared in Sanaa, in Arbia, and claimed that he had been sent to lead his co-religionists back to the Promised Land.

The Sabbath Question

By Rev. Chas. F. Reitzel, Altoona, Pa.

WE ARE not surprised at the progress the Seventh Day Adventists make in their propagandas. The reason is clear. Their work is fostered by the blind zeal of sincere, yet mistaken, Christians.

It may seem hard, but nevertheless we believe it to be true that the State Sabbath Associations and kindred organizations are largely responsible for the success enjoyed by the seventh day advocates.

The arguments of these associations are based largely, if not exclusively, upon the law of the Sabbath day as found in the Bible. We remember hearing a doctor of divinity some years ago speak in defense of Sunday at a meeting of one of these associations and he took as his text these words: "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy," and from that he attempted to enforce Sunday observance.

The text enforced nothing of the kind. If it enforced anything, it was the observance of the Sabbath, or seventh day of the week. The text makes no reference to Sunday.

A Sword in the Enemy's Hand

Some years ago at the meeting of the World's Christian Citizenship Conference there were adopted resolutions which began as follows:

"Inasmuch as the Sabbath is an integral part of the moral law, which is universal in its application," etc.

What did this convention do? Instead of strengthening the sentiment in behalf of Sunday observance, it put a sword into the hands of the worst enemies of our Sunday, for while the seventh day advocates do not succeed in establishing the seventh day as the day of rest and worship, they do somehow make a point in shaking the faith of thousands in the observance of the first day of the week, especially among those who are not well grounded in the Word.

To speak of "the Sabbath as an integral part of the moral law, which is universal in its application" would bring amens from the seventh day advocates. And to this one would not object, provided such a statement could be supported by the Word of God. The advocates of the seventh day will themselves not hesitate to tell you that the law is divided into two parts, the moral and the ceremonial, and that the moral law is contained in the ten commandments, written on tables of stone by God Himself, and is the only law that is "universal in its application."

If we can believe that the fourth commandment is a part of the "moral law, which is universal in its application," then the seventh day advocates have by far the long end of the argument. If the law of the Sabbath is binding on the church, as some of these Christian citizenship movements declare, then there is no license to be found anywhere in the Word of God for the substitution of the first day of the week for that of the seventh or Sabbath.

The fourth commandment not only specifies one day out of every seven, but it also tells which one of the seven is to be observed. It demands not the observance of a Sabbath, but "the Sabbath day, to keep it (not another day) holy."

To say that there is no difference in the days is to trifle with the laws of Jehovah. When God commands a thing He says what He means and means what He says. He uses no superfluous words. He does not deal in platitudes. And only God has a right to change the Word of God.

An Orthodox Judge

We were preaching at the county seat of one of the counties of this commonwealth some years ago, when the ministers got after some Sunday desecrators. They took their case to the judge, charging the alleged law breakers with a breach of the Sabbath day.

The judge, however, was more orthodox than the ministers. Possibly such would not have been the case if those ministers would have given less time to law enforcement, and more thought to gospel acceptance on the part of those sinners; less time in getting transgressors into jail and more time in getting them into Christ.

At any rate the judge informed them that if they desired to have the men convicted they would have to change the tenor of their charge, and instead of accusing the alleged law breakers of transgressing the law of the Sabbath, a thing of which the judge said the men could not be guilty, for the acts were committed on the first day of the week and not the Sabbath, that they would have to make the charge that of breaking the law of the first day of the week, commonly known as Sunday.

If there is any force in the Old Testament law for a weekly day of rest, then the only day such a law supports is the seventh and not the first day of the week. The failure to recognize this fact has done more to foster Seventh Dayism than it has in creating sentiment in behalf of a proper observance of the first day of the week.

Israel and the Church

Another thing that has given support to the seventh day movement is the failure to distinguish between the dispensations of law and grace, or between Israel and the church.

Many look upon the church as Judaism spiritualized or reformed, instead of seeing the church as an entirely new thing in the program of Jehovah. If Christianity is only Judaism revived, then the law of the Sabbath stands, and Christians are expected to keep the seventh day of the week, and to do it more scrupulously and conscientiously than the Jews under the law. For if Jesus did anything in His interpretation of the law, he made it more sweeping and, if such a thing were possible, more strongly "universal in its application." Jesus not only applied the law to the overt act but to the desire and motive of the heart.

The fact is that Judaism has been set aside for the time being and not merged into Christianity, as some think. Judaism was national and earthly, while the church is spiritual and heavenly. The Lord is now doing a new thing in the calling out from the nations of the earth a people for His name. The man who goes back under the law to Judaism for his arguments in support of the church's part in governmental affairs, must not blame the seventh day people for going to the same source for their arguments in behalf of the keeping of the seventh day. If the part Israel took in national affairs is an argument for the church to do the same, then by the same logic will the church be driven to the keeping of the seventh day, instead of the first. There is no evasion of this conclusion. The mixture or union of church and state is Judaism pure and simple, and so is the keeping of the Sabbath. The two stand or fall together.

Yet is it not strange that our modern reform propagandists in their interpretation of the Scriptures will say that disasters, etc., are not punitive in the sense in which the judgments that fell upon the enemies of Israel were? For instance, the destruction of Pharaoh and his host in the sea. They do not believe that God deals with man in the same sense in which he dealt with him under the law or during the Old Testament dispensation. How strange! Here they virtually admit a change of dispensations, and yet in almost the same breath ignore dispensational teaching by their mingling of church and state, which mixture is neither American nor Christian.

Remember, the keeping of the first day of the week is not a change of days, not the substitution of the one for the other. The Sabbath day was never changed. The seventh day always was, and always will be, the Sabbath. The introduction of the dispensation of grace was the setting aside of Judaism with all its holy days, and new moons, and sabbath days, and the inauguration of an entirely new thing.

It is interesting to watch the comments in the Sunday-school literature when the lesson is about Jesus and the Sabbath. Almost invariably the writers will tell us that Jesus as Lord of the Sabbath had a right to change the day, and did so change it to the first day of the week. That He was Lord of the Sabbath and had a right to change the day, can not be disputed, but t say that He did change the day can not be prove from the Word of God, He interpreted th
Sabbath, and, having been "made under the law,
He observed it.

Let us illustrate in order to make this poi clear. Suppose the English government had national holiday corresponding to the America
Fourth of July, you would never think of sayin that the English national holiday was change to our July Fourth.

The American Fourth was the setting aside the English government, and the bringing of an entirely new nation. And, furthermor nothing that stood in support of the observan of the English holiday could possibly be of an use or force in establishing the observance of th American Independence Day. The only use tha could be made of it would be by way of analog

You will find that in Israel's rejection h sabbaths, and feast days, and new moons, an solemn feasts, were caused only to cease (Hos
2:11), yet never changed. But when Israel again restored to their own land and their Ten ple rebuilt; with that restoration will be broug back again their Sabbaths, and feasts and ne moons (Ezek. 44:24; 45:17; 46:3).

The man who fails to recognize dispensation truth, and who does not see the church as a entirely new thing, a kind of parenthesis in pr phetic chronology, will have no answer to gi to the advocates of the seventh day.

The Council at Jerusalem

In the fifteenth chapter of the Acts we hav the record of a great gathering which was f
the purpose of determining the relation of t
Christian to the law, and yet, strange as it ma seem, not a word is said in that meeting abo the keeping of the Sabbath. Can you think anything more voiceful than this silence?

In the deliberations of this gathering sever
conclusions were reached: (1) To bring t
Christian under the law is to tempt God (v.1
(2) It puts an unbearable yoke upon the ne of the disciples of Christ, which neither t fathers nor they were able to bear (v. 1
(3) It adds unnecessary trouble to the discip of Christ and subverts their souls (v. 24). (
It was contrary to the instructions given by t early church to those who went out from amo their number to do the work of the Lord (v. 2
(5) The decisions of the council were in ha
mony with the expressed will of the Holy Gh (v. 28).

Moses, the representative of the law, was wi
the Lord on the Mount of Transfigurati
Now if we are under the law, why did not t
Father say, "This is Moses; hear him." B
He did not. He said, "This is my beloved So hear him." "God, who at sundry times and divers manners spake in time past unto the fat ers by the prophets (and Moses was a proph

(Acts 3:22) hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son" (Heb. 1:1,2).

And do you recall the wording of the great commission? "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I (Christ, not Moses) have commanded you." And nowhere did Christ ever command a person to keep the Sabbath day.

It is true that the apostles and early disciples met for the preaching of the gospel on the Sabbath day, but they did so because that was the only day they could get a gathering of Jews to preach to. But when they met for worship, the breaking of bread, it was on the first day of the week.

That Purse of a $1,000

Our seventh day friends are clever in offering a purse of $1,000 for any person who will find one verse in the Bible authorizing a change from the seventh to the first day of the week, or commanding the keeping of the first day of the week.

This sounds good, but they could turn that offer around and make it $1,000 for the person who would find a verse that commands the church to keep the seventh day, and they would be just as safe in this offer as the other.

The Scriptures show that the law engraven on stone was "done away" (stated three times), and "abolished" (stated once) (2 Cor. 3:7, 11, 13, 14). Why do they not offer a purse of $1,000 for a verse that shows that the law engraven on stone was "done away?" They know that such a verse would be easily found. They divide, we believe, the law into two parts, the moral and the ceremonial, and would have us believe that the first is binding and the second not. We might offer a purse of $1,000 for a verse of Scripture in proof of such a claim. On the other hand, we might offer a purse of $1,000 to any seventh day advocate, who can produce a verse of Scripture that will show that the law of the Sabbath, which was "done away" in Christ, has ever been brought back by divine appointment and placed for its observance upon the church or the Gentiles as a moral obligation.

If the law of the Sabbath is now in vogue, then Jehovah has made a clash between two divinely appointed institutions, namely, the church and the State. The law of the Sabbath enjoins the execution of the death penalty, and the imposition of this during the present Gentile rule of the world has by the decree of Jehovah, been made the prerogative of the State and not the church. The church would not dare to carry out the law of the Sabbath in the execution of the death penalty. Now the fact that the penalty is abolished is proof sufficient that the law is also abolished.

Turning Away from Christ

The turning away from Christ to the law is more serious than one at the first might suppose. Hear what the Apostle says: "Christ is become of none effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law." These words may account for the fact that seventh-dayism is said to be rather barren so far as the saving of souls is concerned. The additions to their number come not so much, it appears, from the ranks of sinners who have been saved from a life of sin by the grace of God, as they do through the making of proselytes from other religious bodies. By teaching the law as a means of salvation you may succeed in making a proselyte out of a church member, but you cannot by the law make a Christian out of a sinner.

But one may ask, "Is not the Christian under obligation to do the things mentioned in the law, especially those in respect to murder, and adultery, and theft?" Quite sure he is, but not because the law says so. If he obeys those things simply because they are in the law, then "he is a debtor to do the whole law," and this will include the observance of the Sabbath, for James says: "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

To illustrate, let us use again the English government to represent the law and the newly formed American government of the thirteen colonies to represent the church or grace. Now many laws of the colonial government, especially those in respect to weights and measures, were precisely the same as those of the English government, the one having been taken from the other. Therefore may we ask, did the colonists obey those laws because the English government said so, or did they do it because the laws of their new government said so? There is only one answer to this question.

Confucius, who lived 500 years before the Christian Era, is said to have given moral precepts almost verbatim to those given by Christ, but no Christian would say that he keeps those precepts because Confucius says so, even if Christ should have borrowed them from the writings of Confucius. Now all of the Ten Commandments can be found to be enjoined in the New Testament, except the fourth—"Remember the Sabbath day."

Grace has its teachings as well as the law (Tit. 2:11-13), and many of the things that it tells us to do are found also in the law, but we do them because grace, which speaks to us in love, beseeches us so to do, and not because the law, with its terrible threats, commands us to do them. "We are not under the law, but under grace."

Flimsy Arguments

The man who speaks of a "change" of days, or a substitution of the first day of the week for that of the seventh, and attempts to use these things as an argument in support of the observance of the first day of the week, only betrays the flimsiness of his cause.

An attorney or debater generally takes the strongest argument to be had to establish his point, and when he fails to produce a vigorous argument it is quite evident that he has none to produce. He is as bad as the man who took the text, "They could not come to him because of the press," and from that text attempted to prove the wrong of Sunday newspapers. If that is the most damaging argument to be had against Sunday papers, then on this point, at least, the publishers of those papers will have no cause of fear concerning the future.

Or he is like the man who tried to prove the graciousness of the provisions of a divine providence, and to establish his point called attention to the fact (?) that the Lord in creating the world made all the great rivers to run close by or through the great cities of the land.

But you say, "Have we nothing in support of one day out of seven for rest and worship?" Of course we have. We have the Word of God that says, "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake." And the laws of the land designate one day out of every seven and that day the first one of the week. This law of the State, and all other laws not at variance with the Word of God, the believer is expected to obey and that conscientiously.

But you ask again, "Is that all?" Is not that enough? When a man seeks a wife, why does not he go out and get one after the manner of men under the Old Testament dispensation and be done with it, and not go through a whole lot of "red tape" by getting a marriage license and looking up a justice of the peace or minister of the gospel to perform the marriage ceremony?

But you say, "That would not be right now." Who said it would not be right? The Bible does not say so. The only word we have on the subject is from the State, and that is quite sufficient.

Why do not men keep slaves now? You say, "It would be wrong to keep slaves." Who said it would be wrong? Does the Bible say so? The Bible speaks of a Christian by the name of Philemon who had a slave by the name of Onesimus who robbed his master and fled to Rome. It seems that at Rome he became a convert through the teaching of Paul, and, strange as it may seem, Paul sent him back to his master. But the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution forbids the keeping of slaves and this is sufficient.

Christ's Resurrection

But some one will say, "Are the laws of the land the only support we have in behalf of the first day of the week?" By no means, yet these would be sufficient so long as there would be nothing in the Word of God to the contrary. But we have the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead on the first day of the week, and out of this fact not only grows the church, but everything the church has that is worth having (1 Cor. 15:14-18). And why should any object to having our day of rest and worship grow out of this fact also?

But it seems our seventh day friends would have the resurrection, plus the seventh day, and that if we fail to add the seventh day to that which the resurrection of Christ brings us, we shall be damned for the neglect. Under the law the rest day stood at the far end of the week; under grace it begins the week. Under law man worked to get rest; under grace he works because he has rest. And in addition to the resurrection of Christ we have the example of the early church for the observance of the first day of the week.

But we seem to hear some one whisper, "That still leaves the first day of the week without any stringent law with appended penalty; and do you not think we should use the penalties of the Sabbath law in enforcing the observance of the first day of the week?"

If we were under law we would say yes to this question, but we are under grace. And under grace we are not driven to a thing because of threats, but we are constrained because of love. And if the matchless love of God as revealed in Jesus Christ does not lead a man to give one day out of every seven to the Lord in worship, then all the threats of the law will fail to accomplish the task.

Grace is always more effective than the law. If it were not so, there would have been no occasion for the dispensation of the law to be followed by grace.

And see, in spite of fines and imprisonments of the law, men have continued to go down deeper and deeper into sin until their lives were as black as hell itself, yet grace lifted them out of their dilemma, a thing that the law has never succeeded in doing.

When the reform movements, and the police raids, and the law and order societies, have all failed in their work in the slum and tenderloin districts, then gospel missions are opened, and the gospel accomplishes what all the other agencies combined fail to do.

The man who has a clear apprehension of the provisions of divine grace will not fail to give the Lord a reasonable portion of his time.

LIGHT ON ERRONEOUS TEACHINGS

The International Christian Truth Investigation Society has just opened its headquarters at 401 Marquette Building, Chicago, and Steven Byron Dexter is acting as general superintendent. The purpose of the organization is to enlighten the people regarding erroneous belief and the placing of literature racks in various communities. Dr. W. E. Biederwolf is the national president of the Association, and Mr. E. O. Excell is international treasurer. Mr. Dexter is prepared to speak in churches and elsewhere on "Christian Fundamentals."

The Christian's Fashion

by Annie J. Flint

"Old-fashioned"? Ay, we are; we do not dress
In each new flimsy fancy of the day,—
The fashions of this world that pass away;
We wear the robe of Jesus' righteousness.
It is our pride, our glory to confess
That we have found a grace that does not change
Though all on earth may alter and grow strange
Like worn-out garments in a mouldy press.
We have no honor in the world's blind eyes;
Our humble garb no "modern" shaping shows,
Men don the gaudy raiment that they prize,
The gauzy rags their worldly wisdom knows,
And call us foolish,—us, the only wise,
Who wear the wedding robe the King bestows.

'Tis ours to know that in the King's pure sight
We are all fair and glorious within,
Our hearts washed clean from every taint of sin,
Fit for the heavenly city's halls of light;
To see His face and walk with Him in white,
The golden glory of the temple pave,
Amid the songs ascending, wave on wave,
Where His redeemed shall serve Him, day and night,
Honor to Him who loved us, and who bought
Our ransom from this world's eternal loss;
Praises to Him who died for us, and taught
Our souls to count all worldly gain but dross;
To keep, despite earth's varying styles of thought
The old, unchanging fashion of the Cross.

Russia, the New Mission Field

By Professor Mich. A. de Sherbinin.

This article gives data and examines the spiritual condition of the Russian people comparing it with conditions in the West.—Editors.

EUROPEAN Russia covers 1,867,737 square miles and Siberia equals twice the area of the United States. The whole population of what constituted the Russian Empire is 180,000,000 souls. Of that number 131,000,000 are in European Russia.

Speaking in round figures, about one-third of that number are Poles, Finlanders, Lithuanians, Letts, Georgians, Armenians and many other nationalities, who are developing their individual life and are establishing their self-government. They were part and parcel of the empire by the right of conquest and now the wave of self-determination, which is sweeping over the earth, has not left them unaffected.

These twelve missionaries speak Russian and most of the languages of Russia, such as Ukrainian, Polish and Lithuanian.

One need not be a great prophet to say that the key to wealth in Russia will be in the hands of those who will control the South with its vast wheat-growing belt of black loam and also the clay belt lying north of the Black Sea, as it contains most of the mineral coal and iron ore, also the Caucasus with its rich wells of mineral oil, producing under normal conditions 10 million tons of crude oil, Baku being the chief oil center of Europe.

Siberia's Possibilities

Siberia is a vast undeveloped and thinly populated country with immense mineral wealth, with forests and with great stretches of land for agriculture and cattle raising.

Siberia is certainly a country to itself, rich in any kind of raw material and rich in possibilities. Its few aborigines belong to the yellow race and that land will be an heirloom for the white man, if he is wise in his stewardship by not devastating its forests and natural resources and by not depraving and ruining its savage tribes, as has been done in the past.

It was the Slavs, who during centuries served as a bulwark of the western civilization against the invasions of Asiatic hordes. When the armies of Jenghis-Khan conquered Central Asia and Russia, then the Russ armies, partly destroyed by the fierce invaders, met the shock of the invasion and saved Europe from subjection to the Mongol rule.

It was under these continual attacks of the wild Mongolians and under much adversity that the traits of patient endurance and of flexibility of character were moulded in the Russian temperament, but it was also under the two centuries of Mongolian rule that the national character was deeply affected by the despotic rule of the Tartar conqueror.

While Europe was in better condition for advancement in knowledge and its schools were developing and preparing the people for the Reformation and for the democratic government, Russia had to bow under the Tartar conquest, known in history as the Mongol Yoke.

Yellow Domination

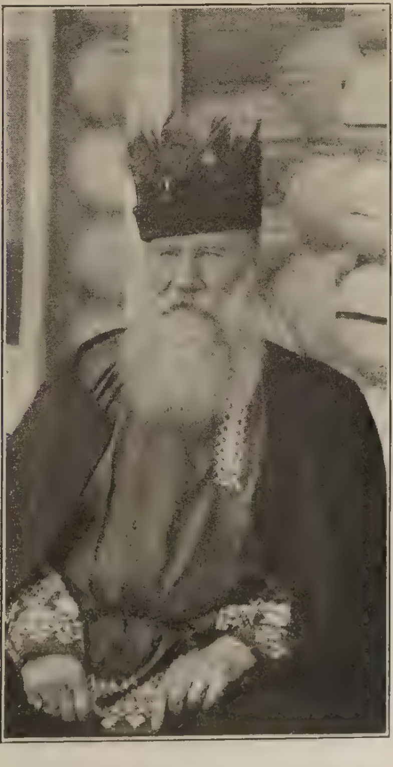
That yellow race domination lasted 256 years, if reckoned from the year 1224 A. D., when the Russ princes were defeated at the Kalka River. That Mongolian Yoke retarded for centuries Russia on the road of progress alongside of the western nations. Not only that, but the mildness of character and the humane laws, that were handed to the nation in the tenth and eleventh century by its first princes and civilizers, the Scandinavian vikings, known in history as the Russ-Varingians, all this was swept away by the influence of the cruel and barbarous Tartars.

Today we see that the industrial centers of Russia are under the domination of communistic rule, whereas the North, the South, a part of the West and the vast domain of Siberia have governments of their own.

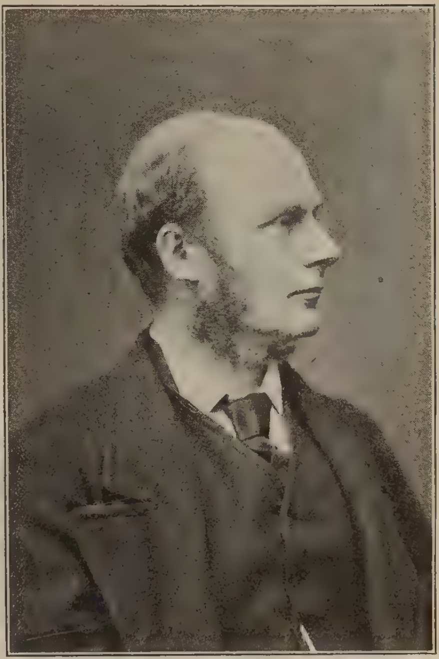
Rural Illiteracy

Eighty per cent of Russia's population are agriculturists and we hear that these are desirous of establishing representative government with rulers elected by universal suffrage. The reason why this rural population could not thus far assert themselves is that they are far behind in education. The population of the large cities could establish their communistic government and repress by fôrce of arms people holding views differing from theirs.

From statistics we know that only thirty per cent of Russia's population can read and write; the balance of the people cannot form an opinion of their own, as they have to rely upon the knowledge of that minority which can read and write. It is the wheat-growing population of Russia that will have to dictate their terms of self-government, not the councils of soldiers and sailors and not the communistic rule of industrial centers as was the case for the last two years. Only it will require time to educate this rural population and it will require time to supply them with the modern farming implements and to teach them their use.



A Russian Nobleman in National Costume —This Man Had to Flee from the Bolsheviks to the Caucasus



Lord Radstock—Russia's Evangelist in the Seventies of Last Century

Twenty years ago I heard English industrial men complaining that for a large country like Russia, only a small portion of land-owners had the means to buy modern machinery, while the poor peasants had not the means nor the education to purchase any such machinery and were cultivating the ground with the same primitive methods, as centuries ago. It must be remembered that the normal export of wheat from Russia is 100 million bushels per annum.

Who Is My Neighbor?

Now it took us centuries and may perhaps take still some more time to know the right answer to the question asked of our Lord by the Jewish scribe: "Who is my neighbor?" We were too much cherishing our ideal of isolation, as if on an island of our own, and the thought of possessing culture and prosperity for ourselves.

Would it not be a paying investment to start a campaign of education for the inhabitants of the wheat-growing belt of Russia in teaching them the improved methods of farming, in planning out a system of selling them all the necessary implements on easy terms of payment, and above all, in giving them the brotherly hand of a Christian teacher, whose object is not selfish moneymaking, but who is both an educator and technical man and a Christian missionary?

Church in Omsk, Russia, Near Main Station

This is what Christian America can do for the eastern part of Europe and thereby educate a generation of thankful, independent agriculturists who would not then be at the mercy of ruthless exploiters, eager to invest their capital, where there is cheap labor, quick returns and ignorant masses.

I believe that the safest returns of invested wealth, labor and knowledge are those that are slow but nevertheless sure in coming, and these are the returns promised to the follower of Jesus.

Present Reward of Investment

In saying this I do not mean only the reward promised us for the world to come, but I mean that the best investment that has been made in trade, has been the one that followed in the steps of the Christian missionary. I do not see why the ideal missionary and the ideal all-around civilized man should not always be represented by the same person.

In Europe the high schools and universities have sprung up from religious bodies. The higher schools were mostly attached to communities of religious men and religious institutions. It would seem that it was so in Russia, previous to the Tartar conquest.

After that however, the Church, in the East, lost her grip on the schools. In the sixteenth century there was little learning; even the clergy could not all read. They recited their prayers that they had learnt by heart. While in the West it was the Church that ruled over the secular leaders and dictated to them their conduct, in the East where the church was crippled by the Mohammedan conquest, it was in most cases the secular power that dictated to the bishops and priests their conduct.

The Influence of the Church

In Russia it was only the rich monasteries that had lands and received free labor from the serfs, who lived on those lands. The majority of priests had no fixed salary, but received a fee for each ritual or service they performed. Those that lived in villages often tilled their own ground as simple peasants.

Any impartial observer can see that the conquest of the East, by the Tartars in its northern part and by the Turks in its southern part crippled the life of the Eastern Church.

While in the West the prelates were eager to maintain power and to keep a measure of discipline over the flock, no such thing was possible in the East. There the church had through centuries to eke out her existence under the domination of the Mongolian race, had to compromise with the secular power, and that to such extent, that in Russia the church became even the obedient tool of the Czars.

The despotic domination of the Tartars paved the way to the domination of the Czar, and when, two centuries ago, Peter I saw the danger of an enlightened church becoming a rival to his power, he abolished the office of patriarch or chief

Mrs. de Sherbinin and one of her pupils, Mr. Yee-San bishop and established instead an executive board or synod, which was nothing but a department of the State under the full control of the secular power, exactly as we would have the department of marine, of war or of foreign affairs.

Thus what was left of the independent life of the church ceased to exist and became only an integral part of the bureaucratic machinery, or in other words, the national Church of Russia received a death-blow at the hands of the Czar.

Bolshevik Persecutions

A great change has recently taken place in the religious domain. The Russian priests are no more successful in suppressing the rise of Protestantism among the common people. Instead of betraying the evangelical Christians into the hand of the secular power, as was the universal custom under the Czars, they are now themselves being persecuted by the Bolshevik mob rule. Some of them have died the martyr's death, being cruelly beaten, shot and drowned. A Christian sister of renown in Moscow wrote recently that in talking of us, evangelicals, the Russian priests term us "their brethren," not sectarians as before.

Pride of the Educated Classes

In dealing with the Russian mind we must fully understand that it is only the educated classes that will meet the missionary with a receptive mind and who will be open to conviction. To gain the illiterate class and peasants will require time.

Illiterate men are extremely "gregarious" and unable to think for themselves. In other words the simple peasant is not able to get along without a leader. He is not self-dependent; he will go only where his leaders want.

On the other hand if the man of the intelligent class is converted to the truth of the gospel and wishes to have success in winning souls for Christ, he must get rid of his scholastic pride.

We hear that in the parts of Russia where the mob began to rule, the cultured classes of the population have endured persecution and ill-treatment at the hands of the mob. The intelligent classes are not understood by the masses and they have lived a life separate from them.

Bazaar in Omsk, Russia

A Railway Station in Siberia

That estrangement and that intellectual pride of the educated classes can be explained by the fact that the cradle of culture and science in Russia was not the Christian church, as in the West, and that therefore science was not arrayed in the garb of Christian humility.

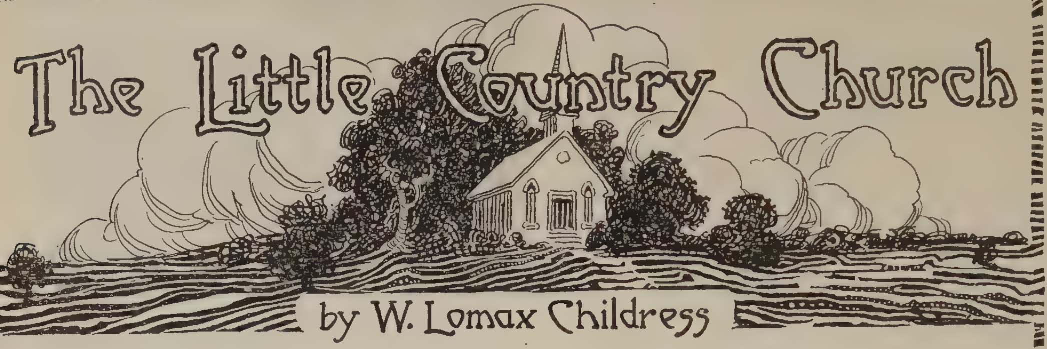
The Russian high-school then did not spring from a Christian source, that is from the teaching of the One who humbled Himself to the death of the cross to enlighten us, as in the West, but from a school called to life by a secular government and which, in spite of all her intellectual merits, was a copy of the western schools, minus Christianity, and which could not therefore meet the need of the crippled Eastern Church.

The Lord has great and blessed promises for two who will agree on earth, as touching anything that they shall ask from our Heavenly Father. May we agree, dear Christian reader, to ask that the Lord would not deprive us of our privilege of doing our part in His work of salvation and grace and, on hearing His call, may we worship Him in true devotion and obey His command.

ALL ABOARD FOR TOKIO

Three large ocean steamers have been engaged to carry delegates to the Convention of the World's Sunday-school Association in Tokio, Japan, October, 1920. The opening of the convention will be about October 5.

The world interest in Sunday-schools is reflected in the news from Brazil that state and regional conventions are being arranged. Palestine and Asia Minor, where Sunday-school work was practically destroyed during the war, are calling for some leaders to re-establish the schools in those lands. In China there is a demand for instruction in Sunday-school methods, and The Sunday-school Journal, issued in Chinese by the China Sunday-school Union, is calling for an increase in the study of phonetics in connection with the thirty-nine characters which are used, by which illiterate persons can learn to read in about three weeks.



The Little Country Church

by W. Lomax Childress

There's a road that I would take for an olden memory's sake;
  It leads across the valley's bowl by woods of oak and birch,
Where the trumpet flower is clinging, and the mocking bird is singing,
  To the story and the glory of the little country church.

It lies in peace a dreaming, with the sunlight o'er it streaming,
  And the neighbors sleep together where the "mossy marbles" be;
There the footsteps went in childhood by the tangled brake and wildwood,
  And the gentle hearts and tender that were very dear to me.

There the vows to God were given, there was mingled earth and heaven,
  When the Spirit came to glorify His saintly servant's word;
There the eager heart confessing found the richness of a blessing,
  And born of God a larger life to sudden rapture stirred.

There the plain old fashioned mothers, and the sisters and the brothers,
  And the toiling fathers, came to find communion fond and sweet;
With the week days' ended labor there was found the friend and neighbor
  To claim the gracious blessing where the faith and promise meet.

The blue skies bend above it and the gentle winds they love it,
  The little church, the brooding church, the church of long ago;
I can hear its bell a ringing and the well loved voices singing,
  That have joined the higher chorus where the living waters flow.

Some day the journey ended, the shine and shadow blended,
  It would be sweet to rest awhile by waving oak and birch,
Where God in mercy found me and put His love around me,
  In the olden golden glory of the little country church.

How God Heals Sickness

This contribution appeared in our contemporary years ago, but its essential value and unfailing timeliness call for its resurrection. We know of nothing better on the subject within the same space.—Editors.

SO MUCH fanatical teaching is prevalent in respect to direct answer to prayer in the case of the restoration of the sick, that we would call special attention to the following letter, written by Dr. C. I. Scofield to one who was in trouble and asked advice on the subject. As the letter already has been a blessing to others, we have secured permission to give it to our readers, in the hope that the concise presentation of the truth may prove more widely helpful.

All Healing Is of God

"If I understand either the broad teaching of the Scripture concerning the Father's minute providences in His watchful care over His own, or the special teachings concerning healing, I must testify that all healing is divine. Whether remedies are used, or only the prayer of faith, the healing is of God. There is great unbelief on this point. Many Christians seem to fancy that by resorting to remedies they can keep their dear ones whether it be God's will or not. It is not so. No remedy avails when God is calling one of His children home.

"The Bible testifies abundantly to the fact that God heals the sick by direct power, apart from remedies. It would be useless to quote passages to prove this; they abound, both in the Old Testament and in the Gospels. If we come this side of the personal ministry of Christ, we find the apostles healing by divine power. This also, is incontestable. No one disputes it.

The Prayer of Faith

"But when this dispensation fully opens, that is, when we reach the Epistles, that portion of the Scripture especially given for the instruction of the believer in this dispensation, the subject is scarcely mentioned. Healing is enumerated among the gifts of the Spirit, 1 Corinthians 12:9; John prays that Gaius may have temporal prosperity and health according as his spiritual life may be, 2 John 2; and James, writing to the twelve tribes scattered abroad, directs that if any are sick, they (the sick ones) shall send for the elders, and gives the general promise that the 'prayer of faith shall save the sick,' James 5:14,15.

"I do not, with some, limit that promise to the Jewish Christians, nor do I believe the anointing with oil to be medical—a mere oil bath—but symbolical. But what is the prayer of faith? Surely John defines it. 'And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us,' 1 John 5:14.

"But the Epistles have still more to say about sickness and bodily infirmity. Paul has a physical 'thorn,' physical as all agree. He prays thrice; then God stops him. The infirmity must remain. Whereupon Paul glories in it, 2 Corinthians 12:7-10. For Timothy's stomach trouble he prescribes wine, 1 Timothy 5:23. Trophimus he leaves at Miletum sick—without a hint that either Trophimus or himself ought to be in a bad conscience about it, 2 Timothy 4:20.

"It comes, then, to this. God heals. There is no other healing. Sometimes He heals by direct power, without remedies. He will always do this for those who, being sick, send for the elders, and are anointed with oil in the name of the Lord, provided the prayer of faith is among them. The result only can determine whether that prayer has been offered.

Faith Not a Means of Escaping God's Will

"But faith is not a means of escaping God's will, but of getting that will done. He could not give a faith by which something should be wrung from Him against His holy and perfect will; nor could any reverent and trustful child of God wish Him to do so.

"Our extreme divine healing friends insist that it is always God's will to heal. To which I answer: (1) They do not prove it by clear and express Scripture; and (2) if so, they are responsible for all death, since the prayer of faith will heal, and need not be that of the sick person.

"I regard, therefore, your attitude of entire surrender of your child to the will of the Father as the attitude of true faith. It might please Him to give to you, or to some one of us, the prayer of faith. In that case, how gladly we would wing it back to His gracious, loving heart. It may please Him to use climate, air, food, medicine for her healing. How glad we shall be if that be His loving will. It may please Him to take your little one to stay with her brother till He comes who 'will come and will not tarry.' Then we shall weep, but back of the tears we shall be glad in the perfect will of a perfect God.

God Provides Means

"I note some things. For instance, our friends ask us if God made the materia medica of the doctors. One might as well ask if God made woolen cloth or wheat bread.

"The answer is obvious. God made the wool, man makes the cloth. God made the wheat, man makes bread. So God makes cinchona bark, out of which man extracts quinine; God makes grapes, man makes wine, and Paul prescribes a little for Timothy. Such reasonings against remedies are childish.

"But there is something far worse. When any one tells you that God has made your child ill to chastise you and your family, because you do not hold a doctrine of divine healing which seems true to them, they misrepresent and slander our blessed heavenly Father. What! He lay suffering on your innocent child to flog you? Why, I would not do that; would you? And would our God? Oh, monstrous!

"But let us beware of unfaith. Let us beware of saying that tuberculosis or anything else is incurable. Nothing is too hard for God. Let us keep in unbroken and restful fellowship with Him 'watching daily at His gates, waiting at the posts of His doors;' swift to do what His Spirit or His providences may point out; ready to send up the glad prayer of faith, or ready to use means. No disease is too deadly for His healing; no medicine is powerful enough to overcome His will."—Record of Christian Work.

The Nortons in Brussels, Belgium

Letter from Mrs. Ralph C. Norton, just received.—Editors

AMERICAN friends have become fairly familiar with the story of the little Belgian soldier met on the Strand in London so many years ago, for how long a time has elapsed since those opening days of the war. I believe we all feel a life time has intervened but that little Belgian soldier to whom we gave a Gospel and with whom commenced our work amongst the Belgian soldiers was a very real prophecy of the greater things that were to be.

Opening Day in Brussels

I would like to have transported all you readers to a house in Brussels the last Sunday in June of this year. If you had been there around five o'clock in the afternoon you would have seen some agitated Christian workers—not really agitated, but very nearly so—for this was our opening day in Brussels and the first of our gospel services to be conducted in our own hall in the heart of that busy, bustling, strange city. For little Pierre de Wallens and fifteen thousand others like him who had joined La Ligue des Saintes Ecritures (The Scripture League), founded by one of their own number, had pled with us to come over into Belgium and help them, that is, to help their mothers, and wives, children, brothers and sisters. The unspeakable joy these soldiers had known through reading the Bible for themselves they wished to pass on to their beloved ones at home, not so fortunate. We, in America, have had the Bible all our lives and to some of us it becomes increasingly precious, and our thirsty souls cannot be fed at any other source, and no less have these Belgian soldiers literally eaten the Word of God those long years in the trenches.

Colporteurs of the Belgian Gospel Mission with Mrs. Norton. Peter at Right of Mrs. Norton, Arthur and Frank, Two of Peter's Converts, at Mrs. Norton's Left

And so, obeying the divine behest, we made our decision to follow Him into Belgium. Our committee was reorganized in the City of Philadelphia in November, 1918, shortly after the Armistice and the title chosen for our work the Belgian Gospel Mission; and the eighteenth of December found us actually in Belgium, such a short time after the Armistice that the city was very nearly as desolate and famine stricken as it had been during the last year of the war.

Seeing the appalling need of these people, we spent the first three or four months of our stay there in practical relief work for these unfortunates. The government, recognizing the value of our services, put military automobiles and motor trucks at our disposal, and also permitted us to buy from their government stores tons of food stuffs, such as Quaker oats, condensed milk and chocolate.

The Children and Chocolate

A picture rises before me of the Grande Place in Mons. I had several large boxes of chocolate in the car with me and I commenced to break off bits and hand them out to children who straggled around the car. In shorter time than I can relate, the car and myself were engulfed in a seething mass of humanity in which children were crushed and screaming. One poor little lad, with his arm scarcely larger than a broomstick, had thrust that same ragged arm through the opening in the door and as the crowd pressed upon him his arm was almost broken. But what were these ragged scarecrows of people calling out? "Chocolat pour mes enfants" ("Chocolate for my children, for the love of God"), they cried.

The Church at Rougy, Belgium, After a Service—Mrs. Norton Sitting in Foreground. German Shells Took the Roof Off, but Otherwise the Building Was Not Damaged. They Need Money for Repairs

At last, towards spring, food stuffs began to filter in from the outside, but even now the prices remain so high that while Antwerp and Brussels seem full of food, yet the poor are almost as needy as ever they were. Even bread is almost prohibitive in price.

By May we had found the fine hall building into which we moved late in that month. The building was well adapted to our needs, with large room for assemblies, one floor for offices and another floor for our own apartment, and still another floor for study rooms. At the back was ample space for a book room and for storing our merchandise, and all at a ridiculously low figure.

Pierre's Mother Saved

But to return to that first Sunday's meeting. Pierre de Wallens had been a visitor to our place soon after we moved in. As he was something of an artist, it was his own beautiful, framed motto that looked down upon us in that assembly room: "Crois au Seigneur Jesus Christ et tu scras sauve." ("Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved.") And that was the subject of my husband's first sermon and faithfully did our helper Miss White translate it; and at the close literally scores told us they wanted to do that very thing for they wanted to receive the gift of eternal life. Amongst the number—can you dream of what joy this brought to our hearts?—was Pierre's own widowed mother; the mother of our first soldier brought to Christ the first day of our ministry in Brussels!

And so the months have slipped away until now it is October and as I left Belgium the ninth of this month to join my husband in America for a few weeks of deputation work, I left a work which was little short of a miracle. Some of our friends had said to us, "You will find people will not come to gospel meetings in Belgium which are interpreted." But the last Sunday before my departure our hall was crowded, no standing room, and soon we must search for a larger hall for assembly. How the Belgians can sing! No need to labor with them or to exhort them to sing the praises of God. The hymn is once played through and they know it and everybody sings. Then just as soon as the service is finished we slip out the back way to greet each one as they pass from the hall.

A Nurse's Shattered Nerves

What an interesting audience it is! Here is a

Some of the Workers of the Belgian Gospel Mission—There Are Now Twenty

Red Cross nurse, for five years associated with Miss Edith Cavell in her nursing home. She first heard me speak at a conference of Christian workers in Brussels and since that has been coming regularly to our services. She has thrilling stories to tell us of war days. Her nerves are badly shattered as a result of Miss Cavell's arrest and execution. But there is a humorous side to her experiences as she recounts them too. For example, as she told us of the first time the Germans came to investigate Miss Cavell's hospital, how all the English soldiers who were being treated there and who later were helped to escape, were hustled over an adjoining wall into a neighboring garden; and how she, Miss van T. had to sit on top of a soldier who was too ill to take his departure with the others, with teeth chattering so she could not have answered intelligently the German officer if he had spoken to her. And she says to me, "Mrs. Norton, the sad thing to me about it all is that I have stayed on in that hospital ever since the war was over just thinking that perhaps those soldiers whom we helped to escape would write back and thank us for what we had done along with Miss Cavell, but never a one has written us a word." And she says to me, "But Mrs. Norton, my nerves are shattered and my heart is empty. Tell me of the peace and joy which you and these others seem to have."

A Young Moody Institute in Belgium—First Class of Students in School Conducted by the Nortons

The Quiet Belgian Babies

And then you must know about the women's Bible class which I commenced last March on the invitation of several Christian women in the city. This class has grown and grown until the last Wednesday night's class found seventy present. Mothers bring their babies and their little ones, but there is never a peep from them, for those Belgian babies are certainly the quietest ones I have ever encountered. And the older children seem to enjoy the Bible study equally with their mothers.

Another Bible class conducted by our helper, Miss White, has also been going on for several months at Sart Moulin near to the historic battlefield of Waterloo and within sight of the great mound surmounted by a lion, which marks that spot. To this weekly class come several women from a neighboring village, walking five or six miles through the rain to be present.

A Correspondence Course Conducted

Then we were having insistent calls from Antwerp, and the last of this month is to be opened headquarters there, with weekly gospel services and Bible classes. Our chief objective in Belgium is to give these people the Word of God, and our first effort to get in personal touch with the fifteen thousand and more members of the Ligue des Saintes Ecritures, and to form little circles for Bible study in all the little villages. We have five colporteurs now with us, men who were won to Christ during the war, and these men, with others who we hope will join us, will visit personally these men and cultivate their interest in the Word of God which they have begun to read. A Bible school was opened in our headquarters in Brussels the ninth of September and a Bible correspondence course is being also conducted with some sixty members.

How are we finding these members of the Ligue des Saintes Ecritures? We are finding some who, returning home, have lost their first love and have gone back to the old ways. We do not cease to pray and work for these. Of many others we can find no trace. Some, we find, have paid the great price and have passed on. One such home was visited in Brussels by one of our men, and the widowed mother said, "My boy has gone. I am rejoicing to know that he was a member of such a league and, for my part, I shall come to the gospel services you have commenced here." And when I saw her at the close of one of our services she said, "You will always see me here every Sunday." So that boy, in death, is doing for his mother what little Pierre de Wallens, in life, is accomplishing.

And the story has reached us of two other boys who, coming back from the front, greeted their mother with their beloved Testaments and with the announcement that in the great war they had found Christ. A Protestant pastor, who knows the family, told us this, and told us of how that mother had prayed all through the war, not primarily for the safety of her boys, but for their salvation from sin.

Found Christ in a German Prison Camp

And then, last of all, a colporteur, who has been with the British and Foreign Bible Society for twenty-five years, came to tell us of a soldier he had met in Antwerp. Someone had asked him to call on this man, and he found him such a bright Christian with such a love for the Saviour, a love which expressed itself as only a lover's heart can. "How did you find Christ out there in Germany, in your prison camp," the colporteur inquired. "Was it through the offices of a German chaplain?" "No," came the answer, "It was through a box of food sent me from London by Mr. and Mrs. Norton. The food was soon eaten and the hunger returned, but I had another hunger those days, a hunger of heart, and a little book which was enclosed in that box, a copy of the New Testament, satisfied that hunger and revealed the face of the One who is altogether lovely, and today I know only Him, who is my Life and my Lord."

(Readers of The Christian Workers Magazine who may wish to contribute to the Nortons' work in Belgium may send remittances to the magazine office, or to the Treasurer, Mr. C. G. Trumbull, 1031 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.)

PROPHETICAL SUBJECTS CONSIDERED

The Prophecy Investigation Society held a meeting in the hall of Sion College in London, November 20, the subject for consideration being "The Seven Vials and God's Wrath." The discussion was opened by Mr. W. Hoste and Rev. Charles Askwith; and "The Judgment of the Nations" was opened by the Rev. Canon F. J. Horsefield, D. D., and Rev. E. L. Langston.

Among correspondent members of this society are Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., Rev. A. C. Gaebelein, Rev. W. H. G. Thomas, D. D., and Rev. R. A. Torrey, D. D. Members of this society are confined to evangelical clergymen and laymen of the Church of England and other Protestant evangelical Bible students, who are agreed as to the divine inspiration, authority, and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures; the unity of the Godhead, and the trinity of the persons therein; the utter depravity of human nature in consequence of the fall; the incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and His work of atonement for all sinners of the human race; His future millennial reign, and His personal and premillennial advent; the justification of the sinner by faith in Christ Jesus alone; the work of the Holy Spirit in the regeneration and sanctification of the sinner; the immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, and the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to judge the quick and the dead; the eternal blessedness of the righteous, and the eternal punishment of the wicked.

"Man's Extremity and God's Opportunity"

The following double column editorial, under the title as given in our heading, appeared in the Pittsburgh Leader, the afternoon of October 31. The editor is an intelligent, wideawake and keen observer of current events, not only those of his own city, which is a center of great industrial activity and monetary influence, but of the conditions of the country at large and of the world. There cannot be any possible bias in the editorial because of the editor's affiliation with religious pessimism. We have the expression of the editor's best judgment as to conditions and as to the only remedy for them. Five hundred copies of this editorial were sent to members of Congress, and deeply impressed many of them. It is trusted that many, somewhat thoughtless of present conditions, may think more deeply, and that all of God's people may respond to the exhortation to earnest prayer for the country and the world.—Editors.

I

WE might as well admit the corn. Nearing the end of the rope, it is meet that like the chronic critic of the medics when sickness comes; heavens but how they do rush to the doctor's office! We have all read of death-bed repentances, and some have called them cowardly. There are countless millions who never pray save when trouble comes.

But "man's extremity is God's opportunity," says a proverb, and it is proving true; too true for cynicism.

Human management of the affairs of the universe is failing. Without divine intervention, the world and its people will plunge into chaos. Even our own dear America is rent asunder by the spirit of defiance of law and order. There appears to be no man or men big enough in this land to stay the rising tide of disaster. No public man possesses power or influence sufficient to allay the turmoil.

Employer and employe cannot reach that mutual understanding, that necessary harmony, upon which the livelihood of all of the people is dependent. An industrial warfare is being waged behind whose lines lurks anarchy. Famine, destitution, bloodshed and misery fringe the battlefields.

American institutions, American traditions, American hopes, American aspirations are no longer respected by many Americans. Raucous voices rail at patriotism's plea. The American Republic is already in the twilight of its darkest hour. It would be folly to deny the desperate conditions that exist. It would be criminal to conceal the deadly peril of the nation.

II

The people of the United States must arouse themselves to a realization of the growing menace before they are annihilated by the powers of evil. The true Armageddon is at hand, and the eagle, flying in mid-heaven, is saying with a great voice, "woe, woe, woe, for them that dwell on the earth."

All that human power could do has been done. Man's extremity has arrived. It is now God's opportunity. God alone can save the world.

"In God we trust" is our national motto. And it is to God that we must now appeal. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." Perhaps these trials are being thrust upon us to bring a wayward people back to the throne of grace. Our efforts, our thoughts, our labors, our progress have all been along material lines. There has been too little spirituality in our activities. Our bodies have grown while our souls have shrunk.

Now, as the clouds darken around us, as a nation and as individuals, our physical sight grows dim and our spiritual vision increases. "God help us," is our plea.

In prayer alone exists hope. The people of America must go down on their knees and ask for divine aid. Next Sunday, in all of our churches, of all sects and denominations, there should be humble, united confession of error and earnest, honest prayer to the Creator for mercy and help.

III

We must pray for our country that it may be exalted in righteousness, and for those who exercise authority, that they may be wise and just.

We must pray for all our citizens, that they may be faithful to duty and obedient to law, and that our land may be a land of liberty and peace and mutual service.

We must pray, believing that God hears our voices and supplications; that "gracious is the Lord, and righteous; yea, our God is merciful."

The labor strikes, existing and to come, are not ordinary labor disputes. The world has known nothing like them and their effect upon mankind may plunge the world into horrors that history has never recounted.

Clergymen, people to whom religion is a reality, all to whom God is an actuality, should make the coming Lord's day a day for appeal for divine aid for a world facing cataclysm.

Humanity has failed to preserve humanity. Man's extremity is God's opportunity. In the words of the Psalmist: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, who made heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved; he that keepeth thee will not slumber."

Practical and Perplexing Questions

Answered by the Editors

BRIEF MENTION

E. E., Mich.: How can a child of God find out the mind of God? Shall he ask a sign?

You will find a direct answer to this question in Romans 12:1, 2, where we are taught to present, or yield, our bodies unto God as our reasonable service, who will then see to it that our lives are no longer conformed to this world, but transformed by the renewing of our mind, through His Word, and by His Holy Spirit. Thus will we be able to prove, that is, to know, or experience, what is the good, and acceptable and perfect will of God. In other words, God does not lead us by signs commonly, but by giving us clean hearts and right spirits out of which right decisions and actions come. Under these circumstances, it is simply an act of faith on our part to believe that God is leading us day by day, and that we are in His will.

J. M. R., Salina, Kan. We do not believe that Elijah committed wrong in slaying the prophets of Baal. While he received no direct command to do it, he was not divinely rebuked for it. It seems to us that he was God's executioner of judgment. They had a still more serious judgment awaiting them in the next life.

S. G., Des Moines, Ia. Please explain the imprecatory Psalms. How could David, a man after God's own heart, have such bitter feelings for his enemies?

They were not his enemies only, but God's enemies. Moreover he is speaking as a prophet of the end of this age with the Antichrist in mind, and the wicked and God-defying nations under his leadership. (See Prophecy and the Lord's Return, Gray, page 89 et seq.).

S. T. G., Cedral, Mexico. We fear we can hardly spare the space to fully answer your question concerning the root meaning and all derivatives of the Hebrew verb "replenish" in Genesis 1:28. The Hebrew dictionary gives more than a page and a half to the subject, with no richer result than that which is indicated in Young's Concordance from which you quote.

Truths That Jesus Taught
Matthew 5:3-12

The character of Kingdom citizens is the message of the Scripture lesson. They are first of all, "poor in spirit," not "poor spirited." They have no goodness of their own to make them presentable to God, and know no means of getting any. They are without spiritual resources of their own. Recognizing their spiritual need, they come to the King, saying from the heart,

"Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to Thy cross I cling."

"Theirs is the kingdom of heaven." This is the only and indispensable condition of entering the Kingdom. Blessed indeed are the "poor in spirit," for they qualify for entrance into the Kingdom.

Kingdom citizens "mourn," they mourn the sin that caused the spiritual poverty, they mourn the sin round about them, but they shall be comforted with the fact and consciousness of forgiveness, and with the promise of that time when sin shall be no more.

Kingdom citizens enter also into the blessing of the meek. Meekness is not weakness. On its active side it leads to obedience, on its passive side to endurance and suffering. "The meek shall inherit the earth;" they get it by giving it up.

Furthermore the Master taught that the citizens of the Kingdom would be righteous and merciful. Mercy without righteousness is moral indifference, mere sentiment; righteousness without mercy is cold and unattractive.

Purity of heart in verse 8 is suggestive of the heart that has one object before it, an undivided heart. It is that singleness of purpose which, next to yieldedness of the life to the divine will, is of all things most necessary. The pure in heart see God. They see Him here, as well as hereafter. Although the world is full of God, only a few see Him. Why? Because the heart is set on created things, rather than on the Creator, and seeks its satisfaction at the "broken cisterns which can hold no water."

Blessing is next pronounced upon the peacemakers. God is "the God of peace." "He made peace by the blood of the cross." The true peace-makers are everywhere recognized as the children of God. They have fellowship with Him in the work of peace-making.

The Master thus spoke a seven-fold blessing on the citizens of His Kingdom. Then he taught that such qualities as were emphasized in His words would not find favor on earth. The pathway of the true citizen of heaven will often be one of reproach, persecution and slander. Nevertheless, let not the life be embittered, but rather "rejoice and be exceeding glad." Steadfastness will win, and the future will bring the reward.

And now let us remember that the third chapter of John chronologically and logically precedes the fifth chapter of Matthew. Before any can enter into the blessings of the Kingdom life, they must be born from above. Adherence to the ethical teachings of Christ demands as a prerequisite an entrance into the heart of the resurrection life of Christ.

How to Use the Bible
Psalm 19:7-11; Matthew 4:1-4

According to the lesson Psalm, the Bible should be used for the purpose of conversion and for wisdom (v. 7), for the maintenance of joy and for enlightenment (v. 8), for cleansing (v. 9), for the sweetening of life (v. 10), and for warning against error and danger (v. 11). These are practical things, and their value as applied to life is obvious.

The New Testament verses show us the way in which our Lord used the Bible. It was to Him "the sword of the spirit," and it did its work as such. Humanly speaking our Lord conquered the adversary by the use of the Word.

We must use the Bible for defense against Satan. None is exempt from his attacks. "Your adversary the devil as a roaring lion walketh about seeking whom he may devour, whom resist steadfast in the faith." In order to stand fast against attack, we must read and make full use of the Bible. Store it away in the memory, at least "a verse a day to keep the tempter away." Then plan to read the Bible through. To be an intelligent Christian, you will need to do this. Three chapters a day for about fourteen months will suffice to take you through the Bible. Until you find a better plan, follow this one, and continue reading. You will make many rich discoveries, and your knowledge of God will continually increase. If read with faith and prayer, and with the purpose of putting into practice the truths of the Book as they are discovered, it will prove to be a most fruitful way of using your Bible.

Use it for the help of others. Read it to some who are "shut in" and perhaps cannot read it themselves. This would enrich with blessing many a call or visit to the sick.

Use it in Sunday-school and church. Get accustomed to handling it. Become familiar with it so that you can turn immediately to some desired text or passage. Get well acquainted with verses that are adapted to leading others to Christ, such verses as Isaiah 53:5,6, 1 Peter 2:24, John 1:12, 3:14-16, 5:24, 10:27, 28, Acts 4:12, Romans 9:9,10, 2 Timothy 1:12.

Know these verses by heart and cultivate the ability to turn to them in a moment.

Last but not least, get in touch with the courses of Bible study now available through correspondence. Write to The Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, Ill., for information concerning their correspondence courses. Plan to take at least one of the eight courses already provided. This may be for you what it has been for thousands of others, the beginning of a process whereby you may become "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

The Christmas Message and the Christmas Spirit

Luke 2:8-14; Matthew 2:9-11

The message of Christmas is the unchangeable message of Luke 2:11—"Unto you is born a Saviour."

First, it is a message of salvation. It concerns a Saviour, one who really saves. This Saviour is none other and none less than "Christ the Lord" who died for our sins, was raised again for our justification, and who lives in the power of an endless life, able to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Him.

In his recent book on The Christ Life and How to Live It, published by the Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Dr. W. H. Griffith Thomas has this beautiful paragraph which bears upon this point: "Our defilement will be cleansed by the salvation of the gospel; our weakness made strong by its grace; our roughness made smooth by its power; our anxiety assured by its reality; our doubt removed by its truth; our tempest calmed by its peace; our darkness illuminated by its light; our sorrow alleviated by its comfort; our misery relieved by its joy; our defenselessness surrounded by its protection; our coldness warmed by its love; and our emptiness filled by its fulness. The whole circumference of our need will be forever met and perfectly satisfied in the treasures of the gospel of the living, present, divine, glorious Christ. And, therefore, comes now to each one of us the simple message, the old familiar invitation, 'O taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that trusteth in Him.'"

Again the Christmas message is one of sonship. It speaks of the Son of God who became the Son of Man that we might lift the sons of men to become the sons of God. None but the saved are the sons of God. They become such by faith in Christ Jesus (Gal. 3:26). In response to that faith they are begotten of God and are His sons (John 1:11-13; 1 John 5:1). "And because ye are sons God hath sent forth the spirit of his son into your hearts crying, Abba Father" (Gal. 4:6-7). The spirit of sonship alone brings the proper conception of sonship. Other men may become comrades in a common cause, but the brotherhood of sons exists by virtue of one common life derived from one common source.

Furthermore, the Christmas message is one of service. The spirit of Christ is the spirit of service. "I am among you as one that serveth." This is always true, and it is the essence of the Christian message for those who are sons through saving grace. This is the biblical and logical order, salvation, sonship, service. It cannot be changed. It is God's way. The distribution of emphasis may be debatable, but the order is not. From the salvation of the individual there has come the most sacrificial service the world has ever seen. This needs to be remembered in a time when individual salvation is declared to be selfish and self-centered. Such a charge is false and absurd. Dr. Andrew Gillies has well said, "Any message which summons a man to concern himself about his own soul is now declared to be selfish and self-centered."

The emphasis today is on the need of altered conditions, and not on the need of changed men, and these conditions are to be changed not by the voluntary action of Christ-filled men, but by coercion, by the collective action of great bodies of men battling for their rights. The thing which the pulpit and religious press everywhere ought to be making clear, is that, without the regeneration of individuals, the regeneration of the social order is the Utopian dream of unbelievers and idealists.

The Christian spirit expresses itself through adherence to the Christian message of salvation, sonship, service.

How to Make Next Year Better Than This

Psalm 90:1-17

The lesson Psalm consists of a meditation and a prayer, the latter based on the former. The subject for meditation is the greatness of God and the frailty of man. The greatness is seen in verses 1-4. God is "from everlasting to everlasting." A thousand years in His sight are but as yesterday when it is past and as a watch in the night, just a few hours along.

How different it is with human beings! They are the creatures of a day. "In the morning they are like grass which groweth up, in the morning it flourisheth and groweth up, in the evening it is cut down and withereth."

This frail man needs this great God; needs to

At the Trial, Crucifixion and Resurrection of Jesus

John 18:15-27; 19:25-27; 20:1-10; 21:15-19

Golden Text:—"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3:16.

Since the lessons of the quarter center in the lives of Peter and John it will be well to include in the day's lesson the incidents in their lives from the trial of Jesus to His resurrection. This will enable us to use the Committee's alternative lesson, The Prince of Peace, for a Christmas lesson, next Sunday.

I. Peter Denies the Lord (18:15-18, 25-27).

1. Before the Servant-Maid (vv. 15-18). Peter's first blunder was to attempt to follow Jesus at this time. Christ had told him that he could not follow now (13:36). Presumptuous boldness oftentimes places one in an embarrassing position. In such cases compromise or cowardly denial usually follows. Wisdom as to our weaknesses should move one to avoid unnecessary trials. John seeing Peter standing at the door introduces him to the house of the high priest. Here under the taunt of a Jewish maid he openly denies his Lord. Even after he was in the palace, he was under no obligation to answer her. Even after we have ventured too far in temptation, silence will many times save us from shame and confusion.

2. Before the Servants and Officers (v. 25). Peter had not only ventured where it was not necessary, but was warming himself at the enemies' fire. Having quailed before the sarcastic impudence of a servant-maid he openly denied his relationship with the Lord when questioned by the officers and servants at whose fire he was warming himself. As he was sharing the enemies' hospitality he found it hard to own his Lord before them. To have a clear and independent testimony, one should be separate from sinners (2 Cor. 6:14-18).

3. Before the Kinsman of Malchus (vv. 26, 27). This man had seen Peter (see v. 10) with Jesus in Gethsemane when Peter in his rashness smote off the ear of Malchus. Hearing Peter's denial, this servant of the high priest put the question, "Did I not see thee in the garden with him?" When Peter uttered the third denial the cock crew, bringing to his attention the warning words of Jesus (Mark 14:72). This is an example of what a disciple of Jesus may do in the hour of great temptation. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

II. Jesus Commits His Mother to John (19:25-27). Though suffering the indescribable anguish of the cross He tenderly remembered His grief-stricken mother and charged John to care for her. Mary had other sons who should have cared for her, but they were unbelievers till after His resurrection. He knew that His mother would have better care at the hands of the beloved disciples than at the hands of her won children who did not believe in and love Jesus. Love to Jesus is stronger than human affection. "He that loveth father or mother or wife or children more than me is not worthy of me" (Matthew 10:37).

III. Peter and John at Jesus' Tomb (20:1-10).

When Mary came in breathless haste, announcing the fact of the empty tomb, Peter and John ran to investigate. When John came to the tomb he gazed into it, but when Peter came he went in. John with holy reverence hesitates to enter, but Peter through his impulsiveness enters at once. The difference does not lie in the fact that one loves more than the other, but in their different temperaments. One should not expect the same behavior from all. This investigation was convincing (v. 8). The removal of the stone from the sepulcher, and the arrangements of the grave-clothes convinced them that no enemy could have done it. Everything indicated the most tranquil behavior. He repeatedly told them that He was to arise from the dead. If they had believed His words they would not have needed this demonstration. This shows that good earnest people, though having an opportunity to know, are ignorant of many things.

IV. Peter's Restoration and Commission (21:15-19).

Peter had thrice denied the Lord, so before he again entered the service he must thrice confess his love for Jesus. In this commission to Peter is set forth the motive and nature of service which is incumbent upon all Christian ministers and teachers.

His Motive—Love to Christ. Love is the supreme qualification for service for Christ; it is the very spring from which all activity flows. It is not learning and eloquence, but love that makes a pastor. It is love to Christ, not mainly love to the sheep, that proves the shepherd.

(1) "Feed my lambs." The word for "feed" as well as "lambs" signifies that the work here is that of nurturing the babes in Christ. (2) "Feed my sheep." The word here means to feed, guide, correct, and lead the maturer class of Christians. It carries with it not only the responsibility of feeding, but correction and discipline. If this be attempted without love, failure will inevitably ensue. (3) "Feed my sheep." This relates to the care of the aged Christians. The word "feed" returns somewhat to the meaning in the first instance where He says "feed my lambs," so that the minister's responsibility to care for the aged is equivalent to that of the young. Peter was to express his devotion to Christ by the martyr's death (vv. 18, 19).

The Kingdom of the Prince of Peace

Isaiah 11

Golden Text: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." Matthew 1:21.

On this Christmas occasion let us take a forward look to the golden age which is ahead of us. It is the time of which the wise of all ages have spoken and their poets have sung. It will not be brought about through improved social conditions or even a league of nations, but by personal coming and reign of the Prince of Peace, the Lord Jesus Christ. It is the Kingdom which Daniel said the God of heaven would set up (Dan. 2:44, 45; 7:13, 14). We should take our thoughts from what man is trying to do and place them upon what God will do.

I. The Lineage of the King (v. 1).

He is of royal stock, the seed of David. His birth took place nearly 2,000 years ago. This Christmas season is a memorial of it. This prophecy looks across the age intervening between His coming in humiliation and His coming in power and glory to establish His Kingdom. Both comings are included in it. It is essential that the student have a grasp of the double perspective of prophecy—sometimes called the law of double reference.

II. The Gifts and Power of the King (v.2).

These result from the resting upon Him of the Spirit of the Lord. Because of this endowment He is equipped to administer the affairs of the Kingdom. A sevenfold characterization of the Spirit's gifts shows the completeness of the equipment.

1. The Spirit of the Lord. This title shows that He is to be qualified for His work by divine inspiration.

2. The Spirit of Wisdom. He is omniscient. Only a king of such wisdom can rule over the whole earth.

3. The Spirit of Understanding. This understanding coupled with wisdom gives discernment and discrimination.

4. The Spirit of Counsel. This means, doubtless, the gift of making decisions.

5. The Spirit of Might. This means the ability to execute His decisions. Decisions would be of little value without the ability to execute them. The men of our own time know well what is needed in many respects, but lack the ability to enforce their own judgments.

6. The Spirit of Knowledge. This refers to His profound insight into all truth. There is nothing too profound for Him; he cannot be deceived or taken unawares.

7. The Fear of the Lord. This refers to His reverent attitude toward God. All these gifts Jesus Christ had, and they shall come into manifestation when He comes to reign.

III. The Nature or Character of the King's Rule (vv.3-5).

1. A Quick Understanding in the Fear of the Lord. He has ability to quickly discern in the human heart godly fear.

2. An Unerring Judgment. He shall not judge after the appearance. No one will be able to deceive Him.

3. Ability to Render Decisions According to the Merits of the Case. His decisions are not based on hearsay, nor on plausibility, but on first-hand knowledge.

4. Impartial Judgment of the Poor. The time is coming when the poor shall get justice.

5. Reproof with Equity for the Meek. Jesus said that the meek shall inherit the earth. When the Prince of Peace shall reign the meek shall come into their own.

6. Shall Smite the Earth with the Rod of His Mouth. When He comes the earth will be utterly wicked. Apostasy will be manifest on every hand. His blessed reign will be ushered in by the judgment of the nations (Matt. 25:31-46). His girdle shall be righteousness and faithfulness. No discouragement can turn Him aside. His mediatory work embracing the prophetical, the priestly, and kingly, He will complete. Without His coming again and the establishment of His Kingdom, His work as Mediator remains incomplete.

IV. The Harmony and Peace of the Kingdom (vv. 6-9).

This harmony will prevail in the relationship of man and will be extended to the animal kingdom. War will be no more. This peace and harmony will prevail not only among men, but among animals. Each animal is coupled with its natural prey. The cow and the bear shall feed together; the lion shall eat straw, not flesh. The sucking child shall sport with the most deadly serpent. Paradise shall indeed be restored. This shall be made possible through the personal reign of the Messiah in Jerusalem (9). The knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

V. How the Kingdom Will Be Set Up (vv. 10-13).

1. The Elevation of the King (v. 10).

His elevation shall be a sign to the nations; to this sign they shall respond. We see here and there evidence of the workableness of this plan. Wherever Jesus Christ is exalted members of the various nations come together in unity. The only way to bring unity among the nations is to exalt Jesus Christ. He is the universal man. When the universal man is made king there will be national harmony and unity. The only brotherhood that will stand the test is the brotherhood in Christ. Through the incarnation He is gathering together all things to Himself (Eph. 1:10).

2. The Regathering of Israel (vv. 11, 12).

Out from the nations of the earth Israel shall be gathered. Israel and Judah shall unite under the one King in the city of Jerusalem.

3. Envy Shall Disappear from Ephraim and Judah (v. 13). When they shall see Him and be joined to Him the tribal antipathy shall disappear.

4. There Shall Be Physical Changes Which Shall Alter the Surface of the Earth (vv. 15, 16). Because of sin the whole creation has been disarranged. When redemption shall have been completed not only the spirits of men shall be in accord, but there shall be harmony in the animal world, and changes shall be brought about in the earth itself which shall make it fit for the conditions under which men shall then live.

Review—The Training of Peter and John
Selection for Reading—1 John 1:1-9

Golden Text: "Ye shall be my witnesses." Acts 1:8.

A good way to review the lessons of the six months course of study in the lives of Peter and John will be to arrange them under three heads—their call, their training, their service. The first half of the studies, the part we have now completed, have had to do with the calling and training of Peter and John. The last half, the lessons for the first quarter of 1920, will have to do with their service.

I. Their Call.

1. To Be Disciples (John 1:29-42), (Lesson 1).

Before Christ trains for service He calls to salvation. Salvation must be experienced before acceptable service can be rendered. Christ's urgent call to men and women everywhere is to come to Him for salvation. From those thus called He calls those whom He desires to render special service.

2. To Be Fishers of Men (Mark 1:14-20), (Lesson 2).

It would seem that after their conversion the disciples had gone back to their trade of fishing. Those who are called by Christ unto salvation should go back to their ordinary callings in life, if they be honorable, until He definitely calls them into special service.

II. Their Training.

1. Jesus in Peter's Home (Mark 1:29-39), (Lesson 3).

Christ's entry into Peter's home and the healing of his wife's mother showed to the disciples that He was a sympathizing Saviour, and possessed the power to heal the body as well as to save the soul. This was an important lesson for the disciples to learn in this early stage of their training. We need to keep this truth before us all the while, that Christ is not only willing, but able to save to the uttermost.

2. A Lesson in Trust (Matt. 14:22-33), (Lesson 4).

The pressing and abiding need of the disciples in their ministry was to trust the Lord. The degree of their trust would be the measure of their comprehension of Him as Lord. He revealed His divine power in a new and startling way by walking on the sea. They knew that such a feat was humanly impossible.

3. Peter's Great Confession (Matt. 16:13-24), (Lesson 6).

The Lord had been revealing Himself in various ways to the disciples. He now examines them to see what they know about Himself. Peter, as spokesman for the rest of the disciples, confessed both the messiahship and deity of Christ. This was a crucial point in their experience. After this they could never go back to their old ways of thinking and doing; life could never be the same again. It is so in the case of every one today. Every individual should have a personal knowledge of Jesus Christ, both as to His messiahship and His deity. Those who thus know Him can never go back to their old life.

4. Witnesses of Christ's Glory (Luke 9:28-36), (Lesson 7).

The disciples were offended at the revelation of the cross; their hopes were shattered because they could not see beyond the cross. The transfiguration convinced them not only of His essential glory, but gave them a foregleam of the triumph of Christ in His coming Kingdom (2 Pet. 1:16-18).

5. Jesus Corrects John's Narrowness (Luke 9:46-56), (Lesson 8).

The disciples needed to know that all who are really doing the Lord's work, casting out devils, and casting them out in Christ's name, should be received into fellowship and bidden Godspeed. Religious intolerance is displeasing to Jesus. It is impossible to be neutral in regard to Christ; those who are not for Him are against Him.

6. Jesus Teaches True Greatness (John 13:1-16), (Lesson 9).

They needed to know that the only way to have fellowship with Christ is to have our sins daily washed away in the blood of Jesus, and that the truly great are those who take the lowest place in service for others.

7. Peter and John Asleep in Gethsemane (Mark 14:32-42), (Lesson 10).

Though Christ was suffering the awful agony in the garden, His disciples were asleep. Because they did not watch and pray they failed in the hour of temptation.

8. At the Trial, Crucifixion, and Resurrection of Jesus (John 18:15-18; 19:25-27: 20:1-10; 21:15-19), (Lesson 11).

Peter's presumptuous self-confidence kept him from heeding the Lord's warning. He played the coward and even indulged in oaths. Note the steps in Peter's downfall: (1) Self-confidence (Mark 14:29). Jesus had just told them that all of them should be offended, but Peter was determined to show the Lord that He was mistaken in him. Beware of self-confidence! (2) Failure to watch (Mark 14:37). Self-confidence is always followed by unwatchfulness. One who thinks himself strong will go to sleep. (3) Failure to pray (Mark 14:38). It is the one who realizes his weakness who always seeks the communion of God in prayer. (4) Zeal without knowledge (Mark 14:47). Peter thought now to make up for his lack of watchfulness and prayer by outward acts. Many today are equally foolish. (5) Following afar off (Mark 14:54). Christ's rebuke of Peter for his ignorant zeal cut him to the quick. He is now ready to forsake Him, but is following afar off, no doubt wondering what will be the outcome. (6) Warming himself at the enemies' fire (Mark 14:54). (7) Open denial (Mark 14:66-72).

Peter Preaches at Pentecost

Acts 2

Golden Text: "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Acts 2:21.

I. The Day of Pentecost Fully Come (vv. 1-13).

1. Significance of the Day. Pentecost is from a Greek word meaning "fifty." It was the feast held fifty days after the wave-sheaf offering (Lev. 23:16). The wave sheaf typified the resurrection of Christ (1 Cor. 15:20-23). In the pentecostal feast two wave loaves were to be offered (Lev. 23:17), typifying the coming together of Jews and Gentiles into the one body.

2. The Gift—the Holy Spirit (vv. 2-4). On this day the Holy Spirit descended upon the disciples. This does not imply that the Spirit was not in the world before this, for throughout all the ages He has been in the world giving life and light to it. It means that from that time forward He would work on a new basis, having the crucified, risen and ascended Christ to present to the world. Indeed, He then formed the new body called the Church, through whom He could witness of Christ to the world. God hath ordained that the Church should be the agent to testify of His grace which is made available to the world through the cross. The Church which Jesus Christ announced He would build (Matt. 16:18) had its beginning at Pentecost. At Pentecost the Holy Spirit fused into one body of which Christ is the head, those that believed in Christ.

3. Upon Whom the Spirit Came (v. 1, cf. 1:13-15)—the twelve and others, both men and women to the number of one hundred and twenty, showing that the gift of the Holy Spirit was for all believers, not merely the apostles. It is the divine purpose that all saved people should be Christ's witnesses in this age. As soon as one's soul is touched with the Spirit's power, his impulse is to preach Christ to lost men. It is not merely a burst of enthusiasm, but a burning, persistent passion. The gift is absolutely essential to witnessing. It was for this "promise of the Father" that the disciples were to tarry at Jerusalem (Luke 24:49).

4. The Marks of the Spirit (vv. 2-4). These marks are external and internal.

(1) External. (a) The sound of a mighty wind (v. 2). This is suggestive of the mysterious, all-pervasive and powerful energy of the Spirit. (b) Tongues of flame (v. 3). Each of the one hundred and twenty was crowned with such a tongue. Tongues show the practical purpose of the Spirit's gift—witnessing; and the fire indicates His purifying energy burning up the dross, making effective witnessing for Christ. (c) Speaking in foreign tongues (v. 4). This was a temporary endowment for this special purpose. This miraculous gift characterized the apostolic age, but no authentic case has been reported in modern times.

(2) Internal. This is seen in the transformation wrought in the disciples. Though a little while ago they were trembling with fear, they now have great courage and self-possession. Peter, who shortly before this cowered before a Jewish maid, now with lion boldness stands before the chief rulers of the city, declaring that they had murdered their king, therefore were guilty before God.

5. The Effects (vv. 5-13). (1) The multitude were filled with amazement and wonder. The gift of the Spirit transforms common men into men of power and influence. Wherever you find men filled with the Spirit you will see the people flocking to hear, and filled with amazement. The disciples did not speak of themselves, but bore witness of the mighty works of God (v. 11). It is the Spirit's peculiar function to witness of Christ (John 16:13-15). (2) Some mocked and foolishly attempted to account for this remarkable occurrence. They accused the disciples of being intoxicated. The world today mocks men and women who testify in the power of the Holy Spirit, even accusing them of being insane. When Mr. Moody, in the energy of the Holy Spirit, was carrying on his great Sunday-school work in Chicago, they mocked, calling him "crazy Moody."

II. Peter's Sermon (vv. 14-47).

Peter's sermon is as wonderful as the gift of tongues—it demonstrates the presence and power of the Spirit, because he was but a Galilean fisherman without culture and literary training. His analysis is perfect. He begins with a brief defense and scriptural explanation of the phenomenon of tongues (vv. 14-21). This is followed by a threefold argument to prove the messiahship of Jesus (vv. 22-36). The conclusion is an appeal to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus.

1. The Introduction (vv. 14-21). (1) Defense of the disciples against the charge of being drunk (v. 15). This he does by citing Jewish customs, showing that they would not be drunk at such an early hour of the day. (2) A scriptural explanation. He shows that it was a partial fulfilment of that which Joel predicted (vv. 16-21, cf. Joel 2:28-32) would come to pass before the messianic judgment, namely, an outpouring of the Holy Spirit and the salvation of all who call upon the name of the Lord. The behavior of the disciples under the influence of the Spirit was a sign that the prophecy was being fulfilled. In spite of all this Scripture being in process of fulfilment, he assures them that all who call upon the name of the Lord would be saved from the impending judgment.

2. The Proposition or Theme (v. 36)—the messiahship of Jesus. Peter showed great mastery of rhetorical skill in keeping the formal statement of His messiahship in the background until after he had marshalled his proofs. The argument which follows proves that Jesus was the Lord upon whom they were to call in order to be saved.

3. The Argument (vv. 22-36). It was threefold: (1) From Christ's works (v. 22). He was approved of God among the Jews by His miracles, wonders and signs which God did by Him in in their midst, with which they were familiar. These were so outstanding in their significance that a reference to them was sufficient. (2) From His resurrection (vv. 23-32). The Old Testament Scriptures had foretold the death and resurrection of Christ (Ps. 16:8-10). They had great respect for David, who had uttered this prophecy, and whose tomb was then with them as an evidence that he had once lived. Further, they knew quite well that God had made a royal covenant with David. The disciples were living witnesses of Christ's resurrection, for they had seen and talked with Him and handled Him since His resurrection (v. 32). (3) From His ascension to be on the right hand of God (v. 32). The proof that He had ascended on high was the wonderful miracle of the Spirit's operation in their midst; for He had said that upon His ascension into heaven He would send forth the Spirit. The conclusion is that Jesus of Nazareth is both Lord and Christ, the one of whom Joel prophesied (v. 36), and that the Jews are guilty of an awful crime in crucifying Him.

4. The Effect of the Sermon (vv. 37-42). Many people were convicted of their sins, some 3,000 of whom repented and were baptized. The daily life of these believers was a proof of the Spirit's gift. The reality of the Spirit's gift is as strikingly shown by the daily walk as in public speech. The evidence that the coming of the Spirit was real is that (1) they continued steadfastly in the apostolic teaching (v. 42), they turned away from their blind guides and followed new ones. (2) They continued in fellowship with the apostles (v. 42). This fellowship was in the Spirit, around Christ as the head; the one body being illustrated by the one loaf. (3) They continued in prayer (v. 42). The proof of the indwelling Spirit is the life of prayer.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF CHURCH EFFICIENCY.

Rev. Otis G. Dale, D. D.

III. Worship:

In October we outlined a balanced program of church activity, exhibiting the primary functions of the church, worship, instruction, evangelism and service, in their proper relation. Whenever, in the history of the church, either locally, or of any section of the church general, this essential relationship has been lost, one-sided development and real perversion of purpose have resulted. When worship has received the chief emphasis, to the neglect of the other functions, it has run to formalism and ritualism; when instruction is considered the chief business of the church, as by some today, it tends to become simply ethical culture; when evangelism is given its undue emphasis, to the neglect of instruction and service, it becomes superficial and weak; and when service is overstressed and directed man-ward, it becomes merely social service, and the church becomes a philanthropic society, powerless to save men.

Worship: At one time the church was absorbed with its worship and neglected its work. The tendency of our day is in the opposite direction. The work is vital and must be done; that it is not better done may be due in large part to the neglect of the source of inspiration. "A church must plan first of all to bring men to God, and to fill them with a sense of God's presence and power, and if a church will do this, all else will be done by a "sacred sequence." What human spirits need above all things to equip for spiritual life, and service, is the intimate communion with God through the Spirit. This is obtained not by instruction, but through the experience of true worship.

True worship is only possible in the conscious presence of God. It is a matter more of the imagination and the emotions than of the intellect. It is the supreme thing in religious education, and yet its spirit is caught—it cannot be taught. Three elements are of prime importance: leadership, materials, program. As worship is the chief function of the church, so the highest and holiest function of the minister is his leadership of public worship. No other part of his ministry demands such diligent and careful preparation, both of head and heart. Too often, all before the sermon is lightly regarded as merely preliminary, or at best preparatory, to the message. It should be vastly more, it should bear its own message.

But the minister is not alone in his leadership of worship. Those in charge of the music share the responsibility, and upon them are the same demands for preparation of heart and life. It needs to be said very plainly, that only worshipers can lead worship, and that leadership at the organ or in the choir by others than sincere Christians is as far out of place as it would be in the pulpit. Moreover, in a vast number of churches the attitude of musicians and people toward the music is wholly wrong. The people want a "sacred" concert, and demand that the music shall entertain. The musicians strive to meet the demand, and usually the music, which should be a large factor in worship, really contributes nothing to it.

The cure of all this is to exalt the music work into a department and put it on the basis of service rendered for the purpose of worship. Secure a consecrated and competent director who has the vision. Make a canvas of the musical talent of the entire congregation of all ages. It will often be possible to organize three choruses —adult of mixed voices, intermediate of girls, junior of boys and girls. Use the adult chorus regularly in the morning, often supplemented by one of the others; use two and as often as possible, all three in the evening service. The director should be salaried to the extent of at least half, if not all, his time; if organist and director are one, all the better. The pastor should be in the closest co-operation. Where this plan has been worked out, it has transformed the life and work of the church. Where the musical department is not at once possible, at least a chorus choir should be attempted, and work begun with the children looking toward the ideal.

Whatever the leadership of worship, careful attention should be given to the materials, especially the music. Two common mistakes are made by organists and choirs; using music that is not essentially worshipful in character, and music which is unintelligible to all but a very small portion of the congregation. These wrongs have been so common and persistent that their real injury to the life of the church is not apparent until corrected. The evil results are attributed to some other cause and endured as incurable.

The purpose of all these remarks is to emphasize the tremendous importance of giving new attention to the matter of worship which is most vital to the spiritual life of the church.

A GREETING FROM JOHN WANAMAKER

October, 27, 1919.

Mr. Hugh Cork, Chicago, Ill.:

My dear Mr. Cork:

Thank you for the kindness of your letter of the 23rd. I am glad to know of your connection with the great Moody Bible Institute and wish you great success in the work.

I am also glad to stand alongside of you, by this letter, and extend New Year's greetings to the Sunday-school workers of America. I know of no other work that begins to compare in results with that attained by the Sunday-school.

This statement is carefully made, from a life-time experience in local, state, national and international Sunday-school work, having been Superintendent of one school, continuously, for nearly sixty-two years, and never missing a session when it is possible to be present.

The modern Sunday-school is a wonderful advance over the old-fashioned methods, and its teacher training, Graded Lessons, Organized Adult Bible Classes, etc., have placed it on a basis of efficiency which makes the study of the Bible a systematic, instead of a rambling, hit-or-miss affair.

There never was a time when the steadying influence of the church of God and its Sunday-schools was so badly needed, and every true and loyal soldier of the Cross must faithfully serve the cause, which may actually mean the preservation of our institutions as well as hereafter wearing the Crown of Life.

Very sincerely yours,

John Wanamaker

RELIGION, OLD AND NEW

An Open Letter to Certain Religious Leaders Who, Out of Their War Experiences, Have Given the Church Advice

In common with many other plain pastors I have read your articles and you have succeeded in leaving me gloriously bewildered. You disagree in your diagnosis—you do not agree on the remedy.

Some of you say the church has failed; others say it has not failed. One says Christianity is defeated; another says it has not been tried. If it has not been tried after two thousand years of preaching it when is it to be tried? One article said the church was on the edge of a precipice and would soon topple over. Another said the church is winning great victories and will soon conquer the world. One of you mentioned a wonderful Christian European civilization. Some one else said, "Give the gospel to 30,000,000 blacks (in Africa) and thus protect them from the evils of an advancing European civilization." Do you mean that we must give them Christianity to save them from Christianity?

The Grand Mix Up

You have told us the time has come to drop all our differences and become one church and one religion. You pointed with pride to the battlefield communion services when Protestant, Catholic Hebrew, Greek, Free Thinker and everything else partook together. Do I understand that you want me to join in fellowship with people who deny the absolute deity of Jesus Christ? I cannot do that. If you insist on doing it you must get along without me. My Lord means too much to me for me to ever join hands with those who would make Him the bastard son of a fallen woman.

You would mould our religious creed according to the trenches. You assured us the men would come back with a knowledge of real religion they never gained in the church. Most of them are back. I admire and appreciate what they did for Old Glory, but I have not seen many signs of a deep religious experience. Many of them seem to know more about swearing and smoking cigarettes than they ever did before. Oh, I know you have told us those things were not against their religion. (Excuse me if this sounds too blunt. Conditions are too serious for mere sentiment.) You told us that to them the great sins are cowardice, selfishness, but I cannot help doubting any brand of religion that allows a man to misuse the name of Jesus Christ.

You have not had much to say about sin and redemption. Are all sinners dead? Was this generation saved at birth?

Scoffing at Old-time Religion

One of you scoffed at the religion of our forefathers as expressed by Jonathan Edwards and his kind. There is a great chasm between their style and ours, but—there were giants in those days—men who knew God, men who had an experience of God in the soul. I remember that Professor James in Varieties of Religious Experience says something about Christians today living at second hand upon tradition. I wonder if it is true.

Many of you would change our hymns. Anything that refers to the joy of seeing the face of Jesus in heaven displeases you. Some would cut out all references to the blood of the cross as being too vulgar. Would it please you if our hymns were given up to praise of humanity? If we are to be saved by "service" of course here is no praise due God.

A Mongrel Church

I might "bunch" up your advice and try to make my church attractive to the men back home, but if I followed your advice I would not have a church. It would be a mongrel—part poolroom and part dairy lunch, with a little bit of open forum thrown in. It sounds to me very much like a church described in Revelation, and it is said to be "lukewarm." Conservative is the modern word, but lukewarm is its meaning.

You tell us men are tired of our old-time emphasis on Christian doctrine. We are too narrow, you say. We must broaden out and not insist that every man needs salvation through Jesus Christ. We must admit that all men are religious and allow them to express it as they wish. They are to worship as they please and what they please. I had a little bit of camp experience—not much, certainly not enough to give advice, so I have none. I noticed on Sunday mornings we had scores in our Young Men's Christian Association services while the Catholics had hundreds at mass. We were broad; they were narrow. The Romanist has been saying the same thing for centuries. Protestant theology is growing, and most men are waiting until it reaches maturity. You have accused us of being narrow because we preach but one plan of salvation. According to some of you, if you believe anything definite, you are narrow. If you believe there is some truth in everything but not much truth in anything, you are broad. We have broadened. We are so broad we are flat. Your logic puzzles me. If there is one God, are you narrow to ask men to approach him in the one way he has provided? Is a man narrow who loves only one wife? God loves and asks for love in return. Love is intolerant and will not brook rivals. I have read—though not in your articles—that God is a jealous God. Many of you quoted Matthew 22:39, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," without quoting the preceding injunction, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart."

A Young Minister's Longing

I have heard the sound of the clapping of ands since your articles appeared. Most folks iked them. That does not mean much to me. remember Jesus Christ did not fit into the opular theology of His day. Quite frequently ince then it has been astray.

Whose advice shall I follow? I cannot follow t all. I wish I knew the circumstances surounding the writing of your article. Was it orn in prayer? Was the motive the glory of od or—something else? Forgive me if these uestions are too personal. I am just a young reacher and I do not know much, but I am ungry to know. I do want a fruitful ministry.

I am afraid your articles have only made ne realize how vain is man's wisdom. It is a elief after the confusion of tongues, effusion f ideas and profusion of words to turn to the Vord of God. Brethren, thank you for your dvice, but Jesus Christ is the Head of the hurch and I am going to look to Him for leaderhip.—W. H. Houghton in The Watchman and xaminer.

ARE THEY NARROW OR BROAD?

By Hugh Cork

There seems to be an impression abroad that he Moody Bible Institute is "narrow" in its pirit, methods, interpretations and activities. fter nearly twenty-five years of interdenomiational church work and fellowship all over orth America, and for the past nine months on he staff of The Moody Bibe Institute, feel that I am qualified to answer the above uestion.

Instead of finding this Institute "narrow," I nd it in at least seven particulars, broader than ny school of religious training I know:

1. Its belief in the contents of the Book is o broad that it covers every word the Bible ontains, and gives each word the force due it ince it was spoken by "holy men of old who pake (it) as they were moved by the Holy host."

2. It is so broad as to the doctrines taught the Bible that it covers every one. There are hools I have known whose narrowness leaves ut some of God's most precious truths.

3. It is so broad it makes even the university ained student not only learn his English Bible d how to use it, but learn also how to organize d undertake all lines of outdoor, as well as door, practical Christian work.

4. It is so broad that its teaching along the es of the development of child life insists that e child must be developed four square in full oportions as indicated in Luke 2:52, while me schools spend most of their time and give ost of their emphasis to the social and intelctual side of the growing child.

5. It is so broad that its present enrolled udent-body of over seven thousand, as found the day, evening and correspondence classes, vers every state in the Union, and almost as many foreign countries, and comes from almost every evangelical denomination.

6. It is so broad in its denominational fellowship that its graduates are urged by their instructors, as well as the Institute management to find channels of expression for the power resulting from their training among the organized activities of their own denomination. It is not therefore surprising to find nearly all the graduates finding avenues of expression with their own denominational Boards, and those at work abroad at work in thirty-two countries.

7. Its influence is as broad as the world, for not only does its student body come from far away lands, but its financial friends and supporters span the earth, and because of its broadening influence the mails frequently bring unexpected gifts from those who never have seen and some of whom never will see this training spot till He comes.

There are other reasons, but these will suffice to prove my claim that this Institute is not "narrow" but really broader in most of its work than the average religious training school.

QUESTION BOX

Can an officer or teacher use tobacco without lessening his influence among boys and young men?

Ask any class of boys or young men and they will soon tell you. I asked a soldier on the parade ground if I could get closer to his comrades if I learned to smoke cigarettes as he did.

"No," said he.

"Why not?" asked I, "for ninety-five per cent of you fellows smoke."

"But," said he, "we expect something better of you 'Y' men."

How can we secure more and better officers and teachers?

Since the fields are white unto the harvest and your question indicates that real laborers are few, our book of instructions answers the question in Matthew 9:38, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." How often have you called a special meeting for prayer in order to find out whom He, the Lord of the harvest, wants to send into His harvest? We usually take the first one willing to go and then, if at all, pray the Lord of the harvest to bless his efforts. How can He do that for one He did not choose? If we sincerely inquire of Him, He will make it very plain as to whom He has chosen.

Is it well to magnify the responsibility to be assumed by a teacher or officer while they are considering the call?

Always approach the person to whom the Spirit is pointing with a personal interview setting forth the solemn responsibilities of the work in question, reminding him that he must take a day or two for prayerful consideration of the proposition. Do not minimize the work.

Show that it will take time, vision and vim. But remind him he must not accept nor refuse without feeling the Lord has made it plain as to what he should do. Workers who are thus set at work, doing it as unto the Lord, bring results.

HOW TO REACH ALL THE FOLKS FOR THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL

Suggested by W. D. Hudgins

FIND 'EM—This requires a religious census. Get the name, age, church affiliation, in Sunday-school or not, of everyone who ought to be in your Sunday-school.

FIX 'EM—In your organization giving each one a place. It is almost useless to bring them in unless you have a place for them. This means you must grade your school and have due regard for age and sex if you expect to keep them.

FETCH 'EM—There must be a follow-up canvass by teachers, class officers, pastors and others. Use every means possible to enlist every one in the Sunday-school.

FASTEN 'EM—Make your program every Sunday so attractive every one will want to be present. This requires trained officers and teachers and a suitable and well equipped building.

FOLLOW 'EM—Do the best you can and many will be absent. Go after them. Have definite plans for looking after absentees.

FINISH 'EM—Your work is not done until every one has found Jesus as Saviour and is properly related to the activities of your church and trained for effective service.

POOR BUSINESS

We found a church not long since that spends $2,000 for its church music and then asks its Sunday-school to raise the $300 needed for its expenses. The choir is supplied with the very latest and down-to-date music, while the Sunday-school is denied the privilege of many things necessary to its attractiveness and efficiency. The choir, a quartet composed of trained singers who sing classical music, has never sung any one into church membership, as far as is known, while the Sunday-school has been a constant feeder to the membership of the church, contributing at least from sixty-five to eighty per cent of its enrolled members.

From the foregoing the reader can draw his own conclusions. Since the spirit and practice of the above mentioned church is the rule and not the exception, it should make us think and plan to act. Such management is poor business. A business man would spend his money most freely where he receives his largest returns. Let us in church work be sane and sensible and give matters that are of eternal interest at least the same thoughtful consideration that we give to things of a temporal nature.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPICS

know Him as He is revealed in Christ; needs to find him as the writer of this Psalm did, according to the first verse. God is the dwelling place of His people. He is the real home of the soul. The apprehension and appropriation of this truth will greatly help towards making next year better than this. The greatness of God must grip us powerfully so that we shall stand unafraid amid the storm and stress. The words of Sidney Lanier in his Hymns of the Marshes may well be appropriated by us as we enter a new year.

"As the marsh hen secretly builds on the watery sod,
Behold, I will build me a nest on the greatness of God;
I will fly in the greatness of God as the marsh hen flies,
In the freedom that fills all the space twixt the earth and the skies.
By so many roots as the marsh grass sends in the sod,
I will heartily lay me ahold of the greatness of God."

Out of this meditation on the divine greatness and human need, there comes the prayer of verse 12—"Teach us to number our days that we may get us a heart of wisdom." A heart of wisdom is one which, conscious of its need, recognizes God's mighty provision in the gospel of His Son, and exults in it. This is the beginning of wisdom, for Christ is the wisdom of God (1 Cor. 1:30). "Wisdom crieth aloud in the street. * * * Turn you at my reproof, behold, I will pour out my spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you. * * * Whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely and shall be quiet from fear of evil" (Prov. 1:20, 23,33).

The wise heart is one that sees things as they are, not as they appear, a heart in which there is faith that looks not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal (2 Cor. 4:18). For such a heart the glitter and glare have lost their power of attraction, and the glory of the coming day has already dawned.

THE SITUATION IN KOREA

Reports from time to time trickle through the rigid Japanese censorship from Korea, and all of them are characterized by a unanimity of testimony concerning the measures of cruel repression resorted to by the military government to stifle the political aspirations of the Korean people. Authentic reports of eye-witnesses, and in numerous cases of victims themselves, tell one story of unbridled brutality and inhumanity to a defenceless helpless nation of 20,000,000 people. In return for the iron handed repressive measures visited upon them the Koreans have shown a heroism of passive resistance that is sublime, and a self-restraint that only the loftiest sentiments of patriotism could inspire. Korea's plea is worthy of a wider and more sympathetic hearing.

The passive revolution of March first, when thirty-three eminent Koreans affixed their signatures to a manifesto of national independence has swept the nation, enlisting Koreans of all classes, and measures of stern repression brought against them seem only to increase the intensity of their patriotism.

Instinctively the Japanese have felt that the strongest bulwark of Korea's national aspirations are to be found in the principles of Christianity, hence no class of the people has suffered like the Christians. We print the following from a correspondent of the Japan Chronicle as typical of numerous testimonies:

Party left Seoul about 9:30 a. m., April 16, by writer's auto and proceeded to Pal Tan by way of Suwon and Osan, a distance of slightly over forty-six miles in all. About two miles before reaching Pal Tan a large cloud of smoke was seen rising from behind a low hill beyond the market town. The car was stopped for lunch here and the writer strolled over to a near-by cluster of houses, and finding a farmer engaged him in conversation. After a little preliminary talk the conversation was as follows:

"What is that smoke?"

"That is the village that has been burned."

"When was it burned?"

"Yesterday."

"How was it burned?"

(Glancing around fearfully)—"By the soldiers."

"Why, did the people riot or shout for independence here?"

"No, but that was a Christian village."

"Has there been no cheering for independence here?"

"Some time ago there was in the market town on market day."

"But not in that village?"

"I do not think so. Why would they shout all by themselves without any gathering of people?"

"Have the soldiers been here to this village? Are you Christians?"

"Oh no, there are no Christians here."

"What is the name of that village?"

"Chay sum ni."

I then found another man in the same village, and the same questions brought the same answers, with the added information that there were few or no travelers and that it was difficult to know what was happening and the people had not been allowed to gather for market on the last market day.

After lunch we drove down to the town and left the car, as it was impossible to cross the stream at the entrance to the town. We walked past the police station, which is situated where the two main roads entering the town meet. A file of soldiers of the 78th regiment was standing outside the station. As we were passing a Japanese policeman came out and demanded where we were going and ordered us into the station. We entered as two Japanese soldiers got up and left. We all noticed their shoulder straps were red with three stars. This, I am told, is the badge of a first sergeant. The policeman who had called us into the station shouldered a carbine and followed the officers, and in a moment we saw them setting off on the road to Namyang with the policeman in the lead.

Mr. B. now presented his card to the officer and conversed with him in Japanese. I do not speak Japanese but know a little and followed a large part of the conversation. After chatting about the roads, bridges, mutual acquaintances in Seoul, etc., Mr. B. casually asked about the fire. The chief said that there had been a small fire, but that it was now out and did not amount to much. Asked about the disturbances, he said that there had been a little disturbance in that part.

After some more general information Mr. B. asked if rikishas could be procured in the town, as we would like to make a little excursion and see the fire. The chief asked "Which fire?" Mr. B. said the near-by one, but that we would probably like to ride a little for three or four miles in the country. The chief seemed a little surprised, but said "Yes" and sent a policeman with us to the rikisha stand, where we hired three rikishas, and set out. The village from which the smoke was rising was not more than a mile from the town, and after a short ride we left the rikishas and walked around the foot of the hill, on the sides of which was the village we had seen.

Our estimate and the statements of the Koreans agreed that the village had consisted of about forty houses. Only four or five were left standing. The rest were heaps of smoking ashes with flames still visible here and there. We saw groups of women, children and old men, sitting on the hill-side above the village watching the ruins, in dumb despair.

We walked the entire length of the village, and about half way up we saw the corpse of a young man, horribly burned, lying just outside of a building which we learned afterwards had been the church. This body was photographed as it lay. After going the length of the village, we came back along the hill-side and called to a man sitting in one of the groups mentioned. He came and I questioned him, but found that fear and shock had numbed him. He held his head in his hand and said that everything he had and all the results of years of hard work was gone. I condoled with him and asked when the fire had started. He said "About this time yesterday." (2 p. m.)

"How did it start?"

"Why, the soldiers."

"Were many people burned or hurt?"

"The soldiers killed all the Christians that were in the church."

"What were they in church on Tuesday afternoon for?"

"Why the soldiers came and ordered all the Christian men to gather in the church."

"Were there women in the church too?"

"No, the women were told not to come."

"Well, after the Christians gathered in the church what happened?"

"The soldiers fired on them and also used their knives (swords and bayonets); and then set fire to the church."

"How did the other houses catch fire?"

"Some caught from these, and others on the opposite side where the wind did not carry the flames, were set on fire by the soldiers."

"How is it that you are alive?

"I am not a Christian, and only the Christians were ordered to gather."

"Your house also was burnt?"

"Yes, there are the ruins."

"But there are a few houses left, how about those?"

"Those stood by themselves and after the fire had been set in several places if they did not catch they did not set the rest."

I then left this man and walked over to another group. Here there were several young women with babies at the breast, and old women and a boy about nineteen or twenty. These people were Christians and knew C. of the Methodist mission in whose district this church was. I asked the same or nearly the same questions and got the same answers as to time, method, number of killed, setting of the fire, etc. I asked the young man how he happened to be alive, and he replied that he had been away gathering wood on the hills and had returned at night to find all his friends and male relations dead and buried under the flaming ruins of the church. These people showed us where the church had stood, and we went down and found another corpse which was also photographed. The other bodies were still under the ruins of the church.

The people were absolutely destitute. Here and there a few household goods had been snatched from the flames, but none of the little groups seemed to have more than a small bowl of rice or grain for all the survivors. They said that most of them had lost their grain seed for the coming year, and everything, including domestic animals, upon which they are very dependent. We bid goodby to this group after taking their picture and walked through the village to one of the houses that was still standing. Here the owner was a very old man, who said that his house stood alone and had not caught and had not been set because he was not a Christian. His account of the event tallied in every way with that of the others. He did not know how many had been killed but put the number at about thirty. After taking a few more photos we returned to the rikishas and started back to town. The rikisha coolies offered to take us to another place about three miles further on, Suchone, where the same thing had happened a few days before. They volunteered that about fifteen places had been burnt, in most cases Christian centers. This tallied with other stories, and with reports brought up to Seoul to the missionaries in charge of the district. The soldiers had been brought in by auto about two weeks or ten days before and the first villages had been burnt at that time. The chief of police had reported that the trouble had been over some time, and we heard no accusations that there had been any violence on the part of the Koreans, in this city which we visited, though the police claim that violence had been committed in other places. We bade goodby to the police, and returned to Seoul by auto, as we had come, reaching Seoul about 5:30 p. m.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE RUPEE

Upon a situation which was already heavily burdened with new financial responsibilities the appreciation of the rupee has fallen, and will fall, upon missionary enterprise overseas with crushing effect. How many friends realize that owing to the exchange being against us we lose sixpence on every rupee? If our work necessitates the spending of twenty thousand pounds, and this money has to be sent from England, it means that we have to send twenty-seven thousand and five hundred pounds, for we drop seven ousand five hundred in the exchange, and this nount might just as well be thrown into the hames so far as gospel work and the Society e concerned.

Think what could be done with it! It would ıy thirty-seven new missionaries at two hundred ounds a year salary. It would build a new ospital or twenty dispensaries. If it were in-ested it would bring in over three hundred ounds a year for ever. Actually, it does nothing r us and is sheer, absolute, dead loss.

In order to carry out the responsibility which od's people lay upon us, for they give their oney for gospel missionary service, we are mpelled to go into debt, that is to say, in order discharge the trust which is committed to eir hands, the committee are obliged to go into ebt seven thousand five hundred pounds for ery twenty thousand pounds they send to dia. The seriousness of the position is clear d if the exchange does not alter the effect upon l missionary work in India will be disastrous.

The situation can only be remedied by in-eased industry in production and more prayer. e earnestly ask for direct, earnest, definite ayer on the matter of the currency, and once ain appeal to our friends to remember our rdens when they make their gifts.

THE IMMENSITY OF CHINA'S POPULATION

Figures are incomprehensible. One has to vell among this people to understand the im-ensity of the population. There are literally ople everywhere. "The ocean of humanity" no metaphor here. One cannot walk or sit stand anywhere without being entirely en-lfed by human beings within a few moments. ne only retreat from the inexhaustible tides of man life is the haven afforded by our own mes; and even there we are rarely free, for most always there are Chinese with us. I have often had the sensation of being in the midst a great ocean with the waves closing in around . And these limitless waves are without God d without hope, and often without the simple cessities of life.

At the base of China's awful misery is a wrong nception of God and worship. The unimagin-le poverty is due in the main to over-popula-n. Over-population is due to the abnormal sire for sons. This, in turn, is due to ancestral rship. So we see that the fundamental need this vast people is religion—a right conception God and the future life. Therefore China" st valuable helpers are the missionaries—the n and women who, by bringing to them the ht conception of God and the future, are rking at the deep underlying cause of all of ina's sorrow.—L. D. Patterson, Sungkiangs ina.

THE CALL OF THE WAITING WORLD

Two African chiefs came to James Chalmers and said: "We want Christian teachers. Will you send them?" Chalmers had no one to send and he said: "I have no one." These two chiefs came to him again. Chalmers himself happened to be at liberty, and he traveled over the intervening country and arrived on Sunday morning. To his surprise he saw the whole nation on their knees in perfect silence.

Chalmers said to one of the chiefs: "What are you doing?"

"Why," said the chief, "we are praying."

"But," Chalmers said, "you are not saying anything."

"White man," the chief answered, "we do not know what to say. For two years every Sunday morning we have met here, and for hours we have been on our knees, But we do not know what to say." What a picture of the waiting nations! "That thou doest, do quickly."—D. M. Panton, in Charlotte Chapel Record, Edinburgh.

We cannot serve God and mammon; but we can serve God with mammon.—Robert E. Speer.

The prospects are as bright as the promises of God.—Adoniram Judson.

No man can accomplish great things unless he is an optimist. But what does that mean? There are some folks who call themselves by that name—although there is usually another "ism" attached to their belief,—who have adopted mottoes something like the following: "Forget it," "There is no evil," "Look happy and you will be happy," "God's in His Heaven, all's right with the world!"

Sounds rather pretty, doesn't it? There is a certain amount of truth in these little "sunshine" opiates, but what are the facts?

In the first place, there are some things which it would be criminal to forget, because there is evil. Looking happy and smiling is a very fine antidote, but we can't all be "Happy Hooligans," and most of us don't want to be. We'd rather be real men, leaving the tomato can and the scrubby beard to those who enjoy that sort of thing.

There is sin in the world. There is tragedy. There is suffering. Hundreds of thousands of children are in mills and factories who should be at home or in school. There are slums, with their hell-holes. There are saloons, with drunkenness and brutality. Will the rosy-posey doctrine of the long-haired man and the short-haired woman doctrinaire smile these away?

"God's in His Heaven"—yes, but all's not "right with the world." It's going to be right, and that's why we can well afford to be optimists—but not the kind that expect to usher in the millennium by a smile.—Rev. Charles Stelzle.

PRAYER FOR CHRISTMAS EVE

O Lord, there sit apart in lonely places,
On this, the gladdest night of all the year,
Some stricken ones with sad and weary faces,
To whom the thought of Christmas brings no cheer.
For these, O Father, our petition hear,
And send the pitying Christ-child very near.

Lord, there be toiling ones, on whom life's burden
Presses so ceaselessly, they have no time
To snatch for a brief hour rest's blessed guerdon,
Or swell by one faint note our Christmas chime.
For these, O Father, our petition hear;
Send Thou the lowly Christ-child very near.

And there be tempted souls, this night, still waging
Such desperate warfare with all evil powers;
Anthems of peace, while the dread strife is raging,
Sound but as mockery through their midnight hours.
For these, O Father, our petition hear,
And send the tempted, sinless Christ-child very near.

O Lord, some sit by lonely hearthstones, sobbing,
Who feel this night all earthly love denied;
Who hear but dirges in the loud bell's throbbing,
For loved ones lost, who blessed last Christmastide.
For these, O Father, our petition hear,
And send the loving Christ-child very near.

For those who from disease of body languish,
For those who weep for children gone astray,
For those whose sore hearts hide in secret anguish
Some grief which shrinks from the clear light of day.
For all who suffer, our petition hear,
And send Thou Christ, the Comforter, most near.

PEACE ON EARTH

Happy the day when every war-horse shall be houghed, when every spear shall become a pruning-hook; and every sword shall be made to till the soil which once it stained with blood! This will be the last triumph of Christ. Before death itself shall be dead, death's great jackal, war, must die also; and then shall there be peace on earth, and the angel shall say, "I have gone up and down through the earth, and the earth sitteth still, and is at rest: I heard no tumult of war or noise or battle."—C. H. Spurgeon.

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS SERVICE
Luke 2:1-20

Introduction: Historical—contextual.

The birth of the Saviour was a fulfilment of prophecy (Micah 5:2). King Augustus did not plan, but God did.

I. The Audience—Shepherds (v. 8).

A wonderful privilege was theirs. While faithfully discharging their duty, the glory of God was made known to them. We should be prepared to see the glory of God anywhere—in the home, in the office, in the shop, on the farm.

II. The Preacher—the Angel of the Lord (v. 9).

The world was in darkness and could not comprehend the light (John 1:5). It was necessary for a messenger from heaven to direct their attention to Him who is the light of the world. Angels are God's ministers to those who are heirs of salvation (Heb. 1:14). May God give us eyes to behold the angels of the Lord about us!

III. The Message—Good Tidings (vv. 10-12).

1. A Saviour Born (v. 11). One of the most common experiences of life is the birth of babies. Among the many born that night there were none like this one, neither before nor since. It was "Wonderful," for it was God clothing Himself with humanity (Isa. 9:6, 7; cf. Luke 1:35).

2. Peace (v. 14). Peace with God (Rom. 5:1), peace of God (Phil. 4:7), peace of heart, peace with the world. How incongruous our times with that which is for everyone who accepts the Saviour!

3. Joy (v. 10). Why? Free from the guilt of sin. Free from the burdens of life.

4. Good-will to Men (v. 14). God is satisfied with the offering of the Saviour for sin. Through Christ His good-will is expressed to men.

IV. The Choir—The Heavenly Host (vv. 13,14).

Their message was "Glory to God in the highest!" These heavenly beings, with becoming reverence, cry: "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty!" (Rev. 4:8; cf. Isa. 6:3).

V. The Result (vv. 16:20).

1. The shepherds with haste came to see the Saviour (v. 16).

2. They made known abroad the message (v. 17).

3. They glorified and praised God (v. 20).

Conclusion: Application of the truth to the present day.—P. B. Fitzwater.

ALL THE YEAR THROUGH

Resting on His promise,
What have we to fear,
God is all-sufficient
For the coming year.
—F. R. Havergal.

A PROSPEROUS YEAR

Three essentials for enjoyment during the year—

1. "Cleave to the Lord." Acts 11:23.
2. "Love one another." 1 John 4:7.
3. "Always abounding in the work of the Lord," 1 Cor. 15:58.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

God make your year a happy one—
Not by shielding you from all sorrow and pain, but by strengthening you to bear it if it comes;
Not by making your path easy, but by making you sturdy enough to tread any path;
Not by taking hardship from you, but by taking all cowardship and fear from your heart as you meet hardship;
Not by granting you unbroken sunshine, but by keeping your face bright even in the shadows;
Not by making your life always pleasant, but by showing you where man and his cause need you most and by making you zealous to be there and to help;
Not by keeping you from battle, but by bringing you off every field more than conqueror through Christ, "who loves you."
God make your year a happy one!—Cleland B. McAfee.

The very fact that you have troubles is a proof of His faithfulness; for you have got one-half of His legacy, and you will have the other half. You know that Christ's last will and testament has two portions in it. "In the world ye shall have tribulation:" you have got that. The next clause is: "In me ye shall have peace." You have that too. "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." That is yours also.
—Charles Spurgeon.

1. The Purposes of God to His People. Ephesians 1 and 3.
2. The Position of God's People. "In Christ Jesus." Ephesians 2:6.
3. The Possessions of God's People. Riches of His grace. Ephesians 1:7.
4. The Practice of God's People. "Walk in love." Ephesians 5:2.
5. The Panoply of God's People. "Put on the whole armor of God." Ephesians 6:11.
6. The Prayer of God's People. "Praying always with all prayer and supplication for all the saints." Ephesians 6:18.
7. The Peace of God's People. "For He is our peace." Ephesians 2:14.

THREE FATAL MISTAKES IN PSALM 10

Or, Spiritual Heart Disease

1. "He hath said in his heart, I shall not be moved" (v. 6)—i. e., Sin is not seen.

2. "He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten" (v. 11)—i. e., Sin is not remembered.

3. "He hath said in his heart, Thou wilt not require it" (v. 13)—i. e., Sin is not punished.

—B. B. Sutcliffe.

A SERMON TO THE SEATS

As announced for tonight, I am to speak to the seats. This has been on my mind for some time. We have special days set apart for old people, children, mothers, college, missionary, etc., but none for the seats. I shall divide my talk into two parts: Things Praiseworthy, and Things Blameworthy.

1. Praiseworthy Things. (Some things which can not be said of all men). You are always present. No matter what the weather is. It is never too cold, warm, wet, or dry for you. No matter what is going on in the other churches, you are always here. I can depend on you. You do not attend the theater, do not dance or play cards, do not go to Sunday baseball or Sunday picnics, nor even go visiting. You show by your presence that you are always on the side of righteousness and truth. You never miss preaching, prayer-meeting, Sunday-school, K. L. C. E., or the missionary meetings. I notice that there are two kinds of seats: full and empty. I appreciate your presence, but would rather there were less empty ones and more full ones. I must praise you empty ones for this one thing: you are always here and right up here in front. I wish the full ones would crowd you out so there would be none in the service.

Your deportment is good. You never disturb the service by coming in late. You are always on time, especially you empty ones. We did think of giving you a coat of oil last spring. Perhaps if you had a new dress you would come late so that all could see it. You never look around when any one comes in late. You never whisper or read books or papers, to let the preacher know that ouy are not interested in what he has to say. You never go to sleep during the sermon. You never find fault with the preacher nor his sermon.

You are a peaceable set. You never quarrel among yourselves. You never get mad and stay away from church because you don't like each other. You are quiet, loving seats. I commend you for it. You are established, firm, stable. You are not like the moon, which changes every quarter. You are not chasing after something new all the time. You are loyal. I can depend on you. Nevertheless, I have some things against you.

2. Blameworthy Things.—The service is of no help to you. My efforts are all a failure. You are no better than a year ago. You are hard, unsympathetic. You have no feeling. You are not moved by anything I say. You do not seem to appreciate my efforts nor the sacrifice I make for you. You pay no attention to what I say. It only goes to the surface. You are no help to me in my work. You never invite any one to church, visit the sick, bring me flowers, nor speak to souls. You are so hard, so indifferent, so inactive. People ought to sit on you.

You never pray. You are always at prayer-meeting but never take part. Neither do you pay. God loves a cheerful giver, but you never give a cent. You would let the preacher starve. A preacher complained that his people did not support him except with wormy apples. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

You seats are not sociable. You never speak to each other, nor to strangers. You never visit each other nor the newcomers. You are no inspiration to the preacher. You are so cold and stiff and formal that a preacher may study and be filled with the Spirit and preach with power, but you would cool off the furnace of the three Hebrews. The preacher can dust you and clean you up, but you do not appreciate it. You never say: "Thank you."

You empty seats do not help your pastor fill you. Rather you discourage those who do come. I heard some say they came to church but saw so many empty seats that they went out and would not come back. Your emptiness says: "Stay away." When people see so many of you empty seats here, they lose confidence in your preacher and some get the idea that there should be a change.

Your message to the world is not good. You empty seats speak louder than unbelief that religion is a failure. The world, Satan and all unbelievers, know you are here and they rejoice. I wish I might stop your mouths and fill every seat and thus cause the church of Jesus Christ to triumph.

Now, in conclusion, my dear seats, let me say to those of you who are always here but empty: I hope you will see your responsibility and try not only to be present but to be filled. To those who are always present and filled: Don't get discouraged, but be faithful, and some day those who sit in you will sit in the seats of the Church Triumphant, where there will be no empty seats.—J. E. Stauffacher, in The Evangelical.

The secret of self-knowledge is to be searched by God.

The secret of purity is to be cleansed by God.

The secret of continuance is to be kept by God.

The secret of a full life is to walk with God.

The secret of an overflowing life is to be filled with the Spirit of God.—G. H. C. McGregor.

An interesting Bible study may be found in noting where God has used the foolish and weak things to accomplish great ends. Moses led the children of Israel out of Egypt with no other visible power than a dry stick; Gideon routed an army with the rattle of broken pitchers and candles and Joshua destroyed a city with rams horns. The same is true in regard to the men whom God has used and it may be truly said that the Lord has always a great place for a man who is willing to do small things.

The Evangelistic Field

SUGGESTIONS TO OUR CORRESPONDENTS

Evangelists and other Christian workers reporting items or contributing any matter for this department will please arrange to have copy reach the magazine not later than the 6th of the month preceding date of issue.

"The Evangelistic Field" department is intended for news in concise reports of revival meetings, soul-winning campaigns, and a record of evangelistic work in general. We do not invite statements eulogizing the leaders or participants in this line of work, nor can we promise to print them.—Editors.

J. H. Leonard is at Fenwick, Ont., where the Methodist and Presbyterian churches have united for a revival meeting.

J. Roy Weakland writes: "My campaign at Carthage, N. Y., was a success in every way: I am now at Black River, N. Y.

Dr. H. P. Dunlop reports this is the busiest season of their years of evangelism with dates from Houston, Tex. to New York. They solicit the prayers of God's people.

There were some hopeful conversions in the meetings of Evangelist Fred Geisenheiner, at the Jordan Presbyterian Church, near Chatfield, Minn., held about the first of October.

James A. Armstrong just closed a three months tent campaign at Worth, Eolia and Cyrene, Mo. The meetings were successful, large crowds attended and many souls were converted.

Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Bray closed a meeting in the Onward Presbyterian Church of Chicago, resulting in 46 conversions. Mr. and Mrs. Bray begin a meeting in Summer Hill, Ill., December 21.

Evangelist G. Raymond Powell closed a successful meeting at Hartford City, Ind., resulting in 85 conversions and 13 accessions to the church. From there Mr. Powell went to Jennings, La.

The Lingren-Erwin Party report as follows: "The work in Estherville, Ia., is opening up nicely. This makes our twenty-second meeting in northwest Iowa within the past three years. With but two exceptions the series has been consecutive."

Melvyn M. Lawton writes: "Permit me to report a gracious meeting in Onancock, Va. I go next to Chestertown, Md., to assist in a union campaign, the date, November 9 to 30. I will be engaged at Snow Hill, Md., in January."

Rev. A. A. Haggard writes: "We have just closed a wonderful revival in New Brookland, S. C., resulting in 665 conversions. The meeting lasted seven weeks. We have a large tent and are holding union meetings. Just began a promising meeting in Columbia, S. C."

The Toronto Jewish Mission reports as follows: "The work has been carried forward without a break throughout the summer, and the Lord has granted blessing upon the efforts put forth. The Bible women, Misses Kreick and Lauber visited many Jewish homes with the message of the gospel."

Dr. J. C. Massee has received a call from the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, N. Y., to succeed Dr. George Caleb Moor in the pastorate. Dr. Massee is well known to our readers, having been a prominent speaker in the conferences held at The Moody Bible Institute, and also in the conferences on fundamentals.

The Vom Bruch Party are in a two months effort under the auspices of the Los Angeles County Christian Endeavor Union, holding eight meetings in the county, one week at each place. They just closed at Santa Monica, Calif., with 41 people at the altar the closing service and are now at Redonda Beach.

Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D., formerly pastor of Spurgeon's Tabernacle, London, England, has agreed to help his old friend, Rev. Dr. David J. Burrell of the Marble Collegiate Reformed Church, New York, for five months, the object being to carry on evangelistic work in the old conservative Dutch church.

J. Gordon McPherson reports as follows: "I am here in the midst of a glorious revival with New Bethel Baptist Church. The Lord is honoring His Word, backsliders are being reclaimed, sinners converted and saints edified. We shall go from here to Tyler, Tex. I ask the saints everywhere to pray for us."

Mr. and Mrs. John Imrie, singing evangelists, closed a meeting at Dighton, Kan. with Evangelist W. A. Burch. From there they went to Ingalls, Kan., where they are conducting a meeting in a union church. They will join Evangelist Griffin after the Ingalls meeting and will be busy until the Christmas holidays.

S. E. Lewis writes: "God wonderfully blessed our work at Hinsdale, N. Y. Thirty-six came forward at the first invitation and many others followed as the meeting continued. The pastor baptized 26 the day the campaign closed. We go from here to Gasport, N. Y., for our next meeting. I am assisted by Mr. E. G. Angevine."

H. C. Steens is assisting in an evangelistic meeting at Petaluma, Calif., and writes as follows: "Two weeks of a three weeks evangelistic campaign have gone. About fifty conversions. Interest is growing and we believe that conviction is going to sweep this whole coast for good and for God. Three in party, Evangelist Jerry Jeter, Mrs. Jeter and myself."

Evangelist Charles F. Raach, assisted by Professor and Mrs. G. E. Vinaroff, closed a four weeks evangelistic campaign at Green Mountain, Ia. There were 45 conversions and 60 accessions to the church. Besides the souls won the community was greatly uplifted and the Christian people were made to realize their obligations to Christ and the church.

The Night Church, 22 Quincy St., Chicago, reports as follows:

"We are maintaining our testimony now in the very heart of the Loop, in front of the Federal Building. A finer site for open-air evangelism scarcely exists in the world —beside the human river, where from 2,000 to 5,000 people pass every hour."

Evangelist W. S. Colegrove and party conducted a three weeks meeting in the Congregational church at Saranac, Mich., of which W. S. Ross, '15, is pastor. A newspaper clipping states, "Never has our city been so stirred by the gospel of Christ and never has such interest been shown in religious things as was witnessed during this series of meetings." Evangelist Colegrove is now at Pottersville, Mich.

S. D. Goodale writes: "We closed a splendid meeting in Osborn, Mo., last Sunday night. Among the converts were some of the most prominent men of the place. Everything seemed to take on new life. We began at Fairmount, Neb., last night. There seems to be a great need of a revival in this place. We had a very small attendance to begin with, yet there is a membership of about 350."

The Franklin Evangelistic Party, consisting of Rev. T. D. Franklin, evangelist, W. E. Moon, director and soloist and Elsie R. Franklin, pianist, closed a most successful and blessed campaign at Bloomfield, Ia., in which many unsaved were turned to God, His children greatly blessed, and twenty-four homes establishing the family altar. From there the party went to Ollie, Ia., where they began on Oct. 28. The permanent address of this party changes from Pella, Ia., to 909 12th St., Eldora, Ia.

P. H. McCarthy, Superintendent of the Morning Star Mission, Joliet, Ill., says: "We have just celebrated our tenth anniversary of the founding of the Mission. The report for the past year shows four hundred forty-seven conversions. Poverty and misery produces crime, and I find it is easy to reach the soul through the stomach. It matters not what a man loses if he saves his soul, but if he loses his soul, it matters not what he saves, so we reach hundreds through the fourteenth chapter of St. Luke; and if you have empty seats, try a little bread in your sermons. It fills our mission to overflowing."

The Wells-Loes Party conducted one of the most successful meetings of their experience at Burlington, N. Dak., last month. The services were held in the Presbyterian Church, the only church in the town. The meetings brought four Institute graduates together: Rev. Fred W. Christ, '11; pastor; Rev. W. M. Weibel, '11, S. S. missionary, Minot Presbytery; Harry Dixon Loes, '15, director of music; Miss Birdie C. Loes, '19, pianist. The evangelist was Paris E. Wells, D. D., of Fargo.

In past years Burlington had had a hard name, "bootlegging" and other vices having full sway in the town. Being a mining community, the transient population was infested with undesirable elements. But the leading banker testified on the closing night that Burlington was a new town as a result of the meeting, and that it was worth more to them than the acquisition of the state mill, which is being sought by the cities.

Another convert, who had been one of the leaders in wickedness, confessed that he had maintained a "blind pig" with a standing order of 20 barrels of beer a week from a St. Paul brewery. With a smile of joy on his face he added "But, thanks to Jesus Christ and Dr. Wells, now I have an order in for Bibles!" Other testimonies of striking character were given, showing that the old gospel has the same old power.

Mr. Christ is doing a splendid work in this neglected part of the Northwest. Out of the 115 professions, he received over 90 into the church. A promising Young People's Society and a strong Men's Club were organized to conserve the results of the meetings. From Burlington the evangelists went to Walhalla, N. D.

Book Notices

Any book favorably mentioned below may be secured at prices named from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 822 North La Salle Street, Chicago.

Unfoldings in Romans, by Robert Thomson.

This is a thought-stimulating little book which will strengthen the faith of those who meditate upon God's righteousness which faith makes real.

136 pages. 7½ x 5 inches. Morgan & Scott, 12 Paternoster Buildings, London, E. C. 3s., net. P. B. F.

"At Hand," by Walter Scott.

This is a wholesome book on prophecy. It is well suited to the busy man who wishes the teachings of the blessed hope set forth in a succint form with the Scripture references cited.

213 pages. 7½ x 5 inches. Morgan & Scott, 12 Paternoster Buildings, London, E. C. 2s. 6d., net. P. B. F.

Select Notes on the International Sunday School Lessons, by Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D. D., and Amos R. Wells, Litt. D., LL. D.

This is the forty-sixth annual volume of this well known lesson help. This volume is every whit up to the standard of the former ones. While one cannot endorse everything said in the book, especially when dealing with dispensational matters, it is perhaps the best volume published on the lessons.

384 pages. 9 x 6 inches. W. A. Wilde Company, Boston, Mass. $1.50, net. P. B. F.

The Gist of the Lessons for 1920, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, D. D.

This is the twenty-first of the small vest-pocket booklets containing Dr. Torrey's notes on the International Sunday-school Lessons. It is surprising what a mass of helpful comments there is in this small publication.

The Modern Conflict Over the Bible, by Rev. G. W. McPherson, D. D., second edition, revised and enlarged.

We have not yet been able to read this edition, but four new chapters have been added and the personal element of the earlier edition eliminated for the most part. The author believes it to be a stronger presentation of the truth in many ways, and we commend it for its plainness of speech and its courage.

213 pages. 7½ x 5 inches. Rev. G. W. McPherson, D. D., 34 St. Andrew's Place, Yonkers, N. Y. $1.25, net. J. M. G.

The Hope of Glory, by Rev. Edwin Charles Dargan, D. D.

The twelve sermons in this volume are easily understood by the uneducated, and will hold the attention of the most scholarly and exacting. The author is a great teacher of homiletics and here offers an impressive clinic in that branch of the preacher's work. The subjects are varied, ranging all the way from "Children at Play" to "Sovereignty in Salvation." The book is a good one for the young preacher and also for the family center table.

The Foundations of Mormonism, by William Earl Larue, B. D.

Here is a book different from others on the same subject. It appeals to the mind of those who desire first-hand knowledge. Mormonism, the "Islam of America," is an organization which imperils the religious and political liberty of America. The author has done well in bringing to the attention of the American public, at this time, the political ambitions of these people. May it cause the lovers of the Lord and America to awaken!

The Unthrown Stone, by Rev. Alexander Marlowe, D. D.

This is a poem in blank verse, something after the style of Pollock's "Course of Time" or Young's "Night Thoughts." In meter the reader is carried from Gethsemane and Golgotha to the battle of Armageddon, the standpoint of the writer being premillennial, as the unique title of the poem would suggest. The loyalty of the author to evangelical truth cannot be questioned. Although the book was written apparently just before the close of the recent war, it anticipates the issue and fairly presents what is likely to take place in the years to come.

The Christian Life and How to Live It, by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D.

Whenever one, who is acquainted with the writings of Dr. Thomas, picks up a book of his, he feels instinctively, "Here is a writer who speaks with authority." Dr. Thomas is both scholarly and thoroughly biblical, a combination which is highly desirable. He knows his Bible as few men of his generation know it, and he also has the rare gift of knowing how to treat profound truths with simplicity. Some of the chapter titles of the present book are, "What is Christianity?" "What We Believe," "What Is a Christian?" "The Fulness of God," and "Peace, Perfect Peace." None of these are novel, but the originality of the gifted author is seen in the treatment of them. This little book satisfies both soul and mind. The simplicity and sufficiency of the gospel for daily living are graciously unfolded from page to page. There is not a dull paragraph for the soul that seeks the best that God has to give for the present life.

The Canons and Decrees of the Council of Trent, by the Rev. J. Waterworth.

This book is a translation from the Latin of the most important of the general councils of the Roman Catholic Church. This council convened in Trent, Austria, in 1545 and continued, with intermissions, until 1563. The book is an official record of the canons and decrees which are authoritative for the Roman Catholic Church of today. As such it is of general interest, but valuable in particular to Christian thinkers and educators. The purpose of the original doubtless was to counteract the growing influence of the Reformation. We are informed that the council was called in troubled times and under many embarrassments; when the Christian community was afflicted by evils which needed to be remedied, being torn by inward dissensions, schisms, and heresies; while from without the church was being attacked by infidels, in particular the impious Turk. War, strife and perplexity marked those times, which in some aspects were not unlike our own. As a reference work this book fills an important place, while for students of dogma and theology it is valuable indeed.

Jesus and the Problem of Human Life, by Dwight Goddard.

The claim made by the author is that when man begins to consider the place he occupies in the universe he is confronted by emphatic contradictions. The problem of human life is to explain these contradictions. Such a theoretical conception of the problem of human life demands a rather abstract and metaphysical treatment, which the author proceeds to give in his three possible solutions; namely, the scientific or naturalistic, the idealistic, and the spiritualistic. Each explanation of the problem is clearly stated and treated, but one can not resist asking whether the problem of human life is such as the author conceives? Certainly the problem which most of us have to face is much more fundamental and practical. Many also will not be able to agree with the author when he states that Jesus, in His solution of the problem of human life, brushed aside the Jewish conceptions of God and of His Kingdom as contained in the Old Testament. Concerning this Kingdom the author says, "The Kingdom of God is the spiritual realm, and is not any state of society upon earth, however ideal it may be." Such a definition of the Kingdom of God is much too narrow and too ethereal, falling short of the full teaching of the Scriptures. But one is loath to criticize a book in which there is so much that is excellent.

Tarbell's Teachers' Guide to the International Sunday School Lessons for 1920, by Martha Tarbell, Ph. D.

It is to be regretted that this well known and popular treatise should be marred by the author's introduction of modern, liberal views of the Bible. A few examples only can be given.

Page 27—"It is an interesting supposition that the book (of Ruth) was written in the time of Ezra as a protest against his rigorous measures demanding the divorce of all foreign wives." The introduction of this supposition indicates Miss Tarbell's loose views of the inspiration of the Bible. The implication is that Ezra carried his reforms too far. It is reasonable to suppose that if such had been the case, the correction would have been made without leaving it to the assumption that another book was written setting forth an instance which would give balance to the first.

Page 143—"The Bible begins and ends with an allegory." This statement betrays the fact that the author believes that the Creation story is a parable or a fable.

Page 147—"It is wasted learning to interpret the message of the Book of Revelation in any specific way. But it has a meaning for us, if we can take it as it was written, in a time of great stress, to uphold God's people and keep them steadfast in their faith." This view would make the Revelation a weather vane, which adjusts its position to the direction of the wind. Instead of being a book to steady one's life while being tossed to and fro on the sea of life, it is merely a means of comfort while being tossed.

It is to be deplored that the author continues to makes these blunders. If the aim in this publication is to provide a guide to teachers of evangelical faith, then these features should be omitted.

DR. GRAY'S PACIFIC COAST CONFERENCES

A recent letter from Dr. Gray stated that his itinerary in Oregon (noted under "Recent Faculty Engagements") was going well, and that it was being conducted by the Rev. W. P. White, D. D., of the United Presbyterian Church, of Albany, Ore., also that he was constantly meeting former students and renewing old associations. "I regret," he added, "that I must cancel the engagement with Dr. Briegleb, '04, and the ministers of Los Angeles because of the pressure of work at Chicago."

His closing conference, held at Berkeley, Calif., November 9-14, was arranged by the Northern California Alumni Association, of which the Rev. J. A. Sutherland, '10, San Jose, is president, and Mr. C. H. Coultes, '99, Oakland, is secretary.

A letter to Northern California clergymen announcing the conference was signed by Dr. C. H. Denman, Rev. Lapsley A. McAfee, First Presbyterian Church; and Dr. Warren C. Sherman, of Berkeley; Dr. R. S. Donaldson, Executive Secretary Presbyterian Church Extension Board, Mr. John Hunter Stearns, Director National Bible Institute, and Miss May N. Blodgett, '99, of San Francisco; Dr. Francis J. Van Horn, First Congregational Church, Dr. J. A. Batchelor, District Superintendent, South M. E. Church, and Dr. Herbert Dyke, Christian and Missionary Alliance, of Oakland; and Rev. J. A. Sutherland, Grace Baptist Church, of San Jose.

THE MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR DR. TOWNER

A large audience gathered in the Auditorium on the evening of October 20 for the memorial service in honor of Dr. D. B. Towner.

Before introducing the speakers, Dr. Gray, who presided, read a letter from Mr. George C. Stebbins, and a telegram from Mr. Homer Rodeheaver. The first said in part:

"Dr. Towner's loss will be keenly felt by the forces of evangelism in which he has for a generation been one of the most prominent factors in the ministry of song, both as leader and singer, composer and teacher, and it will be impossible to fill the place he now leaves vacant.

"He was the youngest, by some years, of the leaders who were very much associated with Mr. Moody in his evangelistic work and it would seem that by reason of his strong constitution and vigorous health he might long outlive any of them. His death, therefore, at a comparative early age is a shock that is well-nigh staggering to his friends. Instead of my being the last one among the singers, most intimately associated with Mr. Moody, to survive, I had thought Dr. Towner would certainly be."

Mr. Rodeheaver said, "His death is a great loss to all of us who appreciate the gospel in song. No one can take his place. His memory will be an inspiration to all of us to try to measure up to the splendid standards he has set."

The speakers were Mr. Charles H. Gabriel, Mr. Peter P. Bilhorn, Prof. Warren C. Coffin, Mr. E. S. Lorenz and Dr. Gray. Mr. E. O. Excell was prevented from attending by an engagement in another city.

Mr. Gabriel, who added a touching tribute in song to his address, had maintained a cordial friendship by correspondence with Dr. Towner for more than forty years. He said: "As we sing his songs, we feel his presence although we cannot see his face. We listen and from the great ocean of silence, borne on the flood-tide of memory, come the tones of his marvelously sweet voice. He was a blessing to us as he will be a benediction to the ages yet unborn, for I believe that as long as the church doors swing open to worship, some of his songs will be sung, and while earth has lost one of its sweetest singers, the music of heaven is enriched by a voice tuned to service to the praise of the God whom he served."

Mr. Bilhorn also spoke and sang. He related an interesting experience of his first meeting with Dr. Towner at Northfield, when the latter tested him as a singer at Mr. Moody's request. "There," he said, "was where I got my first voice lesson. I learned to love and esteem Dr. Towner as one of the finest Christian gentlemen. I am sure his songs will roll on as the ages last."

Prof. Coffin said: "I have been interested very much in looking up a long list of gospel hymns written and sung by Dr. Towner and used very largely in the work of the Institute and the Moody Church. His hymns have a touch of the Christ life in them and his strong personality is very noticeable in them all. I never heard him sing one of his songs without getting some deep impression from it."

Mr. Lorenz, who was long associated in a business way with Dr. Towner, sketched graphically the development of the modern gospel song movement, which began with Moody and Sankey, in which he said, "Dr. Towner played no insignificant part. In England and America he sang with Mr. Moody, he sang with Major Whittle, and a host of others, and everywhere he went he had his devoted wife.

"Dr. Towner's father was a convention song leader and his grandfather a pioneer Methodist preacher who was known as 'the singing parson.' Dr. Towner's life was affected by the fact that that dead grandfather of his was a singing parson.

"The influence of Moody and the impulses of evangelism made D. B. Towner a nation-wide, yea, a world-wide power for the redemption of men.

"Students taught by Dr. Towner have gone out from this place to the uttermost parts of the earth. The other great singers that stood out in the public eye did not, after all, have as wide a sweep of influence as Dr. Towner had from this platform."

Dr. Gray, who had not expected to speak, made a brief closing address, with an unction and power which moved his hearers to the depths and gave a fitting climax to the preceding addresses.

Telling of the first time he saw Dr. Towner and heard him sing, thirty years ago in Boston, he said:

"I see Dr. Towner tonight standing on that platform, I see his wife seated by his side at the little organ, that majestic looking man, with that majestic voice. Oh, how beautifully, how impressively, how inspiringly that husband and wife sang!

"We talk about Dr. Towner as a great song writer, and a great song writer he was. But how many of you present tonight ever heard Dr. Towner sing in his prime? Who could surpass him? It is a memory to have heard Dr. Towner sing in those days. He and I went out many times together in the conducting of evangelistic meetings, and I have sat by his side or behind him as he sang the gospel and watched him, as his mighty frame trembled from the sole of his feet to the crown of his head as he sang the gospel.

"Think of the souls that have been won to Jesus Christ through the singing ministry of that man! Many a time after Dr. Towner had sung a solo when I was to do the preaching, have I drawn the net before I ever uttered a word, and with the result that souls came forward and confessed the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"A great song writer, a great singer! Oh, I wish you could have heard him sing! When his daughter sometimes played the accompaniment of that wonderful song, 'I am Traveling Toward the Sunset Gate,' oh, how the tears rolled down the cheeks of men and women as they listened!

"I would that I could tell you, I would that I could express to you the wonder of his ministry in song, but I stand here tonight especially to say this, that while he was a great song writer, he was a great singer, he was, in my judgment, first and before all, a great teacher. As the result of my long experience in teaching I think I know a teacher when I hear one. That man was born of God a teacher! His loss in that respect, and I say it after fifteen years of association with him on the Faculty of this Institute, his loss in that respect is simply irreparable. I do not see how it ever can be made up."

Only Dr. Towner's songs were sung. These were "The Lord Jehovah Reigns," "What Will It Be When We See Him," "My Anchor Holds" and "Trust and Obey."

SUNDAY AFTERNOON BIBLE EXPOSITIONS

Many expressions of thanksgiving are heard about the four o'clock seasons of worship, praise and opening of the Scriptures in the Institute Auditorium. The speakers thus far have been Dr. Gray, Mr. Gosnell and Dr. W. H. Griffith-Thomas, and the attendance has been gratifyingly large.

THE NEW PIPE ORGAN

An addition to the equipment of the Institute that is highly appreciated, especially by the music students, is the recently installed pipe organ, which occupies a place at the left of the platform in Keith Hall. It is a complete two manual and pedal organ, with seven stops and two couplers, tubular pneumatic action, and electric motor and blower. Woodwork of golden oak encloses the 396 pipes. It was installed by the W. W. Kimball Company, and is used by the organ students for practice purposes, and at various services held in Keith Hall.

FORMER STUDENTS AT GERMAN BAPTIST CONFERENCE

The following resolution was adopted at a meeting of the accompanying group who attended the German Baptist Conference held at the Institute in August:

"We, the undersigned, former students of Moody Bible Institute, rejoice in the fact that on the occasion of the Triennial Conference of our denomination we were once more privileged to meet in its sacred halls. We are thankful to God that in this age of declension of faith Moody Bible Institute stands as a bulwark of the faith once for all delivered unto the saints; we share its loyalty to the Bible; we affirm our adherence to the doctrines taught here; we rejoice in its prosperity; and we pray, that until the Lord comes, it may be used of God to prepare men and women for the work of soul-winning around the globe, if possible in even larger measure than heretofore.

"God bless the school which D. L. Moody founded."

A CORRECTION

A paragraph in the November issue on "Some Changes and Promotions" stated incorrectly that Mr. John R. Riebe had been made Assistant Secretary of the Correspondence Department. Instead of Correspondence Department it should have read Extension Department.

MISSIONARY ORGANIZATION OF WIVES OF COUNCIL MEMBERS

The Women's Missionary and Prayer Circle, which was organized three years ago by the wives of members of the Institute Council, holds its meetings at noon on the first Thursday of the months October to May inclusive. Its program of study and discussion this year includes evangelistic, industrial, educational and medical missions, Mohammedanism, Mormons, and unoccupied fields. The Circle supports a missionary in Africa. Mrs. A. F. Gaylord is president.

EVENING CLASSES ALUMNI BANQUET

By Lucy L. Whitney, Chairman Publicity Committee

The Alumni Association of the Evening Classes held their annual banquet at the Women's Building, October 4. Notwithstanding the storm forty members were present, and a very enjoyable evening was spent. Dr. J. S. Ladd Thomas gave an interesting and instructive talk, followed by W. W. Ketchum, Director of the Evening Classes, whom it was a delight to have present. Music, both vocal and instrumental, and short talks from several members of the Association, together with the election of officers, closed the evening's entertainment.

More of the graduates of the Evening Classes should come out to the Alumni gatherings and show their appreciation and interest in the Evening Classes.

A HALLOWE'EN PARTY

Four hundred students and a number of Faculty members enjoyed a Hallowe'en party given by the Recreation Club in Keith Hall, Monday evening, November 3. The natural resources of Canada were represented in tableaux by students from the Dominion. Southerners in the Institute enacted a bit of life from a schoolhouse in the Tennessee mountain region and western students gave a similar act in which the scene was laid in the Rockies. A "kangaroo court" which occasioned gales of merriment was the offering of students from the East. Readings by Miss Edith V. Imhoff and Miss Edna Johnson met with cordial reception. Arrangements were in the hands of Howard A. Keithley and a committee composed of Miss Mina Pletcher, Miss Sarah Lackey, Miss Marie Ward, Henry Tweed and Henry Moser.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT NOTES

During October at Blacksburg, S. C., in a conference uniting all churches, Rev. George E. Guille taught the fundamentals of the faith with great blessing upon the believers and the salvation of about half a dozen others. Representatives of all the churches met the last night and arranged for Mr. Guille's return next May.

At Cape Charles, Va., later in the month, also in a conference of all churches, including the Episcopal, Mr. Guille taught Romans, Hebrews and prophetical subjects. The local editor said the conference was the greatest thing that ever came to the town; and he led in organizing a permanent Bible conference committee which asked Mr. Guille to return to Cape Charles next year. Many lives were wonderfully transformed and several were saved.

During November he was with the Second Presbyterian Church of Petersburg, Va.; Bible Conference, Zeeland, Mich.; and North Avenue Presbyterian Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe is teaching Union Bible Classes as follows, giving his popular series "Through the Bible in Ten Weeks": Mondays, at Youngstown, O.; and in Pennsylvania, Tuesdays, at DuBois; Wednesdays, at Brookville; Thursdays, at New Castle; Fridays, at Pittsburgh; and Sunday afternoons, at Pitcairn. He writes: "The classes all show increased interest and attendance. I could wish I had twice as many days in the week to meet the demand for others." At both Youngstown and New Castle they were crowded out of the mission halls and the Pittsburgh class found it necessary to go upstairs into the auditorium of the Smithfield Street M. E. Church. At Brookville over 400 were present. At all sessions the Lord gave liberty and blessing.

Mr. C. E. Putnam conducted Bible conferences in October at Berrien Springs, Mich., and Rochester, Ind. The editor of the Berrien Springs Era said: "Mr. Putnam spoke on twenty-eight different occasions. His manner of presenting biblical truths is intensely interesting and convincing. It is believed by those who followed his lectures that Berrien Springs people had the opportunity of hearing and learning from one of the greatest Bible students of the day." At Rochester, where he assisted the local pastors in a union evangelistic campaign, his work was similarly appreciated. From there he went to the City Rescue Mission, Racine, Wis., to fill a return engagement.

Mrs. Margaret T. Russell's November meetings were held at Houston, Gonzales and Beeville, Tex., and Lake Charles, La., cities where she had founded Bible Classes on former occasions. She taught Ruth, Philippians, 1 and 2 Peter, and gave a number of studies on "Christ and the Scriptures."

Dr. Henry Ostrom's inspirational addresses at the Boston and Minneapolis conferences on "The Jew and Prophecy," held under the auspices of the Williamsburg Mission to the Jews, made a deep impression. A Minneapolis pastor writes: "The conference was the greatest feast we have ever experienced. I have known Dr. Ostrom a number of years but have never known of his being used of God as he has been here during the past days." His November engagements were in a union evangelistic effort at Woodbine, Pa., a Bible conference at Zeeland, Mich. (associated with Mr. Guille), and a conference on Christian fundamentals at St. Louis, Mo.

Miss Elinor Stafford Millar concluded her work with The Union Mission at Wheeling, W. Va., and then spent a week each with the Young Women's Christian Associations at Lancaster, Pa., and Savannah, Ga. At Wheeling she addressed a mass meeting of about 3,000 striking steel workers on Sunday, November 2, following Rev. L. W. Cory, the mission superintendent. The Wheeling Register said it was the largest strikers' meeting ever held in Wheeling and one of the most unique, and that from the street one would have thought a great revival was in progress.

Rev. Rollin T. Chafer of Atlanta, Ga., the latest addition to our staff, conducted a conference at New Castle, Pa., during October, giving a study on the New Testament mysteries.

THE MARRIED WOMEN'S GUILD

The work of the Married Women's Guild is a very quiet part of the activities of the Institute and touches a smaller number of lives than any other department, but it is none the less positive and deep in its influence. Its purpose is to give to the wives of the married students as nearly as possible the same training as is given in the regular classes, which they are unable to attend because of home duties.

Advantages Provided

It affords also a social center for those who have come here, strangers to each other in a strange city, giving them a common meeting place where friendliness and cheer are found.

Here they find in the Bible classes the teaching that will enable them to study and work with their husbands later on when they enter pastorates, the mission fields or other forms of Christian service.

In the Home Management course they receive the practical instruction that means better homes; and the opportunities for learning to play and sing and lead meetings they find invaluable as a means of development.

Provision for the Children

At present there are some thirty women enrolled in the Guild, and since many of them must bring their children to the meetings, the Junior Guild has become a very important branch of the work.

The older boys and girls are taught various kinds of the manual arts, the younger children are in charge of a trained kindergartner, and the babies are cared for in a comfortably appointed nursery.

An hour spent in the pleasant parlors during the fellowship meeting held each Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 takes one at once into the center of the Guild's life and work, and shows what a place it holds in the hearts of the women who have learned to turn to it for help at every point in the life of a wife and mother.

Many instances are known which show what these rooms have held for the women who gather here on Tuesdays and Wednesdays from week to week, with eager minds and open hearts, bringing their problems, difficulties and needs, and finding in this fellowship one of the richest blessings that the Guild gives to them.

One Wife's Experience

A young married couple came from a small town in western Pennsylvania intending to take together the regular two years' course at the Institute. The wife soon found that she would not be able to do the class work and care for the home and little child. In her first disappointment, and in the loneliness that assailed her, a stranger in a large city, she grew bitter, and often regretted having given up so much and come so far from home and friends. The first invitations to the Guild meetings were refused "because she did not want to go to any women's meetings if she could not be a part of the Institute as she had planned."

In telling of those first days she says that her husband finally "just shoved me out to one of the Bible Synthesis hours," where she heard Mrs. Sutcliffe teach.

She began to go to other meetings and became acquainted with the women she met there, finding them situated as she was, knowing the same loneliness, facing the same questions, and with hearts holding the same purposes and ambitions as her own. At these meetings she heard talks on home nursing, home management, discipline of children, etc., which she found most helpful, and later, at the fellowship meetings she found that she not only had something to praise God for, but in the desire to express her new-found joy forgot her natural timidity.

She says: "I cannot tell what the Married Women's Guild has meant to me, for it means everything. It has changed my life. Most of the married students come for the two years' course, but any woman here for even one year would gain not only material for meetings and for teaching the Bible for months to come, but would have learned how to study it for herself."

Another Wife's Experience

Another had come to Chicago with her husband, much against her will. It had meant leaving a pleasant home and friends and living among strangers, under circumstances different from any she had known before. She would go only occasionally to the Guild, and did not want even to listen to the hymns she heard sung about the buildings. After a time she went to her mother's home, but that change did not bring happiness to her and she returned to Chicago, feeling that she should be here to make a home for her husband.

She began to attend the meetings of the Guild regularly, and then began the change in her spirit. The life of the Guild was entered into heartily and her entire attitude toward life was altered. Even the sewing class, work she had previously disliked and neglected, was enjoyed.

Her testimony was among the brightest and most joyful given, as she spoke of her Lord's patience with her during those months of bitterness and neglect, and of her indebtedness for all that the Guild had done for her in preparing her for a life of service.

Guild's Origin and Needs

The Guild had its inception in the heart of Mrs. James M. Gray seven years ago, and under her wise guidance and oversight developed steadily until its present quarters on the first and second floors of the building on Chicago Avenue just west of the Institute Auditorium, now known as Guild House, are no longer adequate for its requirements.

The need is felt for larger parlors; for class rooms; a sleeping room for the babies; a spacious nursery; separate rooms for the children of kindergarten age and the older boys and girls; lavatory accommodations especially planned for the little ones, with low wash bowls; adults' and children's cloak rooms; and a place for storing the baby carriages.

New Building in View

Plans are being laid and large hopes entertained for their realization in the near future—nothing less than a new building, of which two entire floors will be devoted exclusively to the Guild activities.

It is planned to fit up one of these floors for the use of the children, with a kindergarten in daily session in charge of a regularly employed kindergartner. A number of the mothers have expressed their willingness to help meet the expense of this work, so much do they wish to see it begun.

Instead of the parlors being open but two afternoons each week, as at present, they will always be available, affording the women a social center that will fill a long felt want.

With a kitchen and serving-room where the cooking classes could meet, and refreshments be prepared for social gatherings, all the requisites of a true community center would be found.

The committee having in charge the work of the Guild is composed of Mrs. B. B. Sutcliffe, chairman, Mrs. A. F. Gaylord, secretary, Mrs. J. B. Bowles, Mrs. P. B. Fitzwater, Mrs. F. L. Fellers.

OPEN AIR WORK AMONG THE JEWS

The injunction of our Lord, "Go out into the highways," has been obeyed this summer by The Chicago Hebrew Mission in its open air campaign among the Jewish people. With its gospel auto, ably assisted by the students of The Moody Bible Institute, its workers have held meetings in the three large Jewish districts of Chicago nearly every night, except Monday, and often on Sunday afternoons. Since May 25, when the campaign began, until September 1, 106 meetings were held, and approximately 29,000 people reached with the gospel message. The audiences generally numbered from 200 to 500. On several occasions there were as many as 800 to 1,000 present.

This ministry has been supplemented by the distribution of large numbers of tracts and Gospels, and by personal conversations with those thus met in the "market places."

Varied experiences have been encountered by the workers during the summer. On the one hand many were anxious to listen to the preaching and the testimonies, and good order was maintained with the assistance of the police. At other times there were those who endeavored to hinder the work by hostile demonstrations, but even in such cases God graciously turned them "unto the furtherance of the gospel." The Lord has wonderfully answered prayer in delivering the workers from any serious harm, but rather causing them to rejoice "that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name."

The Mission continued its open air work during September. Those specially interested in the evangelization of the Jews can obtain information regarding the ten-fold ministry of the Mission by writing the superintendent, Rev. Norman H. Camp, 1311 S. Kedzie Ave., Chicago.

God alone can give spiritual life at first, and keep it up in the soul afterwards.—Selected.

The Gospel in Print

"I'LL TELL THE WORLD"

"I'll tell the world" is a bit of slang that is sometimes heard, and is most boastful. Think of all that is involved in telling the world something—the millions of people, the hundreds of languages, the miles of distance.

A message meant for the world must be simple, must be one that the world needs to hear, must be so tremendously important to those who receive it, that they will go forth to tell others, regardless of cost, for no one person can tell the world anything.

The gospel is a message, and the only one, that fills these requirements; and Jesus Christ is the only person able to say, "I'll tell the world."

The gospel is as simple as John 3:16; as simple as the look and live message of Moses as he lifted the serpent in the wilderness.

Those who receive this message know that it means the forgiveness of sins, eternal life, a personal acquaintance with God, even God Himself. What can be more startling, shall we say, certainly blessed and tremendously important?

Whoever receives this burning truth has a message to give; a missionary is born; it cannot be otherwise.

AN IDEAL COLPORTEUR

The following is John G. Paton's testimony to his father's faithfulness in the cause of the greatest of messages to the world. It is a picture of an ideal colporteur—or of a true Christian in fact.

"For the last twelve years or so of his life, he became by appointment a sort of rural missionary for the four contiguous parishes, and spent the autumn of his life in literally sowing the good seed of the Kingdom as a colporteur of the Tract and Bible Society. His success in this work for a rural locality was beyond all belief. Within a radius of five miles, he was known in every home, welcomed by the children, respected by the servants, longed for eagerly by the sick and aged. He gloried in showing off the beautiful Bibles and other precious books, which he sold in amazing numbers. He sang sweet psalms beside the sick, and prayed like the voice of God at their dying beds. He went cheerily from farm to farm, from cot to cot; and when he wearied on the moorland roads, he refreshed his soul by reciting aloud one of Ralph Erskine's Sonnets; or, crooning to the birds, one of David's Psalms."

“The Crisis in Church and College”

A Stirring Book for the New Era

By The Well-Known Writer

Dr. G. W. McPherson, of Yonkers, N. Y.

(Author of “The Modern Conflict Over the Bible.” In Second Edition, Cloth, 25,000) Supt. of the Old Tent Evangel Evangelistic Committee, New York City

The Crisis Vol. I. Cloth; 1919, 250 pages. Price $1.45
The Conflict Vol. II. 1919, 232 pages. Price $1.45

Distributed by Yonkers Book Company Yonkers, N. Y.

G. W. McPHERSON

These books give results of correspondence with 211 Presidents of colleges, theological seminaries and preparatory schools, submitting excerpts and letters in full on every vital religious question as, the history of the Bible, inspiration, higher criticism, evolution, missions, students and teachers' problems, social service, place of Christ in modern thought, textbooks and reference books used in colleges and seminaries exposed, and is endorsed by clergy, educators, laymen, men and women everywhere. These are books for the thinking people of this new age. Would make desirable Holiday Gifts.

TESTIMONIALS THAT COUNT:

DR. JAMES M. GRAY

Dean, Moody Bible Institute: “I have read your stirring book and am preparing a commendatory review of it for the ‘Christian Workers Magazine.’ ” In this review Dr. Gray said: “It is the only book of its kind.”

DR. LEN G. BROUGHTON

Noted Northfield speaker: “It is one of the ablest presentations of the religious questions that has appeared in our day. I shall study this book further.”

REV. PAUL RADER

Pastor, the Moody Church, Chicago: “I have been praying three years for this book. I think the Moody Church will want 1,000 copies. In this first great chapter built of excerpts from the radical text-books and reference books used in our religious education, you have all the serum.”

LOS ANGELES BIBLE INSTITUTE

Dr. R. A. Torrey, Dean: “Rush by express 100 copies of your Crisis volume. I am profoundly stirred by this book.” Telegram sent by Rev. Dr. Horton, Supt. of this institution of 400 Bible students.

DR. MARK A. MATTHEWS

Ex-Moderator, Presbyterian Church of America: “Send 100 copies of your book to my church in Seattle. . . . In our Bible Conference here your great book was praised and the 100 copies were sold, except a few which I am sending to some friends.”

DR. A. C. DIXON

“I have read your book with profound interest. It is a message, and greatly needed today. With the exception of one or two minor matters, I give it my hearty endorsement.”

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH
Seattle, Washington

November 6, 1919.

Rev. George W. McPherson, D. D.,
34 Saint Andrew's Pl., Yonkers, N. Y.:

My Dear Brother:—

Please print the following words on the front page of your book entitled, THE CRISIS IN CHURCH AND COLLEGE:

The time has come for every Christian to be counted. The roll call is now going on and every man who pretends to be a Christian must answer YES or NO to the question, “Are you absolutely loyal to Jesus Christ, the eternal Son of God.” It is folly for us to make an attack upon the atheism, agnosticism, skepticism and anarchy being preached on the street corners and from the soap boxes, when we are permitting teachers in our schools and colleges to produce such ecclesiastical and political anarchists. To make an attack upon the effect and not uproot the cause is superficial work. To attack the soap box orator who has been created by the anarchistic teachings of our schools is not striking at the source of the evil.

The schools of this land must be purged; the public school must be redeemed, the colleges and universities and seminaries must be purged, cleansed, purified, fumigated and saved from the infamous teachings of the past. We do not want anything in this country that carried the label, “Made in Germany.” We are cursed to-day with the rationalism, the socialism and anarchy of rationalistic German teachings. We have saved the world from German autocracy, we must save America's schools, homes and children, and political factors from the infamy of rationalism, socialism and German anarchistic teachings.

The book written by Dr. McPherson, one of the most loyal men in America, entitled THE CRISIS IN CHURCH AND COLLEGE ought to be in the hands of every patriotic American citizen. It should be on the desk of every preacher, and it should be in the home of every Christian. I commend it to all and urge everyone to read it carefully. Dr. McPherson stated the facts.

(Signed) M. A. MATTHEWS.

☞ SPECIAL OFFER! Cash Gift of $25 for order of $100 worth; $12 for $50, and $5.50 for $25. Pastor wrote: “Crisis volume strengthened pastor and prevented division of church. Our young people must get this book. Bible Classes need it.” Address Yonkers Book Company, Yonkers, N. Y.

One Way in Which Mr. Moody Showed His Faith

D. L. Moody was once asked, "Why don't you run your schools on faith?"

"I do," was his prompt and emphatic reply, "I always have and I always expect to; and as an evidence of my faith, if you will tell me of any Christian man in this country who has money and to whom I have not already gone I will go at once. I believe I show my faith when I go to men and state to them the needs of the Lord's work and ask them to give to it."

The Moody Bible Institute is a living monument to the efficacy of that faith which was given of God to His servant, D. L. Moody.

The needs of the Lord's work as represented in the Institute are far greater today than they were in Mr. Moody's time, and it is in the exercise of that same faith that this page is used to tell God's people about them.

A payroll increase of more than $16,000 per annum has recently been found absolutely unavoidable; and on account of the increased cost of everything nearly all other expenses, as our readers will understand, have also been largely increased.

What is to be done? We can only look up, and tell God's people about it in the hope and expectation that as this appeal meets their eyes they will be moved by His grace to proportionately increase their gifts.

If they will also inform us of others who might willingly participate in the support of the Institute, we will promptly "state to them the needs of the Lord's work and ask them to give to it."

More than 1,600 students are now receiving free training in the Institute's Day and Evening Classes. How sorely this poor lost world needs Bible trained, Spirit filled men and women.

We ask you to give just as soon as you can. If you cannot send the money now, at least send the word that it is coming. You can understand how the men in responsibility are feeling just now. Comfort them all you can, and do not wait very long.

The accompanying coupon is printed herewith for your convenience. Will you not fill out and mail it NOW while the matter has your attention?

The Holy Bible

IN MODERN ENGLISH

Containing the Complete Sacred Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, Translated into English direct from the Original Hebrew, Chaldee, and Greek Languages. With Introductions and Critical Notes and Carefully Revised Throughout by FERRAR FENTON, F.R.A.S., M.C.A.A.

FIFTH EDITION

THIS work is unique among the books of the world. It represents the continued application of one man for fifty years. Ferrar Fenton, a layman, conducting a huge business with relations all over the world, determined when a young man to translate the entire Bible direct from the original languages into the language of to-day, and he did it in just half a century.

Where the original is in poetical form, it is the same in this volume. The text, also, is divided into paragraphs and sections, with subject headings. Altogether, this is a volume that should be used by every Bible student in connection with the usual version.

"It brings before English readers the real meaning of the text as no other translation has ever done, and as only a few of the very best commentaries have succeeded in doing."—Primitive Methodist (England).

"Will appeal to thousands of men who previously have not dug out the facts concealed by the usual typographical arrangement."—The Continent.

You Are Not Experimenting

when you enroll for a Moody Bible Institute Correspondence Course. These courses have been tested to entire satisfaction by thousands of students, including a large number of clergymen, well qualified to judge their value. What some of these clergymen say is given below.

Rev. J. H. Ralston, D. D.
Secretary of the Correspondence Department.

SYNTHETIC COURSE

Synthetic Bible study has been a wonderful blessing in deepening my interest in the Scriptures, in deepening my spiritual life, and in increasing the power of my ministry.—An Oregon pastor.

I can testify heartily that this course will be very beneficial to all ministers; indeed, I learned more from it than I ever did in the Seminary.—A Texas pastor.

I can truthfully say that these studies have been a delight and a blessing to me, revealing anew the depth and harmony of the inspired Word of God.—A Missouri pastor.

I am receiving a great deal of good from the Synthetic Bible study. I am giving it in outline to my people at our evening services with a marked increase in attendance.—A Michigan pastor.

I want to bear testimony to the blessing the course in Synthetic Study has been to me. In all my nine years in the ministry I have not had such help and inspiration from anything. What a blessing it would be if our younger men would take such work for their own growth spiritually and as a source of inspiration in the pulpit and elsewhere. I believe that in the study of the Old Testament alone I have found enough NEW material for sermon and Bible class work to last me five years. The Bible is a bigger, better and greater revelation of God and His will than ever before. You can quote me as one who believes mightily in this great work of Bible study and teaching.—A Nebraska pastor.

SCOFIELD COURSE

I look upon the Scofield Course as the best correspondence course I have ever seen.—Superintendent of a Bible Institute.

In all my thirty-three years in the ministry I have never enjoyed any study as I have this.—A North Dakota pastor.

This course, taken in ten months without interfering with my regular pastoral duties, has proved of incalculable value to me. I expected much, I received far more. I most heartily recommend it to busy ministers and laymen.—A Texas pastor.

I am using the course with my prayer meeting folks Wednesday night, turning the prayer meeting into a Bible study period of forty-five minutes and devoting the remaining fifteen minutes to the devotional service. Permit me to say that I have had better prayer meetings, with more satisfaction to myself, than I have ever had.—An Alabama pastor.

I am striving to get for myself and my people the meat of the lessons. The best part of it is that I can hardly wait from one Sunday until the next to give out what I have received.—An Alaska pastor.

This course in the whole Bible is incomparable. Regardless of previous training every earnest minister and Sunday School worker should complete this course. All students of the course will testify to the limitless blessings which it contains.—An eminent New York Bible teacher.

This has been the most helpful study I have ever undertaken.—An Ohio pastor.

BIBLE DOCTRINE COURSE

I enjoy the work very much and am getting more out of it than any Bible study I ever pursued, not excepting my work in college.—An Ohio pastor.

It is a wonderful help and I thank God from the bottom of my heart. It is beneficial to me and therefore must be to those who listen to me.—A Canadian pastor.

I have been more than pleased with the Bible study. It has been full of prayer meeting topics and sermon material. I highly recommend it to all who have not taken it.—An Oklahoma pastor.

A month ago I appeared before the Baptist council and was ordained. My examination lasted more than three hours but I came through with flying colors. I used statements from the Doctrine course in my whole argument.—A Pennsylvania evangelist.

I was not able to take a theological course at a seminary but when I was ordained I passed a rigid examination in which I based my answers upon knowledge obtained largely through the course in Doctrine.—An Iowa pastor.

Five other courses are offered besides the three named above. They are: BIBLE CHAPTER SUMMARY, INTRODUCTORY BIBLE COURSE, PRACTICAL CHRISTIAN WORK, EVANGELISM, AND CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES, all highly endorsed by satisfied students.

Don't Allow Anything to cheat you of your wonderful privilege of systematically studying the one Book which outweighs in value all other books in all the world. Dig in it as for gold and you will secure treasure of value and extent beyond any calculation.

In these trying times men and women who really know God's Word are needed beyond the power of language to express. Trained Bible students are in great demand. Whether in the home, church, school or the business world, this training is of inestimable value.

DON'T DELAY.

You will be a personal pupil—time, place and amount of study under your own control. The prices are very low—much below cost. There is no better time to start than NOW. Send the coupon at once for Free Prospectus describing our eight Courses in detail.

With all his effervescent enthusiasm and deep spiritual power the dynamic young pastor of the great Moody Tabernacle of Chicago will discuss the Christian Endeavor topic for the Young People's Prayer Meeting, every week, in

The Sunday School Times

All the above features are but a few of the many notable articles to appear in this great Interdenominational Journal for Adults in Bible study and teaching, Sunday-school management, and the Christian life. Don't forget that it is true to the whole Bible as the infallible Word of God, and the shed blood of Jesus as the only way of salvation. Note also the following features:

God and Natural Science

Can a Professor of Chemistry and Physics still hold the old-fashioned view of God and the Bible? Yes; he tells about mistakes and absurdities of some positions of modern natural science, then how easy it is to reconcile true science with the Bible.

The Truth About Spiritism

Why is it that some of the greatest writers and men of thought today are publicly accepting Spiritism as their religion, and urging it upon others? An amazing series of articles in The Sunday School Times will tell the truth about Spiritism's claims of communication with the dead.

Your Sunday School Questions Answered

Some of the strongest Sunday-school experts in America will answer, in The Sunday School Times, those puzzling questions that face you in your practical Sunday-school work. The department "Ask Marion Lawrance" is famous; and Teacher Training, the Home Department, Elementary Work, and Temperance Questions are discussed by notable specialists in these various fields.

Publisher's Stuff

Written by candle light—not edited by the editors—blame me, not them, if you do not find what you want here.

THE publishing agent rarely finds time to write attractive looking advertisements, and resorts to that well-known method, "circular letters," to keep up interest in The Christian Workers Magazine. Now the editor has suggested that I gather up such thoughts as come to me and put them in the advertising pages as "Publisher's Stuff."

How It Happened

When printing the November magazine there was a small space to fill on page 200. I wanted to do the printers a good turn. A notice was therefore inserted giving their name and praising their good work. The editor was not consulted—the statement appeared as editorial matter. I gave him a good excuse of course, for using his space. He said, "When it is necessary to print such notices, please let them appear as from the publisher, etc." I accepted his offer and he said,

"Dear Woodruff:

"Take all the space you wish. You deserve it, and are welcome to it; but don't let it appear as editorial except in the editorial columns. Let it appear as publisher's 'stuff.' "

What Will "Publisher's Stuff" Be?

It will have to be made up of the various items of interest to the editors, publishing agent and subscribers—things that would not otherwise be treated editorially in the magazine. Here is a sample: Dr. Gray sent me the following note:

"Nov. 19, 1919.

"Dear Mr. Woodruff:

"A good 'premium' book, if you have never used it, is Stroh's 'When God Comes Down to Earth.' It is well written, thoroughly sound and clear from a dispensational point of view, and I can endorse every word of it.

"J. M. G."

I replied to Dr. Gray as follows:

"I agree with you and have had it on all my lists for the past two years, or more, but it does not go well—the title does not seem to be attractive. If a new edition is contemplated I believe it would go well under a new title.

"S. A. W."

He said:

"Give us a title.

"J. M. G."

Mr. Norton, of the Bible Institute Colportage Association, reports to me he has only 200 copies in stock. Before I suggest a new title I am taking this way of presenting to our subscribers this good book. It is divided in sections as follows: A—A Preview of the Epochal Crises. B—The Crises Already Past. C—The Premillennial Crisis. D—The Postmillennial Crisis. It is a study of Eschatology from a new angle. (Reader please look up eschatology in your dictionary.)

Now note this: Mr. Stroh has six sections of his book devoted to the "Approaching Epochal Crisis" or the next one in order. He deals with the subjects: "Will the church prevent the world's corruption?" "The failure of education;" "Civilization sitting upon a volcano." "The approaching descent of God." Then come "The wrath of Satan;" "The wrath of The Lamb;" "The world-wide extent of the approaching crisis;" "The brevity of the premillennial crisis;" "Mercy in the midst of wrath."

One has to get right into the book to appreciate it. The price is $1.25. I will send a copy free to anyone who will send me two new subscriptions for one year to The Christian Workers Magazine, or a one year subscription and the book for $2.25. Now watch those 200 books go. If you want one don't wait. It takes some weeks to print a new edition. So much for this book.

Subscribers' Complaints

"It never rains, but it pours." That's the way it seemed to us with complaints in December. If you want to know how much our subscribers think of this magazine, come into the office as we get our mail when an issue is three or four days late. Letters, post cards, telephone calls, "Where's my December magazine?" "You sent me two copies of November and none for December;" "About the middle of last month I sent in my subscription but have not received the December number;" etc., etc. Somebody made mistakes in enclosing wrong copies in the wrappers; we were ten days to two weeks behind in filling orders; everybody seemed to be interested at the same time in The Christian Workers Magazine; for three months we received twice as many subscriptions as in the corresponding months a year ago.

Save Coal

Then came the order to work only six hours a day; lights out. This accounts for my writing this copy in an office getting colder and colder with the steam turned off—one candle three fourths burned down and the other half way down—and hurrying to send the copy to the printer tonight so you can have your January magazine on time—maybe.

Save Paper

Also our printer says we have only 25,000 sheets of paper for January and not to order too large a magazine or we won't have enough paper. Our next shipment is at the mill and with a curtailment in railroad service the outlook is not favorable. Say, if the February number is late, you will wait until you count ten (days) won't you, before you write?

What Will I Say Next?

The candles are getting lower—it's getting colder. Big, busy day coming tomorrow—circular letters to be sent to prospective subscribers, delinquent subscribers—good, paid-up subscribers, asking everybody to help make The Christian Workers Magazine the best it has ever been for 1920. I told the editor the other night it is a big job to get all you people to subscribe regularly and pay up on time. What do you think he said?

"Just see who you have to help you make it a good magazine—Ralston, Page, Fitzwater, Cork, Pace, Norton, Bowles."

Sure, but what good is a good magazine if folks don't buy it? See the point? I've almost educated over two thousand folks to subscribe regularly and on time by giving them a copy of "How to Memorize" by Evans. Some of them are developing fine memories—one man said today, who got a circular letter not intended for him, "I am sure my subscription is paid up until February but I will renew anyway and let you look it up." Another subscriber got a circular letter by mistake, and although he gets the magazine regularly, didn't take any chances and paid again so it now runs to September, 1921. Only a few hundred copies of "How to Memorize," by Evans are left. Want one? 75 cents. Or a copy free for a new yearly subscription, $1.50.

Advertisement

"Publisher's Stuff" coming for February—a picture of a "post peon"—a man who delivers The Christian Workers Magazine to missionaries in India; some information about the missionary fund; some new premium book announcement; tit for tat if the editors criticize this new department; good poem wanted—intended for this department; all subject to change when we write the copy.

My Last Point

I must not close without thanking every one who has helped by sending in names of friends, ordering subscriptions as Christmas presents, speaking a good word for us to a friend, etc. All these have helped to cheer us on our way. It is all for Jesus and His shall be the glory. A happy new year to all.

Dear Sir:—

I visited your Rescue Mission in Chinatown (Old Chinese Theatre) while on a sight-seeing trip. I was surprised at the condition of some of the poor unfortunate men that you were lodging there and also the good and Lordly work your Organization is doing.

I was out of change last night, so could only give a few cents to your worthy cause. I am a sailor in the U. S. Naval Reserve Force from Detroit, Mich. I don't get much salary myself, but I am enclosing a dollar, which I hope will give some poor soul a full stomach and a night's rest. I only wish I had a million to give to the Mission.

May the Lord's blessing be with your work. Always,

A SAILOR.

"TO THE JEW FIRST"

We are at it again. We are at it because it is fundamental. It is the bed-rock upon which we predicate the Jewish Mission appeal to every Bible-believing soul. "To the Jew first" is as basic in Missions as faith in Christ is basic in Salvation. Every January brings to us an increasing number of gifts, "to the Jew first." And many letters tell us, "Thank you so much for calling my attention to my duty and privilege. I want to start the New Year right."

Think it over. For some day you too will join this blessed caravan, and you too will say, "I want to preach God's Gospel in God's way—to the Jew first." And while you think it over, just bear in mind that there are today nearly two million Jewish souls in New York City who have never even been given the Gospel "to the Jew last!"

What say you? Our literature is sent to all contributors. The Chosen People, our monthly paper, will be unusually interesting this winter. Price 50c a year.

Editorial Notes

WE GREET THEE, NEW YEAR

By Fred Scott Shepard

With gladness we greet thee, New Year!
With high hopes me meet thee, New Year!
Thy days, all untried,
Before us stretch forth—
Whatever betide,
Of ill or of worth,
Are all in God's hands
And wait His commands,
So bravely we greet thee, New Year!

Our New Year Issue

We are treating our readers to a great variety this month. Bishop Nicholson's sermon on "Business is Business," is not only rich in its evangelical flavor, but has an exceptional value for what Mr. Spurgeon used to denominate, "Village Preachers," and to whom he addressed his "Hints," in the Treasury of David.

"My Times Are in Thy Hands" is just the kind of a meditation with which to begin the New Year.

And what could be more beautiful and true than Rector McKim's homily on the love of Christ?

We thought it very fitting to follow it by the "Two Baptist Homilies," the sentiments of which are in such harmony with it.

Then we find ourselves in a different stratum of thinking, altogether. Indeed we were not thinking before, we were just feeling, enjoying the pleasurable emotions of the spiritual life; but with Mr. Huston's communication on "Science and the Bible," we begin to gather up the loins of our mind.

And we are glad to have another Christian business man stir up our pure minds to service in the wise hints of President Tawney, of the First National Bank, of McKeesport, Pa.

All this prepares us gradually and finely for Dr. Sheldon's blast against the dangerous cult of Spiritualism, and Will Houghton's true picture of the revolutionary times in which we live, and Mr. Dunkin's inquiry about the theological seminaries, which ought to equip men better than some of them do, to put an end to these revolutions by right teaching, and then kindly Dr. Ostrom's criticisms about good songs sung in a bad way.

We all ought to be cleaner, sweeter, stronger, kinder and more efficient Christians after reading this issue. God grant it for His name's sake.

The article on "Theosophy and Spiritualism" promised for this month, has been postponed in order to find space for one on "The Proposed World Church Union."

A. B. Simpson

When we learned that this great man of God had been called home, our December issue had already gone to press, postponing necessarily, this expression of our love, and admiration of his name and work. We first knew him back in 1880, when he was pastor of the Thirteenth Street Presbyterian Church, New York, and when he reached that spiritual crisis which led him to believe in God as the healer of the body as well as the soul, and which eventuated in the inauguration of the Christian and Missionary Alliance.

This movement has proven epochal in the current history of the church, and deserves mention with that still greater achievement of God through J. Hudson Taylor, the China Inland Mission.

Dr. Simpson was often judged by, and interpreted through some of his professed followers, and suffered by it in the public estimate. But those who knew him, recognized in him one of the wisest, sanest and most judicious of men. We knew him on the public platform, we knew him in business relations, we knew him socially, we knew him in the closest fellowship of worship and brotherly confidence in Christ, and we place him on the highest eminence of our earthly friendships. Heaven is so much richer to us for his presence there.

Dr. Simpson was a great preacher, a great writer, a great educator, a great organizer, a great leader of men, and an indefatigable worker in every sphere of his many-sided endeavors.

And with it all, he was still human. He was no ascetic. He was no crank. Lovable, approachable, sympathetic, practical, tactful, humorous, wholesome, he was a fine all round Christian whom it was a delight to know, and who honored his God and Saviour always.

The movement he founded, in the human sense, has met with a great loss. Who can measure it? But the life of God is in it, and it will go on and prosper and bring forth still more fruit to be his hope, and joy and crown of rejoicing "in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at His coming."

Is Christianity Important?

The attention of many has been called to the report of the Japanese Commission on the influence of Christianity upon the American people. Education, commerce and industry have been developed to a wonderful degree, they said, but "there is little evidence that the Christian religion is regarded as important by most of the people."

Was the Commission right? Who will venture to say otherwise?

But why is it that the Christian religion is not regarded as important by most Americans? Because the Christian religion is not preached to them. Surely the Bible doctrines of God and Christ, of sin and holiness, of death and life, of judgment and reward, of hell and heaven, of hate and love, of woe and happiness, are important.

If these were impressed upon the people by their religious teachers to the exclusion of some other things—in season and out of season, by press and pulpit, by precept and example, who shall say that they would not be felt to be important?

We believe in foreign missions, but their impact on the heathen world depends primarily on the propulsion they receive from the home land. And that propulsion is generated primarily, not by conventions and committees, not by boastful talk, not by "drives" for money, not by a multiplication of paid secretaries, not by spectacular pageants, but by steady, faithful, plain, quiet, earnest, heaven-endued teaching of the Bible.

"This one thing I do," is what the church needs to learn and act upon, if Christianity is to be regarded as important by the people.

If it did that, it would recall some of the men and women it has sent abroad who misrepresent Christianity, and who are causing nations like Japan to be less tolerant towards it than they used to be.

The Christianity of Carey and Paton, of Judson and David Brainerd, of Hudson Taylor and Mary Slessor of Calabar, was always regarded as important and so it still remains.

Childless Marriages

"Courts say that divorces are due to cruelty, drunkenness and half a dozen other things, but they are all wrong. The three fundamental reasons for divorce are:

"1. The natural vanity of both sexes.

"2. Psychological incompatibility.

"3. Lack of children."

Thus saith a professor of Columbia University, and we believe he is nearer right than some other professors when they deliver themselves of similar oracular observations.

This professor (William J. Durant) in addressing a social center in New York recently, added that the happiness of man and woman is only a secondary affair in marriage, the prime purpose of which is to produce healthy children. Right again, and biblical, as can be clearly established, we believe.

"Where there are no children, there is no marriage," he went on to say, but this requires qualification. It depends much upon the reason why there are no children. If the man and woman's selfishness is to blame, then he is again right, only he did not go far enough in his excoriation. In such cases there is a sad day awaiting the guilty pair.

But there are others. There are married couples whom we all know, the greatest sorrow of whose life is that they have no children. How we pity them. And how we admire them when they adopt the orphaned children of other people. But the other day we were introduced to a couple who not only had several children of their own, but adopted two or three more! Talk about monuments! Who wouldn't subscribe for a statue in their honor?

But divorce. Some people marry with the full intent of divorce when it becomes convenient, but when professing Christians get divorced it can only be because they did not marry in the Lord, as the Scriptures direct.

There is a strain that comes sometimes in the clashing of two human wills bound together by the marriage tie, which nothing can keep from breaking but the grace of God administered to each, but that is sufficient.

"Earth has no sorrow
That heaven can not heal."

There is no natural vanity, no psychological incompatibility, no mistake or wrong of which either of the pair has been guilty, that the grace of God cannot overcome, or rectify in some way.

Believe it, young people, and do not marry a sweetheart who is not in Christ. And when you marry, remember the responsibility to God and to the race that goes with it, and do not flinch in the face of it. Sorrow may come, misunderstanding, trial, pain, worry, disappointment, contention, loss, but "God is, and he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

Go to Him with your difficulty. Confess your fault. Seek His forgiveness. Ask Him for patience, or for the aid of His Holy Spirit to repair the breach that you yourself have made, and you will live to praise Him "who is the health of your countenance and your God."

Feminine Pride

The present laudable effort to persuade women to become clothed and seated in their right mind has gained encouragement from a writer in an English journal. The writer is a woman, Mrs. Elinor Glynn. No man would have dared the consequences she must face.

"It is all very cheap and vulgar when one comes to examine it," she says. "I do not wonder that the men are wearied and bored, and that respectful manners are gone by.

"Imagined form is 99 per cent better than the realization, hence how foolish women are to throw aside the back drapings. When stared at boldly, the eye is forced to realize that five women out of ten are ugly, misshapen creatures, often with coarse skins."

Pretty plain, rough talk, Mrs. Glynn, but if only it accomplishes its end, your name will go down to posterity with that of Mrs. Pankhurst or Mrs. Catt.

When we began this note we entitled it "Feminine Modesty," but changed "Modesty" to "Pride." Modesty is gone, but pride is left, and wielded by the doughty hand of this crusader, it may be a weapon to accomplish much.

We are thinking of mothers, professedly Christian mothers, who are permitting their young and unsophisticated daughters to go out before the public thus exposed, never having taught them even to keep their feet upon the floor in company.

Of course, as Mrs. Glynn admits, the standard of decency in such matters has always been geographical, but just now we are thinking of people of our own latitude, and not of Africans and Asiatics.

Lady Astor's Sense

When Lady Astor emerged from the Guildhall after being declared victor in her fight for a seat in Parliament, some laborites approached and said the Astors represented the capitalist class and not the people.

"You're wrong, friend," she replied, "it's the heart which makes class. If you're greedy at heart you belong to the profiteer class. I wish the Labor party would have let me address them once. I'd have given them a good talking to. You've got more loons in it than we conservatives, and that's saying a lot."

There is a lot of sense in that and some gospel also, for Christ taught us that it was out of the heart such things proceed. Where grace exists in the heart, the rich and the poor meet together because the Lord is the maker of them all.

A greedy laborite, and there are plenty of them, is as truly a profiteer as a greedy capitalist, and what both want is the regeneration of the Holy Spirit. In other words, the panacea for our present ills, and the only one, is preaching Christ.

And when it comes to loons, her Ladyship is still on solid ground, for no party and no class monopolizes them. If we could only remember that all the time, it would make us all conservatives of the right kind.

From Out the Dark

By Vernon W. Patterson

A Prayer For the New Year

I do not know, I cannot see;
The way ahead is dark to me,
  And fears appall—and fears appall.
My understanding gives no light,
But cold, thick blackness of the night
  Envelopes all—envelopes all.

I cannot see, I do not know;
Yet I must choose and on must go
  In paths unseen—in paths unseen.
Oh, what if I should miss the way
And stumble into miry clay
  Or deep ravine—or deep ravine?

From out the dark I cry to Thee,
O God, my Father, come to me
  And fears dispell—and fears dispell.
Bend low to me and hear my cry,
And lead—I know not where nor why,
  But know 'tis well—but know 'tis well

O Father, let me hold Thy hand
And, though I cannot understand,
  Yet know Thee near—yet know Thee near.
Yes, speak to me in whispers low,
So, though 'tis dark, I'll know I know,
  And I'll not fear—and I'll not fear.

The Proposed World Church Union

By Rev James M. Gray, D. D.

THE writer gave an address last year on the above stated theme before a graduating class of The Moody Bible Institute, which was subsequently published in these pages and, at the request of church leaders, put in pamphlet form for more general distribution.

It raised questions and met with criticism in some quarters, which, when learned, caused its further circulation to be stopped until more light had been obtained.

As part of this light, two letters are here presented, the first from an official of the Interchurch World Movement, and the second from an official of a denominational board who is much interested in that movement.

I

Letter No. 1

"My Dear Doctor Gray:

"Your recent letter makes us feel that you have our Movement mixed up with several others.

"Last fall, the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., called a conference at Philadelphia to see what could be done in the way of organic union. This is the organization which has appointed the Ad Interim Committee. There is no relationship between this Ad Interim Committee and the Interchurch World Movement.

"The Protestant Episcopal Church has a Commission on Faith and Order, which has as one of its objectives some form of church union. The Interchurch World Movement is not in any way connected with this commission.

"What the Interchurch World Movement plans to do is to have the evangelical denominations promote together those things which are of a promotional nature, * * * to put on a world program of Christian education and evangelism which will hasten the coming of the Great King.

"I am taking the liberty of sending you three pieces of literature. The first shows the origin, purposes and plans of the Movement; the other entitled "What It Is" explains briefly four or five ways in which united action is to be planned and gives a list of those organizations which have to date endorsed the Movement. The third is a report of the Committee appointed at a conference held at Cleveland, April 30-May 1. * * * * * * It tells what they thought the Interchurch World Movement was and ought to be.

"In justice to yourself and to the task, we would ask that you glance through this literature and get the Interchurch World Movement placed correctly. We feel that if you will do this, you will find that we are wholly in accordance with your views and you will wish to co-operate with us in our effort for a more efficient world program for Christianity.

"Yours sincerely,"

Letter No. 2

"Dear Dr. Gray:

"The leaflet, 'The Proposed World Church Union—Is It of God or Man?' which gives a report of an address you gave before the graduating class of The Moody Bible Institute, has been sent me and I have read it through.

"I think there is much valuable information in this leaflet, but having been closely associated with the Interchurch World Movement from its beginning, I am certain that you have given a one-sided view of the situation.

"I regret that you have published this article and sent it broadcast before you had an opportunity to study the fundamental principles of the Interchurch World Movement. I regret also that you have coupled it up with other Movements which have been seeking organic church union with which it has no association whatever.

"The Interchurch World Movement is in reality a forward movement of all the denominations, by their representative boards, co-operating in a united effort to put great emphasis on

"First, the development of the spiritual life of our present church membership.

"Second, the enlistment of an army of intercessors.

"Third, the calling out, through prayer, of an adequate force of young men and women to become ministers and missionaries for the new day ahead.

"Fourth, by the study on the part of the whole membership, of the principles of Christian stewardship and the enrolment of millions who will agree to become Christian stewards, giving as a minimum, the tithe.

"Fifth, to make a survey of America and the non-Christian lands with a view to fully occupying these fields and to secure the most thorough co-operation possible.

"Sixth, to present to the church the stewardship of the gospel—to have every one that is won be a winner of others.

"Seventh, to apply the principles of Christ in civic affairs and national and international relationships.

"I am personally acquainted with the movements in a number of communions and know the foregoing is a faithful statement of their aims. Not all of these things can or should be emphasized at the same time, but they will all be emphasized in different periods as the Movement develops.

"I recognize that the Interchurch World Movement may be exposed to some of the dangers you mention in your address and hence what you have said may serve a good purpose, but I believe The Moody Bible Institute ought to take a constructive, forward view of these movements in the various denominations, and of the Interchurch World Movement which is formed by the representatives from the various denominational boards and movements. If these movements succeed there will be a demand for training of new recruits at The Moody Bible Institute such as you have never witnessed.

"With an earnest desire for a spiritual quickening of the present church membership, and the relating of every Christian to Christ our living Lord, to carry out His program for the world, I am, Sincerely,"

* * * *

"P. S. The Interchurch World Movement is but a temporary plan of co-operation to bring the combined appeal of the claims of God and the needy world to this generation of professing Christians."

These letters are published out of respect to their authors and in justice to the movement they represent, as well as in justice to the present writer who cordially appreciates them. The sentiments in the second letter especially awaken a warm reponse in his heart, more so than anything on the subject which he has seen, although he has read all the literature which he was requested to read in the first letter.

But after saying this, it remains that there is little, if anything, in the original address which a spirit of fairness and truth requires to be withdrawn.

It grew out of a regional conference in Chicago, purporting to be held in the interest of the Interchurch World Movement, where distinguished men spoke on successive days, whose speeches were reported in the press.

These reports gave rise to comment among the large body of students, representing about every evangelical denomination, who were in training for Christian service in The Moody Bible Institute. If those utterances were right, much of their instruction had been wrong, and, indeed, the Bible itself would appear to be wrong.

It was a challenge to their preceptor to meet the issue on the appropriate occasion of the graduation which presented itself.

But in so doing, he took pains to say that he was not reviewing or criticising the conference, but only the published reports of its proceedings. These might be incorrect, but there was a harmony and consistency among them from day to day which gave a sufficient semblance of truth to impress the public.

As a matter of fact, now that the fundamental principles of the Movement have been published and are known to the writer, the same reason for the address would exist that existed then.

That reason was to counteract utterances that seemed to "contradict the Scriptures, to weaken Christian testimony and dishonor God." Those utterances were, in substance, these:

> "A world league of churches is to be the result of the war. The day is at hand for a tremendous new movement, nothing can stop it. It is the greatest religious movement in four centuries.
> "The spirit of co-operation is in the air, and that sectarianism, and the accompanying bigotry which it engenders, will not be tolerated.
> "Churches must work together to give expression on questions of civic reform, law enforcement, local moral questions, international morality and world peace."

It seemed to the local press at the time, that these and kindred utterances meant a world church union, and it so characterized the Movement in its headlines, and it is believed with some justification. Certainly that would be likely to be the impression of the average reader. The modification now made in the literature of the Movement, to the effect that only co-operation is intended, and not organic union, was not made clear in the published reports. Though the word "co-operation" was used as above, yet the connection seemed to nullify its meaning.

II

The authors of these letters are kind enough to say that the address mixed up the Interchurch World Movement with several others, and they mention two, the Ad Interim Committee of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., and the Commission on Faith and Order of the Protestant Episcopal Church, both of which are supposed to be aimed toward organic union.

This reference to the address, however, is an error on the part of those authors. In its preparation and delivery the Ad Interim Committee did not come into mind, and while the action of certain Protestant Episcopal bishops was mentioned, it was expressly said to be only as an illustration, and care was taken to separate it from the objectives of the regional conference under consideration.

The reference to these two other movements, nevertheless, helps to make clear why the Christian public, including the present writer, associated the idea of organic church union with the purpose of the conference, for these two movements do not stand alone. Quoting Dr. Rowland in the Baptist Quarterly, "efforts are being made in various quarters to obliterate denominational lines, and to induce, if not compel, the formation of a general organization which will include all the Protestant bodies, and also, it is hoped, eventually Roman and Greek Catholics, Swedenborgians, and all other communities which profess allegiance to Christ."

Going into detail, Dr. Rowland says:

> "The Lambeth quadrilateral is still offered by the Church of England and the Protestant Episcopal Church of America.
> "Some of the Non-Conformists of England under the lead, or with the co-operation, of Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, the Secretary of the Baptist Union of Great Britain, have gone so far, apparently, as to admit the validity of the Historic Episcopate and their willingness to submit to a modified form of ordination on the part of their ministry by official representatives of the Church of England.
> "Recently the Presbyterian Church of the United States, by an act of its General Assembly, has made overtures for the organic union of evangelical Christians, and has taken preliminary steps for the formation of such a union.
> "Lutheran bodies long separated have come together under pressure of present needs.
> "In Canada, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists have adopted a plan of union.
> "In not a few instances local churches in the United States have given up their separate denominational existence and have united with other churches on a union basis. The close of a war, which has thrown men of all faiths side by side in suffering and death, is felt to be a good time for a supreme effort to effect the external and visible union of all the followers of our Lord."

Dr. Rowland admits the cogency of certain reasons urged for the obliteration of denominational lines in the formation of an organic union, especially of the evangelical churches, but he points out the objections which outweigh all that can be said in its favor.

These are its impractibility, the fact that it would weaken the spiritual life and activities of the churches, that it would tend to sacramentalism and ecclesiastic autocracy, that it would not promote real unity, and that so far as the Baptists are concerned it would sacrifice the principles for which they have been long contending, and which are as vital today as at any time in the past.

III

In the light of the above, it is respectfully asked whether there was not some reason for supposing the Interchurch World Movement to be in the direction of organic union? Is it surprising, indeed, that fear should have arisen that it was the preliminary step to ultimately effect that result? As some expressed it, Did it seem likely that representatives of the churches so earnestly desiring organic union would set up a counter-movement in favor of co-operation only?

Happily the publications of the Interchurch Movement set these apprehensions at rest for the present, but it may be said without the slightest reflection upon the integrity of some of its present leaders, that caution may still be needed for the future. There are among these leaders those who are not distinguished as advocates of evangelical principles, and whenever they are in power a danger signal is called for.

The writer asks permission to again refer to letter No. 2, in order to express once more his hearty appreciation of the things on which it places emphasis, the spiritual life of our church membership, an army of intercessors, an adequate force of young men and women to become ministers and missionaries, the principles of Christian stewardship, the winning of souls—here indeed are the factors of a true revival! It is regrettable that these things could not have been kept to the fore, or at least mentioned, in the descriptive literature of the movement.

The author of the letter is correct in saying that The Moody Bible Institute ought to take a constructive, forward view of these things in the various denominations. It not only ought to do so, but thank God, it has always done so, and it is doing so today with results unprecedented in its history.

The Moody Bible Institute is not undenominational, but interdenominational. It believes in the denominations as necessary agents for the promotion of the gospel of Christ in this age, and would regret their merging into any form of organic union other than that mystical one of true believers in Jesus Christ. It would beware of the seductive slogan that the horizon of Christian vision has extended today beyond the narrow limits of denominationalism, believing that those limits are much broader than any organic union possibly could be.

The Moody Bible Institute stands for the unity made once for all by the Holy Spirit, and of this unity it is a happy demonstration in the personnel of its board of trustees, its faculty, and its student body.

In this respect it meets the demand made by some of the advocates of the other kind of union, in that it is "a visible unity," "one that the world can see" as a witness that the Father sent His Son Jesus Christ into the world.

The Moody Bible Institute is deeply sympathetic with the warm spiritual tone of this letter and stirred by its buoyant outlook. And it feels assured of the truth of its prophecy that if the spiritual life of the churches is quickened, if intercessors are multiplied, if young men and women hear the call of God to Christian service, and if Christian stewardship is developed, there will be a demand for the training of new recruits at its hands such as it has never witnessed.

Our prayer is that this may speedily become true.

Business Is Business

Or, Laying Up Treasure In Heaven

By the Late Bishop William R. Nicholson, D. D.

A New Year Message

> "LAY not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal.
> "But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal.
> "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."
> Matthew 6:19-21.

"Business is business." So have I heard it said, and the meaning is that business is master, and all other interests must fall into the rear. Well, the sentiment is good, provided the business is entitled to this pre-eminence.

The motive of all businesses is amassing of treasure. Except we are gaining something we cannot be content. Man is an intelligent, self-conscious locomotive; evermore he must be going forward—getting on, arriving, starting again, enriching, or he does not fulfill his nature. Wherefore, that any business is supreme depends on the kind of treasure it seeks to lay up.

What Is Your Treasure?

Of multitudes of hard workers the treasure is money. Of the politician the treasure is reputation and influence, or in some instances the good of one's country. Of the scientist the treasure is the fascination of studying nature's forces and the pleasure of applying them to the economies of society. Of the mass of mankind the treasure is the getting somewhat to eat and drink and wherewith to be clothed.

But of such treasures none is of supreme importance, because none of them can satisfy the soul and be its chief good; and therefore such businesses are only inferiorly important.

On the other hand, the Christian's treasure is peace with God, the tasting of His gracious personal presence, and the assured certainty of blooming and fruiting in sympathetic oneness with God through endless ages. This is the treasure supreme; it does satisfy the soul; it is the good without which all else is but a mockery of good and beyond which there is no higher good.

With the Christian also then, business is business; it dominates all other businesses and marshals them at its word of command.

This business is what Jesus speaks of in the text. He calls it the laying up of treasure in heaven. And what we are concerned with is the process of the laying up. How may we amass treasures in heaven?

I

What the Laying Up Means

The laying up of treasure on earth is not the laying up of treasure in heaven. The two things are discriminated strongly and sternly. "Lay not up," but "Lay up." The one is not the other. On this point it is needful to be positive and urgent because men are apt to think differently.

Let a man have gathered some considerable amount of treasure, be it money or reputation or what not, especially if he has not been unmindful of benefiting others with it, and even though he may have done nothing toward laying up treasure in heaven, the thought common to him and others is that somehow he will not be without treasure there. Against this conclusion the Lord Jesus is clear and overwhelming. The laying up of treasure on earth is not the laying up of treasure in heaven.

But is the one the total exclusion of the other? May not the two go on side by side? If not, how shall the Christian be enabled to eat and be clothed, and do his share in the work of human society? Of necessity every one is concerned to have something of treasure on earth. Nor does the Lord mean to say otherwise. "The workman is worthy of his hire."

Why then, does he seem to shut off all earthly gains? Why does He say, "Lay not up treasures on earth"? For emphasis he says it, just as we do at times. "Don't laugh," you say to some one, "but attend to what I am telling you." You do not mean that he must not laugh at all, but only that he must not let his laughter divert him from the urgency of what you are saying.

Are Any Earthly Treasures Permissible?

So the Lord says to us, "Lay not up treasures on earth, but lay up treasures in the fruity clusters of heaven: let not the affairs of this life absorb you unduly; work at your callings, make money, get reputation, get influence, get pleasure, for all these things are in your path, and climb over them you must; but do not give them your chief attention, look beyond, leap the stone walls with the fleet foot of heavenly pursuit, and disdain to be caught in the fallen rubbish around you."

The great truth is that the laying up of treasure here is not the laying up of treasure there. Let us not forget it. No one whose horizon is the getting enough to eat and drink, or the making of money, or the spending of it upon his own gratifications, or the gaining of reputation and influence, or the enjoying of intellectual pursuits, or the helping of the poor, or the diffusing of knowledge, or the advancing of the community in comforts of living,—no one, the measure of whose aim is simply this, or whose controlling personal interests go not beyond this can by any possibility be laying up treasure in heaven. He puts the cart before the horse, he turns things upside down The five-cent piece of earth's attractions he holds so close to his eye, the great luminary of heaven is shut off from view. And while having no riches in heaven, his riches on earth moth and rust shall corrupt, and thieves break through and steal. Jesus says it.

II

Its Starting Point

The starting point of the laying up of treasure in heaven is the being already in possession of treasure there—you cannot make riches in heaven except you are already an owner of riches there. Being an owner, you can then go on to become a larger owner.

We know how it is in the affairs of this world. A man works out a fortune by reason of having at the start some money on hand, a very little it may be, still something to begin with; a nest-egg he calls it. With that he trades, and on and on, he lays up thousands and tens of thousands.

There are those, indeed, who started with nothing, and made for themselves their first dime; but no such exceptions are possible in the working out of a heavenly fortune. We are by nature sinners, we are guilty, we are condemned; we can no more, by exertions of our own, lay the foundation of enlarged wealth in heaven than we can wield the prerogative of God and pronounce our own pardon. We must have possessions in heaven to begin with, else no possessions can we lay up there.

You will say then, where is the opportunity for me? Spiritually without a penny, having no treasure to begin with, am I not hopeless?

What We Begin With

Now consider this, that the treasure in heaven which each one of us must have to begin with is an inheritance. An inheritance belongs to a child. Only become a child of God, and at once you have riches in heaven: you have inherited eternal life. "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven."

They that are begotten of God, the children of God. Who are they? They that have believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, who was wounded for our transgressions, who shed His blood for the remission of sins, with whose stripes we are healed. Every such believer, born of the Holy Ghost, is a child of God, and heir of God, and a joint-heir with Jesus Christ. He has inherited heaven itself. His is the tree of life in the midst of the paradise of God. His the hidden manna and the white stone. His the white raiment. His the New Jerusalem. His a seat with Jesus Himself on His throne. All this is the gift of God for Jesus' sake the moment one becomes a child of God. Already a millionaire in the riches of heaven, the way is now open for him to become a billionaire.

Then, believe on Christ, cast away self-righteousness, embrace the Saviour as your atonement and righteousness; at once you are born of God, and therewith you have the inheritance, and are equipped for your gospel work as a spiritual merchant. In no other way can you begin to lay up treasure in heaven.

III

The Process Explained

We may now observe the actual laying up of the heavenly treasure.

The process is this: Being at peace with God, the Christian's every good work, defective though it be, is accepted in the merits of Christ, and set down to his account. It is not that his good works are rewardable in their own right, for good as they may be, they have many imperfections; but his person having been accepted in Christ, the imperfections of his good works, in honor of his personal redemption, are forgiven, and in infinite grace the works are accredited to him in the book of life and so goes on increasing his estate in heaven.

Thus you see how it is, that except you already have treasure in heaven, you cannot lay up any there.

Now, some works of a Christian may not be good, works that are not done for the honoring of God in Christ, works that are as "wood, hay, stubble," and the fire shall burn them up. Such works bring no reward, contribute nothing to his wealth in heaven; in fact, are a loss to him, although himself, as a true believer shall be saved.

But every work of a Christian done for honoring God in Christ, works that are as "gold, silver, precious stones," shall abide the scrutiny of the day of the Lord, and all their imperfections, being forgiven in Christ, shall bring special rewards.

A cup of water to a disciple in the name of a disciple shall have its reward. Our very confidence in God, if sustained amid surrounding distractions, "hath great recompense of reward."

What Good Works Are

"Give to the poor," said Jesus, "and thou shalt have treasure in heaven," but instantly adding, "And come and follow me," the almsgiving availing nothing if you are personally severed from Christ, even though you "should give all your goods to the poor."

If you lead souls to Christ, you "shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

If all manner of evil is said against you falsely for Jesus' sake, "great is your reward in heaven."

And if, giving all diligence, you "add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness love," these things shall enlarge your store in heaven by a vast percentage of your present wealth there.

How rich, in the great day of the Lord, shall be Paul, and Peter, and John, and Luther, and Calvin, and Knox, and Wesley, and a multitude of our missionaries, and many a poor unnoticed saint, and many a devoted worker, man or woman, in the membership of the churches!

But are we sure that our comparative poverty even in heaven shall not be a sight to behold?

IV

The Urgent Motive

Finally, our text closes with the words, "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." This is said for enforcing the command to lay up treasure in heaven, "for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

The expression "where your treasure is" implies that, if it is anywhere, you know it to be there. A treasure unknown, or, what is the same thing practically unthought of, is as though it were not, so far as any influence of it is concerned. But if you know of it, if you realize it, your heart will be enlisted, the impulsive powers of your soul will be stimulated.

What is here taught then, is, that if the Christian would do his best in laying up treasure in heaven, he must keep in mind the fact of his already having treasure there, he must cultivate the scriptural assurance on this point.

"We know that we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." This assurance rouses to action. The heart clings to its treasures and is wide awake to all means of increasing them. Then the soul is more intent on resisting the world, overcoming selfishness, repelling temptation, pleasing God.

If we really believe that we are rich in heaven and are growing richer, we become more than conquerors through Him that loved us; for, to reverse the common adage that seeing is believing, the gospel truth is that believing is seeing and seeing is feeling and feeling is the victory.

As Christians, we need to have our treasures habitually in mind, to think of them vividly, to count them over, and, as well as we may, sum them up. This is heavenly-mindedness, the spirit and power of divine service.

Think of What You Have

Some Christians think only of sheer duty, and are lost in the mazes of mere duty questions; as if a man lost in the woods should keep his eyes on the ground to find his way out, instead of also looking up at the sun whose refulgent movement blazons the way homeward. Duty is good, but God would illumine duty with the sunshine of the glory.

Oh, ye Christians, claim your inheritance, and claim your grace-given privilege of enlarging the inheritance, and you shall have but little perplexity as regards the what and the where of duty.

Some Christians feel that, in their unworthiness, it were presumptuous to think of themselves as possessors of such wealth in heaven. "If I can only squeeze in at the gate," they say, "and sit down in an obscure corner, I shall be content!"

That is mock humility. So says not God. So says not the redemption in Christ Jesus. So say not the promises. Christ Himself is our worthiness, and our very business as Christians is to be laying up treasures in heaven.

The Christian Is Not a Machine

Some philosophers tell us that we should serve God without regard to the gain it may bring us. But who is a philosopher like Jesus? And He says, "Lay up treasure in heaven."

A regard to the will of God perfectly consists with a view to the recompense of the reward. If not, the Christian is nothing better than an intelligent machine, grinding out the corn in the hopper, but with no taste of the bread he is producing, no sense of accumulating good.

Not only does Jesus use the idea of treasure as a motive, He enforces it with power. "Moth and rust," He says, "corrupt the treasures of earth, and thieves break through and steal, but moth and rust do not corrupt the treasure of heaven, nor thieves break through and steal." Behold the superiority of these latter; therefore lay up treasure in heaven! Do it with all your might, do it heartily.

And to this end recognize your present wealth there and also the wealth-making character of your Christian life; for then, "forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before," you will "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Now of all that we have said this is the sum: Dream not of heaven except you have come to Christ. Only there can your treasure begin. But come now.

And ye that have come, and already have treasure in heaven, and are charged with the gracious privilege of realizing a great percentage on that treasure, ring out amid the world, ring out in answer to the flesh, ring out in repulse of the devil, clear and high above the surrounding din, the decisive words, "Business is business!"

"My Times Are in Thy Hands"

By J. L. Love, Toronto, Canada

I

"MY TIMES are in thy hands."

That means my future. The elevator I use daily has a card with this inscription on it, "Visit Our Safety Deposit Vaults." Far down in the basement is a steel-clad room where I may deposit my will, securities and other valuables where they will be safe from the fingers of thieves and fires. Hundreds of citizens use that room to guard their possessions. There lies much of their future.

The psalmist had a safety deposit. His future was in God's hands. The treasure of his days was laid up where moth and rust could not corrupt nor thieves break through and steal. Each morning the Keeper of the treasure vaults handed the depositor a sealed package—the new day. In it he found God's plan for him for that day. He never worried over imagined calamities. No tremors shook him because of premonitions of coming disasters. He slept soundly at night secure in the knowledge that the morrow and its issues were safely locked away in the vault of God's keeping. In the morning he visited in prayer the safety deposit vaults and received the gift of a new day from the Keeper. That it was a good day he knew, for it had been stored away for him by One who made all things well. It might not suit another, but it was framed by a loving mind and heart to meet his particular needs. In it nothing was lacking for body, mind or soul. He had tasted and seen how gracious the Lord was and he knew that his God would supply his every need.

Not only tomorrow, but the day after, and the day after that, were all deposited in that all-wise, all-safe keeping. Many or few, the days of the future were stored away in God's hands, safe from corroding care, to be given out one by one until there came that great day when God would no longer draw upon that little vault of earthly days, but would give His trusting servant the day of all days that ushers in the day eternal.

Need one marvel that the psalmist wrote: "I shall not be greatly moved?" To human frailty at its best there must come "fightings without and fears within," hesitations, passing tremors, even doubts. But he was not "greatly moved." Shaken a little and for a moment, his morale and faith were restored when he remembered, "my times are in thy hands." He acknowledged God in all his ways and God directed his paths, planned and preserved his days. It is never written, "I will restore the years that the locusts have eaten," of him who says: "My times are in thy hands."

II

"My times."

That means the present. The difference between the impecunious, improvident man and the child of God is that the former lives from hand to mouth and the latter from hand to hand—from God's hand to his. Many are so constituted that the future seems barely to exist for them. They live in the present. All their problems and vexations and worries are dated "now." They have no foresight. They are experts with the microscope but have no use for the telescope. The petty troubles of the hour obsess them. Their vexed and nervous imaginations inflate the mole hills into mountains. Engrossed in the immediate need of meeting their own emergencies, they have no time or inclination to lighten the burdens of others, and thereby to lighten their own.

The mistake these people make is in trying to carry their day themselves instead of letting God carry it for them. Rather than accept His offer to be their burden bearer, they shoulder the load themselves and to their pack they add many unnecessary items of baggage. When God prepares the daily load it is reduced to a minimum; when we prepare it, it is over-weighted.

Today, this hour, is in God's hands. For me, its problem will not be greater than I can solve, or its task than I can undertake. God adjusts the burden to the back. "My times are in his hands." Day by day, hour by hour, minute by minute, God's love is a lamp unto my feet, a staff in my hand, a song on my lips. Each task grappled with in His strength is a tonic to nerve me for the next. He leads and trains step by step. We are not led suddenly a year ahead of the present, but we get there, one day following the other. "I witnessed a beautiful and touching incident illustrative of the early lessons which make the peril of the future occupation familiar to a child from his cradle, in a little scene on the banks of the Douro," writes a traveler in Portugal. "A fisherman and his wife stood at the water-side, opposite a deep and dangerous spot. Their child, a boy of about a year old, was already habited in the costume of his future life, that of a sailor, the trousers tucked up above the child's knees. Leading him towards the river's brink, the mother purposely wetted his tiny feet. He was alarmed, and clung to her. With soft and affectionate caresses, again and again she led him to the water, until the little imp, emboldened by her encouragement, ventured down alone, and, only just able to walk, tottered unsteadily to the stream. I trembled at the risk; a few feet farther and the water deepened dangerously. But there was no cause for fear. Guided by a watchful eye, the mother's hand was ever ready to catch the little scrap of infant humanity, just in time to save it, and to render my half-uttered exclamation unnecessary.

"What is she doing?"

"She is drawing out his fear!" was the reply.

There is an even tenderer, surer hand that guides our earthly way, "drawing out our fear." "My times are in thy hands." Today is God's. He gives it to us with its task, and with it the needed courage.

III

"My times."

That means the past. What can we do with the past? Nothing: we cannot even forget it. It is irrevocable. On its pages are the puny triumphs and the glaring errors; the little virtues and the consuming sins. Wood, hay, stubble—What can we do with the past? Little beyond turning to its warning beacons, or rather its smouldering ashes of withered hopes, and reading there of what might have been.

But if we have placed our times in God's hands—our past, as well as our present and future—what then? Then, the past can no longer haunt us. If in Christ we have sought and found forgiveness for sin, the past no longer has dominion over us, and no "dead hand" can reach out from behind to lay its clammy hold upon us. If our times are really in God's keeping, because we believe in Him in whom past, present and future exist, and who has borne the load of our sins, the old life with its errors of commission and omission is swallowed up in the sea of His love, as a stone sunk in the ocean. Strange and wondrous alchemy of God, the crimson of His blood has washed away the crimson of our guilt!

"My times are in thy hands." The past no longer torments. The present cannot deceive. The future fails to terrify. He has given us the morning star, the star that knows no setting; that ushers in the new, the better, the unending day.

The Love of Christ Which Passeth Knowledge

By Rev. R. P. McKim, Rector, St. Luke's Church, St. John, N. B.

ST. PAUL is here (Ephesians 3:19) giving expression to a wish for some of his dear people, which he frankly acknowledges cannot be granted. It will take to the last day of eternity to know fully the love of Christ, but the getting to know it is a delightful experience.

Everything Jesus said and did, when He was here on earth, was for the purpose of showing people how much God loved them. It was a huge task. St. John tells us, that if all the things that Jesus did were to be written, even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. There are more books already in the world than any man can read, were he to do nothing else. It will take a whole eternity to read the book of the love of Christ.

It Is a Yearning Love

God made heaven a place of happiness. Everything that can help to make people happy, God put into heaven. God wants people to be happy, that is why He made heaven. God knows what will make people happy and nothing will be left out of heaven, that will make it a place of delight. The angels are happy there. Saved sinners are happy.

For thirty-three years, God parted from the Son of His love while Jesus went to seek and to save that which was lost. He called it the "Parable of the Prodigal Son," but I think Jesus would have called it the "Story of the Father's Heart of Love." The boy, who wanted to leave home and go where he could spend his money. But, Oh, how his father's heart yearned over him! Every day he would look wistfully along the road; perhaps his boy would come back today. How he prayed to God that he would! Nothing else interested him; he cared neither for prices nor markets. His boy was away in the far country and he wanted him home. With passionate love, he yearned over him.

It Is a Sympathetic Love

He came. I am so glad that Jesus did not content himself with standing in that high and holy place and calling to me to climb the steep ascent and join Him there. I never could have done it. But instead, He came to where I was. He lifted me up out of the horrible pit and the miry clay. He put my feet on the rock and He gave me a song to sing:

"In loving kindness Jesus came
My soul in mercy to reclaim
And from the depths of sin and shame
He lifted me."

It Is a Winsome Love

How He wanted people! The first public word He said was, "Come." When the mothers would have brought their dear children that He might bless them, those wonderfully wise disciples would have stupidly sent them away, but Jesus put out His hands to them and said, "Let the little ones come to me." When He sat down to eat with publicans and sinners some of the very righteous folks were surprised. "Does He mix with that sort of a crowd? We wouldn't." But He was quite willing to be known as the Friend of sinners. He wanted them. Some men, who had never done anything wrong in their lives, arrested a woman, who had behaved very badly. They brought her to Jesus that she might be stoned to death. Yes, she deserved it, so let those men, who had never sinned, carry out the sentence. But they slunk away. Jesus wanted to forgive her and save her, and He did.

A man had a growing business and a happy home, but an unfortunate habit fastened itself upon him and was dragging him down. He saw his danger and said, "I will have to get away from this thing." He thought it would help him to join some lodge or benefit society, so he applied. But the members of the lodge did not want a derelict among their number. He applied to several societies, but was black-balled by them all. In much discouragement, he was going along Fulton Street, New York, one day, about noon. Hearing the sound of singing coming from an open door, he passed in, and there, in the noon-day prayer meeting, he found that Jesus wanted to help sinful men and would receive them.

It Is a Seeking Love

In that story of the Good Shepherd, he portrayed Himself. There were a hundred sheep in the flock, and every night the careful shepherd counted them, as he put them in the fold. One night the count told only ninety-nine. Ah well, one is not much to lose out of a hundred. Only one per cent, that is not so bad. The undershepherds go home to rest, but the shepherd himself, turns back on the mountain path, seeking the lost. How eagerly he hastens, lest the night shadows fall and he be late. How intently he listens. Is it the wind rustling the leaves? Is it the far-off cry of the jackal that he hears? He listens again. It is the bleating of the sheep that is lost. He knows its cry and will soon reach it.

It Is a Forgiving Love

When those four men brought their friend to Him, they hoped he might be healed of his paralysis. Jesus gave infinitely more than they either asked or hoped. "Son, thy sins be forgiven thee." His body healed of the disease might have given him forty years of strength and satisfaction, his soul forgiven meant an eternity of happiness.

It Is a Vicarious Love

There in the garden He lies prostrate, praying in soul agony for those who do not pray for themselves. Presently, the armed band comes with lanterns, torches and weapons. Rough hands are laid upon Him, and he is brought to the judgment hall. False witnesses swear lies against Him. The soldiers mock Him and spit upon Him. They smite Him with their hands. They scourge Him. They stretch him upon the cross, and through those dear hands, that had so often been laid in kindness upon sick folks, those hands that had broken the bread to feed the hungry ones, they struck cruel nails. Those feet that toiled so many weary steps, seeking the lost ones, were fastened to the wood, and then they lifted that cross with its quivering, suffering burden, and with rough strokes, staked it to the ground.

He lived without a home on earth, that you and I might have a home in heaven. He wore a crown of thorns, that we might wear a crown of life, because He loved.

Have you let Him love you?

INTERCHURCH WORLD TRAINING CONFERENCE

The Training Conference under the auspices of the Interchurch World Movement was held December 8-10 in Chicago. The general themes were: "The World in the Light of Today"; "The Objectives and Goals of American Protestantism"; "The Marshalling of the Forces in the Accomplishing of Common Objectives." Morning, afternoon and evening sessions were held, and there was excellent attendance. There were delegates from the city of Chicago and the northern sections of Illinois, representing practically every denomination of Protestants.

A few days prior to Nov. 1, all the orthodox churches of Japan, led by the Presbyterians, were in humble prostration before God in a day of fasting and prayer for revival. And more or less similar movements in other nations are under way. Every country in the world is today a Macedonia crying up to God, "Come down and help us! Come down and help us!!"

Two Baptist Homilies

Love Unfeigned

By Rev. J. W. Weddell, D. D., Pastor, First Baptist Church, Oberlin, Ohio

"LET love be without dissimulation," is the way Paul puts it in Romans, 12:9. This is simply saying that you cannot fool people. If you are going to do anything for them, religiously speaking, you must love them, and really and truly love them. You cannot pretend to love them. You cannot force yourself to love them, you must really in mind and heart love them, i. e., if you are going to do them any good.

A Christian brother was telling some of us the other day how to build a men's class, and for that matter how to build a church. He said, "You must go out after men, you must bring them in and set them to work, and then keep on going after them, and bearing with them, and taking care of them, and binding them to yourself and the Master's service."

But you cannot do that without love, and without a great deal of it, and love that is the real thing—L-O-V-E.

Love Gets Men

Suppose you go out to do a bit of mission work. You think it would be a nice thing to do. You get your hall ready in some needy field. You prepare your program, distribute your tracts and announcements, ring the bell and then sit down to wait for the people to come. But they do not come.

Perhaps a girl or boy looks in and then runs away, perhaps some one throws something through the window. You look out and then they are on the opposite corner jeering at you.

What are you going to do? This is what you will feel like doing—giving up the work as a bad lot and saying, "They are no good, they are not worth the trouble. I am done!"

Yes, that is what you will say, unless you love them. If you love those people, you will sing your song, and pray your prayer, and put out the lights, and go home and smile on the few that are standing about. Then go back the next night and try it again, and keep on trying till you get them. Why? You love them.

Or take the other side of it. Put yourself in their place. Here comes a man who wants to help me, but I am not anxious to be helped. I feel that I am about as good as he is, perhaps a little better. I like my surroundings, I like my way of living and you appear and try to make a change, I naturally resent it. I do not like the way of it or the implications of it.

You and I are going to have trouble now, or which amounts to the same thing, we are going to let each other severely alone, unless, mind you, I discern something, something not even at once or on the surface, but gradually making itself known. It is, that you love me, strange to say that you really care for me, and want to have something to do with me and for me. Now, at last we get together, and begin to make a start at doing something. Love has conquered.

Without Love, Disgust with Work

But what if you were appointed to do it and you feel that you have to do it? You have heard that we must love the people with whom we work, so you proceed to work it up, you assume to love them, you mildly pretend that you love them. What will be the result?

One result will be that the people will find you out before very long, and leave you and your work high and dry. Another and more serious result will be this: you will yourself become so worried and disgusted with the work that you would rather die than go on with it.

Is there any punishment in this world greater than to put a man into the ministry of souls who has not got it in his heart first of all? It is cruelty to animals, unbearable, no one can stand it long.

You must love your work to do it with any spontaneity and efficiency. Love is essential. Love, genuine love, is the motive power and God does the work.

DR. DIXON'S SUCCESSOR

The Metropolitan Tabernacle of London, England, has invited Rev. H. Tydeman Chilvers, of Bethesda Chapel, Ipswich, to become pastor. Mr. Chilvers is said by the British Weekly to be "a strict Baptist, but is evangelistic in his preaching and stands for the doctrines that are traditional to the Tabernacle." He began his work in London sixteen years ago. He is forty-seven years old, is physically vigorous and eloquent. It is well known by most readers of The Christian Workers Magazine that the Metropolitan Tabernacle was the church over which Charles Haddon Spurgeon was pastor for many years and which he made famous, and where, until seven and a half months ago, Dr. A. C. Dixon, a former pastor of the Moody Church of Chicago, was pastor for some years.

A GREAT CHURCH

The First Presbyterian Church of Seattle, Wash., held its Golden Jubilee Anniversary December 7-14. This is the largest Presbyterian church in the world, reporting 6,390 members to the last General Assembly. Dr. Mark A. Matthews is the pastor, and is editor of a magazine advocating premillennial doctrine.

The Bible Confirmed by Science

By Charles L. Huston, Vice President, Lukins Iron and Steel Co., Coatesville, Pa., and Chairman, Permanent Committee on Evangelism, Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

An Address at The Moody Bible Institute

I FEEL a timidity about speaking before such a company of Bible students because I know you want everything straight from the Book, as I do too. I stand absolutely on the integrity of the Bible as God's revelation to man.

I want to read what might be called a text, 2 Peter the third chapter beginning at the third verse:

> "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts,
> "And saying, where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.
> "For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water:
> "Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished:
> "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."

I want your attention particularly to the verse which says that the scoffers claim that all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation, but are ignorant that there was a great change at the time of the Deluge, and that there will be another change later on, through God's manifestation in another way.

The Nebular Theory

The Scofield Bible says that there is a great gap between Genesis 1:1 and 1:2; and apparently a great cataclysmal change took place in the period represented by that gap—a great change bringing in chaos and disorder. That may have been in connection with the fall of the angels—I do not know. But for my own heart this view is not necessary to satisfactorily account for the difference between Genesis 1:1 and 1:2.

May I go back a little? How many of you have studied astronomy? The scientists pretty generally agree on the La Place nebular theory of the formation of the material world and heavenly bodies, the theory that they were originally one great big bulk of glowing fire mist called "cosmic dust."

They found by studying the laws of matter, that the substance of the bodies in the heavens was not different from the substance we have on earth. They found that by means of an instrument called the spectroscope, which they use for analyzing the spectra of the rays emitted by these bodies.

We have chemical analysis for determining what substances are made of, which is further confirmed and amplified by spectrum analysis. By heating substances, such as sodium and letting the light go through a prism and splitting it up, they can tell the substance which the light is transmitting by certain light and dark lines and their arrangement; and in this way the spectroscope has enabled them to determine what things are made of, and the condition in which the substance existed.

In the same way they have studied the light that has come from the sun and moon and the stars, and they have found the same peculiar characteristics in the path of light from the stars, the sun and the moon, that they have from substances in the earth, showing that there are the same substances there as in the earth. That has given evidence that all was originally one mass of matter.

It has been noticed that the sun, and the planets and their satellites practically all revolve on their axis in nearly the same direction, and that each planet revolves around the sun in its orbit in very much the same direction, indicating that there has been some common motion. which has determined the direction of each.

They have decided, also, that old question as to why the heat comes from the sun. Of course, they do not really know, but in theorizing they have concluded that the sun is contracting, and by this process of contraction generates heat, which is thrown off into surrounding space, of which the earth gets a fractional part.

How It Works

Let us suppose now, for illustration, this operation to be reversed and the sun (not looked upon as a solid mass of matter, but a large volume of glowing fire mist) expanding, going back to original conditions until it would take in the earth and all of space, all the solar system at least, bringing all matter into one mass of fire mist, then we would get back to its original condition as shown in Genesis 1:1–3.

And, by the way, I want to say that people have speculated as to whether any of the other planets are inhabited, but scientists have concluded by spectroscopic study of the light that comes from those planets that the earth is the only inhabited planet. So we do not bother about that; we have our Saviour who came to redeem fallen man on this earth, and that is all we are concerned about. Scientists agree that there are no men anywhere else but on the earth.

But to go on with what I was saying: suppose the whole material world were in a great expanded condition, something like the sun, but much more so, and motion having begun, as described in Genesis 1:2. Now according to all laws of matter where motion takes place toward a common center, it always revolves, as can be actually seen by pulling out the waste plug in the bottom of a round basin full of water, the water moving toward the center to escape through the opening will revolve.

Just so this large mass of matter in beginning to move and contract would begin to revolve around its common center, and being influenced by actual attraction of its different portions, would at first revolve very slowly as one entire mass, but the outer portion, so largely extended, would be the retarding element and the middle portion nearer the center of revolution would incline to revolve more rapidly.

By and by a stage would be reached when, by inequality in the process of contraction there would come a separation between the outer shell or ring and the inner portion, the outer part seeking to go slowly and the inner more rapidly, the outer shell continuing to revolve around the same common center for a time until some disturbance or inequality in this process of condensation would occur at one point, and the ring would rupture at the point where its mutual attraction was weakened and all rush around into one mass, somewhat like a globe.

In this shape it would continue to swing around the larger mass upon its original center, something like a satellite, but in addition this would begin to revolve upon its own axis or center, then the process would be continued, the original mass separating out and throwing off in succession a number of rings forming into globular masses which would in turn revolve upon their own axis or center and swing around the original center at different distances from this center.

These successive globular masses would form separate constellations, or solar systems, they in turn by the same process separating out and throwing off similar globular masses, which would become planets, and the planets in turn throwing off similar globes, which would become satellites, all swinging around the original common center, and each revolving on its own axis, planets swinging around their own center and the satellites in their orbits around their particular planets.

All this while they would have been gradually becoming more and more condensed until they became solid, or semi-solid, or molten globular masses, these globes gradually cooling off until we come to the present condition in which we find our earth, at a temperature such as it could be inhabited by man and so that water could rest upon its surface. This theory is now further confirmed by modern astronomic photography.

Professor Lewis' Testimony

I heard a scientist, Professor Henry Carvel Lewis, in a lecture at Haverford College, speak upon this subject, who said he felt it was much easier to conceive of matter being brought into existence in a gaseous state than in a cosmic dust or fire mist state, because, all matter exists in three principal forms, solid, liquid and gaseous, depending upon conditions of temperature and pressure under which it exists.

Take water for instance, at one temperature it is ice, at a warmer temperature it is liquid, and in a very heated condition it turns into steam or gas. Steam is invisible. The vapor which we see escaping from a steam pipe is not steam but finely divided mist not completely gasified, and in the process of cooling or condensing from the gaseous invisible form it first becomes visible as mist, and as these particles of mist collect together they become drops of rain which fall by their attraction to the earth.

Now, while in this great mass that I have been seeking to describe as set forth in Genesis 1:3, the fire mist stage, scientists go no farther back in their arguments, yet we go farther back to the condition which Professor Lewis described, the gaseous stage.

In the eleventh chapter of Hebrews we learn that by faith the worlds have been framed by the Word of God, so that the things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

A little girl being asked by somebody what the world was made of, said, "God spake, and he made the world out of 'speak.' " That is what I believe. God spoke, and here was this great bulk of gas.

Now we can imagine looking out into this great space, and looking at the inner face, you might call it, of the material world; and God said, "The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep."

There, to my mind, is the explanation of Genesis 1:2, the material world just created, without form, and void, and darkness upon the face of it. And the next thing is, the Spirit of God moved upon it, breathed over the face of the waters.

Let me go back a moment to Genesis 1:1: "In the beginning, God." "God" there means a triune God. It is a plural noun, showing more than one and more than two—the triune God; "created," a singular verb, that is, trinity acting in unity.

How Many Heavens Did God Create?

"In the beginning God created the heavens" —that is, two heavens. How many heavens are there in Scripture? Three. In the beginning God did not create the third heaven, because that word "heaven" there is dual, that is, more than one, but not more than two.

Paul says in second Corinthians twelve that he knew a man caught up into the third heaven, and he also uses the term "Paradise" in that same connection, showing that Paradise and the third heaven are equivalent terms. So the first heaven and the second heaven were what God created at that time, when he created the heavens and the earth.

Now coming back to the story, darkness was upon the face of the deep, and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

The law of gas we know something about, and we know that the first thing that would take place in the change would be the cosmic dust period. If you take a gas, rich in substances, and forcibly compress it, the first change you notice is the glowing dust—little particles of incandescent, solid matter, which appear in the mass of gas. So that the next thing is, "And God said, Let there be light," a universal glowing light before the sun and moon were set as "light holders."

And then, "God called the light day, and the darkness he called night, and there was evening and there was morning, one day."

Not a Day of 24 Hours

Let me say I think we will all agree that that does not necessarily mean a day of twenty-four hours. It means a creative period. God speaks of a period, often. as one day. The whole seven days of creation are spoken of as one day, for instance, in the second chapter of Genesis and the fourth verse: "These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made earth and heaven and every plant of the field, etc."

People are puzzled as to which came first. the plant or the seed; or whether the hen came first or the egg first. God tells us which came first, for He says, "In the day that the Lord God created every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew, for the Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not a man to till the gound." He made the plant first. He says so in so many words.

Now let us go back to the time when the earth was formed, and when there would be the cooling off process, when it would be cool enough for man to inhabit the earth, and then we have the next stage in the first chapter of Genesis: "And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters."

I happen to know, being a mechanical engineer, that steam is lighter than air at the same temperature. If you take a closed vessel equally filled with air and water and heat it until you generate steam, the steam will rise above the air, and there will be water (steam) above and water underneath, with atmosphere in between. This then is evidently the condition which existed at that stage of the earth's development—waters on the earth, waters above the earth and atmosphere in between. Thus the waters or watery vapor above the atmosphere would have the effect of receiving the sun's rays and distributing them over the earth and making a uniform temperature.

This may be observed in the winter time that whereas upon a sunshiny day the snow may be melting on the south side of the house and freezing on the north side of the house, yet on a cold day it will be melting just the same on both sides of the house. So the waters above the firmament would make a uniform temperature all over the earth; no winter, no summer, no change, no chilling influence making rain; no heat, no winds, no rain, no rainbow, "for the Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth and there was not a man to till the ground, but there went up a mist from the earth and watered the whole face of the ground and the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." Genesis 2:5–7.

And that would be the condition—a condition very conducive, very favorable to animal and vegetable growth, so that men lived prior to the deluge nearly a thousand years. With the exception of Enoch, every man in that period lived at least eight hundred years.

And so we have that condition existing upon the earth, men fresh from the hand of God with powers of mind and body which we have little conception of now, not developed from the monkey or anything of that kind, but fresh from the hand of God; but, later under sin, getting weaker and weaker instead of stronger and he is condemned, as Mr. Sutcliffe said, "To dig, dig, dig, getting weaker and weaker until he finally falls into the ground he is digging in."

Why Man Must Work

And so we come to the next stage—man's sin coming in, and Adam being told that now with the sweat of his face he would have to get his food from the ground which had been cursed with thorns and briars.

And by the way, in these days we must recognize that as long as we are on this earth that is what we are told to do. If a man will not work, Paul says, do not let him eat. And if some will not till the ground others have to sweat for them. If we are going to get anything out of this old ground we have to work it.

So sin became active in the world, and extended out into the whole universe, the material universe, in a way we can hardly conceive—like the tongue, which "is a little member, yet setteth on fire the whole course of nature, and is set on fire of hell."

So we have this disturbance until the time came a little later when God in Genesis the seventh chapter said that He was going to change that condition of things.

In the seventh chapter of Genesis we find the first description of the flood—rather the sixth chapter of Genesis, where the fountains of the deep were opened up. The first stage of condensation that would occur in that water vapor above the atmosphere would produce a little vacuum which, as steam engineers well know, would make a disturbance that would be followed by a great rush of condensation or raindrops, falling upon the earth, causing the Deluge, until the whole earth was covered with water—not simply a local storm, but all over the earth. "In the same day were all the great fountains of the deep opened up, and the rain was upon the earth forty days."

And we find that "all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing, all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land perished." The fish did not die, but everything that depended upon the breath of air did die.

There is abundance of confirmation to prove that condition of things. In the southland of our own country are enormous deposits of bones of animals which probably died during that period.

But, after the waters above the firmament had all condensed into rain and fallen upon the earth then the clear sun would shine through, making one part of the earth, where the sun was shining, warm, while the other part, being protected from the effect of the sun's rays, would be cold. At once we would have a change to the present condition of things, where the sun shining upon a spot of the earth heats it up, causing the air in that spot to rise, bringing in air currents from surrounding regions and a general disturbance in atmospheric conditions, where, a warm moist current, moving into a location where the conditions are cooler, it is condensed into rain and a local rain storm occurs.

The Rainbow and Its Meaning

Such then was the condition upon the earth at that time, rain drops falling upon the earth for the first time, and the clear sun shining upon drops of rain causing the rainbow, and we find it split up into the different colors of the rainbow, as light does when it shines through a prism.

We find a condition at the end of this period, when Noah came out from the ark and offered his sacrifice, a condition of temperature which was altogether different from that which had existed before. While the earth remaineth, God said, "seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease" Genesis 8:22.

There had been no heat or cold before, and there had been no summer and winter before—all even temperature, uniform temperature. And I am inclined to think there was no clearly defined day and night before the flood. God knew of course, but it was not manifest to man as to when each day ended.

And we find also, going on into the next chapter, that God says, "And I, behold, I establish my covenant with you, and with your seed after you; and with every living creature that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beast of the earth with you; from all that go out of the ark, to every beast of the earth. And I will establish my covenant with you; neither shall all flesh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood; neither shall there any more be a flood to destroy the earth."

And God said, "This is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you and every living creature that is with you, for perpetual generations: I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth."

I do not think I have ever failed to think of it, since I have noticed this verse, that if those great masses of vapor were there above, there could be no rainbow; and because there is a rainbow it is a proof that there is nothing up there to produce any flood.

It is not only a reminder of God's promise, which is sure in itself, but of the absence of certain physical facts which would be necessary to produce a flood; and because there is no vapor up there, there can be no flood.

To my mind that gives to me a great and rich and joyous realization of God's tokens, that they are not empty tokens, but have a deep meaning.

Every one of God's tokens has a deep, rich and full meaning, and the more we find out about it the more we rejoice in His Word and His revelation to us.

When Fear Came In

God blessed Noah and said to him, "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth." That is the same command as He gave to Adam, so far; but He said something that He had not said to Adam: "The fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth, and upon every fowl of the air, upon all that moveth upon the earth, and upon all the fishes of the sea; into your hand are they delivered."

After God finished the creation, He pronounced it all good. Now fear and dread are not very good. He gave Adam commission over the things of the earth, and everything was good until man sinned. Now, when he transgressed, everything is not good. God is giving him authority now to eat animal flesh. Adam was only to eat the fruit of the land, the fruit of the trees bearing seed, and so on, food from the vegetable kingdom. Now he is given authority to eat the animals, and that is why there is fear and dread—because man has that authority as man now needed the additional strength from animal food to resist cold and heat and wind.

"Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things. But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat." The life of the flesh is in the blood. Men thought they made a great discovery when they found that the life of the flesh was in the blood. For a long time it was thought that the life of the flesh was in the nerve centers, but God told away back there in Genesis what the life of the flesh was.

Now we find ourselves in a condition where nature is at war with itself, different parts of nature at war with one another, lightnings striking down trees, burning up trees, and some men have undertaken to say that a God of love could never have created things that way. Well, He did not create things that way. He created things in harmony, but man has brought sin into the world, and we find in Romans eight, beginning at the eighteenth verse, "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who has subjected the same in hope. Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption to wit, the redemption of our body."

What We Are Waiting For

That is what we are waiting for—for the resurrection of the body, when God is going to restore all things, but "the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Rom. 8:21).

So He goes on to say that the creation groans, we groan, and "the Spirit Himself groans" in this present condition of things.

But God is not going to leave it that way, in this groaning condition. In His own time, and when Jesus Christ comes from Heaven—and I think there are signs that it cannot be far off.

When Jesus Comes

I rejoice that we have this truth before us, and let us see to it that we shall have confidence in Him and not be ashamed at His coming.

When He comes there will be a change and all things shall be restored, and you can find in the eleventh chapter of Isaiah where the animal creation is changed—the fear will be taken away, and the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

That is the time that is coming, when He shall have restored all things. That is the restoration of the animal creation—peace in the animal kingdom.

In Isaiah fifty-five, he foretells the restoration of the vegetable creation. He tells us that instead of the thorn there shall come up the fir tree and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.

Then all the trees of the field shall clap their hands, because this awful groaning condition has been done away with. The whole creation will be restored to the original condition in which God created it, and with which He was pleased. At that time there will be real rest for the people of God—they will again keep the Sabbath.

There are plenty of places in Scripture that confirm that, but this one text I want to call your attention to again, the one in second Peter, because he says people are trying to prove there is no change coming, and they are saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" They are wilfully ignorant of the fact that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water: whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished. The order of things then was all destroyed in judgment by the overflowing with water, but the next time the judgment will be by fire, but the heavens and the earth, which are now by the same word, are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly man.

According to His promise we look for a new heaven and earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness; and we rejoice by His spirit, having been born not of corruptible seed but of incorruptible, by the word of God, in the absolute safety of the soul that is hid with Christ in God, and cannot be disturbed by Satan nor any of his agencies or agents.

The Rainbow Around the Throne

Just one matter I wish to speak about in the early part of Revelation, chapter four, where there is a rainbow round about the throne.

What is the color of that rainbow? Emerald.

Why should that rainbow be green? What colors make up the rainbow now? There are seven: violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange, red; but the three primary colors they represent are the red, yellow and blue.

What is green composed of? Yellow and blue, no red in it.

Why should there be no red in that rainbow round about the throne? What part of His human body did our Lord leave behind Him? He left behind Him His blood, shed it on the cross; and that rainbow round about the throne is minus the color red; so that when He comes again, He comes again apart from sin to bring about the consummation of salvation.

There are three tenses to our salvation: First, from the death penalty of sin, by the substitutionary death of Jesus Christ; second, kept saved day by day, by His resurrection life in us; and then caught up from the very presence of sin, by His coming again, and the restoration of all things.

To my mind it is a beautiful study, the whole thing, and simply confirms more and more the absolute accuracy and truth of this blessed Book, which it is our privilege to search out and to appropriate the things that belong to us.

Wise Hints From a Business Man

By Charles A. Tawney, President, First National Bank, McKeesport, Pa.

WHEN we talk or think about business enterprises we always think of our great industries, such as the United States Steel Corporation, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, Standard Oil Company, our big railroad companies, our banks, etc.

But do you realize that there is really only one important business in the world, and that is Christian gospel work? All other enterprises will in time pass out of existence, but the gospel work which our Saviour came to establish is the most important and most worth-while on earth. All other enterprises are side issues, although important, most of them, to satisfy our temporal needs and comforts, but the gospel work is to satisfy our spiritual needs which stand for time and eternity.

When Jesus said, on the shore of Galilee, to those four fishermen, Peter, Andrew, James and John, "Come, and I will make you fishers of men," he then and there established the foundation of the gospel work which will continue to grow in power and influence until it encompasses the world. Jesus said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (Luke 2:43).

I wish to congratulate men and women who are devoting their time, thought and energy to this work. May God's richest blessings rest upon each of you in your part of the work.

Concentrate on Your Work

The apostle Paul said, "This one thing I do" (Phil. 3:13). Of all the followers of our Master I believe Paul worked the hardest and showed us the best example of hard, earnest, faithful, persevering and self sacrificing work in the service of spreading the good news of salvation through faith.

Concentrate all of your thought, energy, time, and attention upon this greatest of all work entrusted by our Master to you. The sun's rays do not burn until brought to a focus, and any Christian worker will not be doing his best work for our Lord until he can say, as Paul said, "This one thing I do."

No Side Lines

After you have enlisted in the Lord's work do not take on any side lines. If there is any business in the world where there should not be any side lines it is gospel work. In 2 Timothy 2:4 Paul says, "No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life, that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier."

After you have fully enlisted in the work do not take on any selling of town lots, or farms, or stocks in gold, copper, motor, oil or gas companies. I know some Christian workers who have gotten into serious trouble and complications in this manner, and it is also contrary to the Scripture above mentioned.

Stick to the Bible as Your Textbook

If there is anything that should make a true Christian angry it is to hear about a minister who, instead of giving his congregation a message from the Bible, will give them a story of a fishing or hunting trip, or read some poetry, or from one of the latest novels. What the great majority of Christians, and unsaved persons also, expect—and need in the house of God is an old-fashioned sermon from the Bible.

Pray for Recruits for the Work

I wonder if the members of our churches realize the importance of the work and remember it and the workers in prayer? Jesus told us (Matt. 9:37, 38) "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

Today, with many millions of unsaved people in the world, do you not think there is still a mighty service ahead for all Christian workers?

The King's Business Requireth Haste

When any earthly king or potentate sends out a messenger to attend to some business, he expects the messenger to make haste and attend promptly to the business entrusted to him. Our heavenly King expects His messengers to attend to His commands and commissions with all proper haste. "And David said unto Ahimelech, And is there not here under thy hand, spear or sword? for I have neither brought my sword nor my weapons with me, because the king's business requireth haste" (I Sam. 21:8).

Nearly all the Christian workers I know are working hard, but I have known some who worked as if they had about one hundred years of this life ahead of them, working without any spirit, energy or activity. My guess is that if some of these persons were engaged in secular work, and they were not giving their jobs any more attention than they are giving to the great work of our Master, they would be dismissed very quickly.

Demands Our Best Service

Jesus sets us an example in this respect (John 8:29) "For I do always those things that please him." Always strive to do your work in a way and manner which will be well pleasing unto the Lord.

Every honest and faithful employee in secular work strives to please his earthly master; how much more important that every pastor and Christian worker should earnestly strive every day to please Jesus Christ!

"And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not" (Gal. 6:9).

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord" (I Cor. 15:58).

Blasting at the Foundations

Or, the Latest Apostle of Spiritualism

By Rev. Charles Frederic Sheldon, D. D., Perry, Iowa

APOSTASY has enrolled a new apostle. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, the creator of Sherlock Holmes and all his tragic doings, is writing a series of articles that must please the powers of evil mightily.

He has made a most wonderful discovery, and arrived at the conclusion that there is "life after death." Strange that this man of brilliant mind has only just learned that. Where has he been that he never read that wonderful statement made by our Lord at the grave of a man who had been dead four days: "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live?"

But we might forgive Sir Arthur for all his blindness and ignorance as to the future life if he were ready now to own Jesus Christ as Lord. The charge against him now is that with blasphemous zeal he begins to attack the very foundations of the faith.

The Offense of the Cross

In a recent article he undertakes to show why it is that so many people have become alienated from the church. He says "that people do not believe the facts as presented to them to be true," "their reason and their sense of justice are equally offended," "one can see no justice in a vicarious sacrifice, nor in a God who can be placated by such means." "Above all many cannot understand such expressions as, 'Redemption from sin,' he tells us, or 'Cleansed by the blood of the Lamb,' and so forth."

What a confirmation of Holy Writ is the blatant talk of this man! How it brings to mind the words of Paul to Timothy: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, etc."

Conan Doyle's Fall Upward

Listen further: "So long as there was any question of the fall of man there was at least some sort of explanation of such phrases; but when it became certain that man had never fallen—when with ever fuller knowledge we could trace our ancestral course down through the cave man, and the drift man, back to that shadowy and far off time when the manlike ape slowly evolved into the ape-like man—looking back on all the vast succession of life, we knew that it had always been rising from step to step. Never was there any evidence of a fall."

What better possible proof of the truth of that Scripture: "The God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not," and how true that word in 2 Thessalonians 2:11, 12, "And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

Listen again: "But if there were no 'fall,' then what became of the atonement, of redemption, of original sin?"

"If there were no fall!" Has he never read the first chapter of Romans? Has he never considered the tremendous weight of evidence written in the very nature of fallen humanity?

Belittling Christ's Death

"Too much seemed to be made of Christ's death;" "it is no uncommon thing to die for an idea. Every religion has equally had its martyrs; men die continually for their convictions. Thousands of our lads died in France." "In my opinion, far too much stress has been laid on Christ's death, and too little upon His life." "It was His most wonderful and uncommon life and not His death that is the true center of the Christian religion."

How skillfully Satan is thus using such instruments as Sir Arthur to transfer the emphasis from the atoning death of Christ to His life, for well Satan knows that to do this is to make men lose their souls.

Discussing the fortunes of man after death he says with regard to eternal punishment: "Hell, I may say drops out altogether, as it has long dropped out of the thoughts of every reasonable man. This odious conception, so blasphemous in its view of the creator, arose from the exaggerations of oriental phrases, and may perhaps have been of use in a coarse age where men were frightened by fires as wild beasts are scared away by travelers."

Hell Knocked Out

"Hell as a permanent place does not exist. But the idea of punishment, of purifying chastisement, in fact of purgatory is justified by reports from the other side. Punishment consists in the fact that grossest souls are in lower spheres with the knowledge that their own deeds have placed them there, but also with the hope that expiation and the help of others will educate them and bring them level with the others."

"In this saving process," he continues, "the higher spirits find a part of their employment, as Miss Julia Ames says in her beautiful posthumous book, 'The greatest joy of heaven is emptying hell.' "

But why continue this? Did ever mortal man emit such falsehood and nonsense?

Put over against this the words of Jesus Christ: "He that believeth on the Son hath life, and he that believeth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

Oh, let every true preacher in these days be fearless in utterance. Sin is real, Christ's death is the center of the Christian religion, hell is real, the coming of the Lord is real.

Satan has many tools like this famous writer of detective stories and will doubtless turn many away from the truth, but the Son of God will come forth and destroy them with the breath of His mouth. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Revolution Everywhere

By Rev. Will H. Houghton, New Bethlehem, Pa.

IF WE could stand far enough away from the world to see it all at a glance we would see a seething, struggling mass of men. The great conflict we called the Great War is over but even the most optimistic would not say the world is at peace.

I am not now referring to the several physical small wars going on, but of a struggle that is mental rather than physical—internal rather than external.

The human bosom is the battlefield and thoughts are the weapons of war. The Great War has left in its wake a great mental war as men are divided as to settlements, future alignments, armaments and kindred subjects.

The prohibition reform is supposed to be accomplished, but there is a great mental battle going on against it.

The relation of capital and labor is the subject of controversy.

Men are lining up on one side or the other and no one would dare say that this mental warfare may not become physical.

Tangled Thinking

These are the days of tangled thinking. Purposes, ideas, motives, and ideals, are all clashing. The printing presses are kept hot with ammunition for this struggle.

As we see all this commotion one word is brought to our attention,—Revolution.

Mental revolution is in the air. Men are turning, consciously or unconsciously, against established things. In every relationship of life some of the commonly accepted opinions have been thrown on the scrap heap during the past two or three years. Any method or idea that is old is under suspicion. There is a general opinion that if an idea is to be useful to this generation it must be new. There is revolt, not organized as yet, against authority of any kind.

Lawlessness is the spirit of the times. Analyze every expression and you will find it is unwillingness to be controlled. Tradition, custom, precedent—all are discarded. Governmental authority is questioned. Moral standards are laughed at. The church is a useless, though harmless, institution that has served its day.

Labor and Capital

There is revolution in the industrial world. On one day in New York City there were more than two hundred strikes going on at the same time. . Bolshevism is a word we use in daily conversation. Socialism we hear whispered and frequently shouted. It is not my purpose to discuss the ethics of this conflict. I only want to call attention to the fact that revolution obtains in industry.

In past days many rich men have been lawless and they need not be surprised that the poor man has become so. The rich man frequently has been beyond the law. It is not very long ago when to steal a loaf of bread meant a cell in prison, but to steal a railroad meant a seat in Congress, so they said.

There is something wrong when a small proportion of the people own nearly all the wealth and natural resources of a country. The wrong, however, is beyond the reach of legislation.

Systems are wrong only because men are wrong at heart. If most of the men who are today calling for social justice were placed in the shoes of the much hated trust magnates they would be just as merciless. Witness a labor union organizer leaving an estate of over a quarter of a million of dollars! He capitalized the principles of others.

I know a labor union that recently went on record as opposed to compulsory arbitration. The reason they gave was that every man has his price and their own representatives would sell them out. Is not this a frank confession of wrong at the root of things? Selfishness reigns. Selfishness is sin and men are sinners. The heart must be made right before there can be any proper adjustment of external affairs.

There is much to be said on both sides of this question but it is only one of the symptoms of the disease and not the disease itself.

Children and Parents

The spirit of lawlessness is in the home. There is practically no discipline in the homes of America. Each child is a law unto itself. The modern rendering of Paul's familiar injunction might well be, "Parents obey your children * * * for this is right."

In the majority of our homes if there is a voice of authority at all it is the voice of the child. Children choose their own clothes, their food, their friends, their studies, their amusements. Parents have little or nothing to say about the life of the child. The parent furnishes the house to live in, the clothes to wear, the food to eat, and the money for good times. That is the limit of parental responsibility and power. As the result of all this there is a grand rush for amusements on the part of the children. School is a jail sentence between two good times.

If you think I am overstating the case ask any school teacher, a real teacher, the teacher with an ideal, the teacher who realizes the child is not only making a life but fixing a destiny.

I am acquainted with a school where the children went out on a strike because of the hours. It was settled by compromise instead of a shingle. If the children do not learn in the home of a voice that speaks with authority how can you expect them to obey the voice of the national government?

Sex Obsession

There is revolution in the realm of morals. Did the world ever see such a casting aside of moral restraints? Things that a generation ago were considered shocking are now accepted as commonplaces.

In a certain city recently there were more divorce suits than marriage license applications filed during the week. A city detective says he knows a hotel in which are more than forty concubines of wealthy married men. None of these things are considered shocking. There seems to be a notion that it is the right of people to order their own conduct. If they please themselves there is nothing higher.

Moral Restraint Gone

If the testimony of ministers in war service is to be believed the soldiers made a general protest against moral restraint on the part of the church. Let me quote a paragraph from a minister:

"We of the churches, in our pleasant day dreams, love to picture Zion calling the world to righteousness. It is a shocking experience to discover that our most virile manhood strenuously objects to our whole idea of what righteousness is. The soldiers seriously think that the character the church seeks consists of little more than abstinence from a multitude of pleasurable things * * * the churches often stand, in the imagination of the soldiers, insisting on a lot of prohibitions which the army as a whole regards with sheer contempt; thinks it narrow, negative, piffling; passes it up as unworthy of a real man's ambition to observe. * * * The righteousness of the saints is little more than anti-drink, anti-dance, cards, theater, smoke, profanity, and all fun on Sunday."

If this is a fair statement of the feeling of the men of our country then there is a protest against authority in morals. The popular cry is to eliminate all rules of conduct. The demand for the revision of church discipline in some denominations is another evidence of this spirit.

I have before me a secular publication with an article on conditions in a big city. It was not written by a minister or anyone interested in religious things, but by a business man writing as an observer. I quote:

"New York is infected with the bacillus voluptuosis. The entire city is obsessed with an excess of sexual individualism. The popular sex plays on Broadway, the new dances, the attire of the women, the flood of sex literature, these things are simply manifestations of this sexual obsession. The principal topics of conversation seem to be sex and sexuality.

"The dance craze shows this in a virulent form. I have seen dances in all parts of the world, but I have never seen any more lascivious than that popular today. Ten years ago such dancing was only tolerated in places of evil repute, today it is accepted as part of our life without a blush."

This writer goes on to ask a question and give an answer:

"Why is New York suffering from this excess? Because all existing social barriers have been broken down. New Yorkers have no restraint of any kind. There is no restraint of tradition because there is no tradition. There is no restraint of religion, because there is no religion. The individual is placed above everything else."

This is lawlessness in the realm of morals. Men will not be controlled. They insist as individuals on setting their own standards. Even the sin-once called scarlet has faded to a faint pink.

The Authority of God Challenged

There is revolution in the realm of religion, and this is the root of all the other forms of revolution. Back of all the unrest and spirit of revolt is a question as to God and the church. The right and ability of God to speak in the affairs of men is questioned, and an authentic revelation of the plan and purpose of God is denied.

What a day of religious opinion this is! New religions on every hand. The newer, the more they attract. The more of the old they discard the more palatable in the mouths of the multitude. Witness the latest novelty of the novelists—Spiritualism. It offers a new revelation, an easier way, and no moral restraint.

In the day the church preached salvation from sin, proper conduct was a by-product. The church produced it without effort. For a decade or two the church has been preaching ethics, but instead of pulling the world up to her standard she has had to lower her standard to meet the world.

As long as the church preached deliverance from sin it stood alone, but when it gave attention to ethics it found competitors. There are other systems of ethics beside the Christian, and that is the reason eastern religions are getting a grip on this country. The church would have continued unique, if it had continued preaching only a crucified Christ as a Saviour from sin.

The modern expressions of revolution are the natural result of the lawlessness in the hearts of men. Men are rebels against God. You are not of the intellectuals if you believe that, but the Bible teaches it and so does history.

What a commentary on human nature is the fact that in the day we are boasting of our discovery that the universe is controlled by law we, the proud discoverers, become lawless! We have the strange spectacle of a lawless world in a law ordered universe. How He that sitteth in the heavens must laugh at our reasonings and our conclusions!

Arraignment of the New Theology

Questioning authority begins with questioning the authority of God.

I charge the New Theology with being responsible for much of the present revolutionary spirit. You slipped into our churches and robbed the people of their faith in a God who would some day bring men to judgment. You made God stand for judgment at the bar of human reason. You scoffed at the idea that God could give a revelation. You made of the prophets a set of men who were dreamers and irresponsibles. You made of the Saviour a deceiver who fell in with the Messianic hopes of the Jew, not because they were true, but because they were popular. You make of the Bible a book of fables and myths fitting any interpretation. You accept as the word of God only what suits your fancy and reject the rest. You have inquired into the authority of God and doubted the authority of His word. That spirit has percolated down to the mass and as a result everything established is questioned.

Thank God! there is in the church a splendid company who have not bowed the knee to Baal. The true child of God has nothing to fear in all of today's threatenings, for God is not surprised at these happenings. He is not dependent on the plans of our church conventions for a solution. There are no emergencies with Him and He has an answer to every world problem. He has quiet for all our unrest.

The hope of the world is the Man the world rejected, and it is for us to hold up that Man as Redeemer and Saviour and leave the rest to Him.

Searching for Truth

By Will Hope

The author is an English student in the Correspondence Department of The Moody Bible Institute. Being paralyzed, he is able to use his right arm only from the elbow; nevertheless, he studied and wrote the answers to the fifty-four lessons in the course in synthetic study of the Bible. This poem is a resume of that study.—Editors.

"Oh, show me Truth!" the seeker cries,
As up to heaven he casts his eyes.
"I search, and search with all my mind,
And yet, O Lord, I fail to find
Abiding Truth!"

"Truth! Truth!" a still small voice replies
"Why do you search where wisdom lies?
Know you, O man, that Truth is God,
And man, by wisdom, knew not God,
So knew not Truth.

"If you would have that which you seek
Climb not yon wisdom's cloud-capped peak,
But search My Word with lowly mind.
There, only there, do seekers find
Abiding Truth!"

I took the Book I once had spurned,
And in surprise its pages turned.
Was this the key to ope the door,
That I so oft had passed before,
In search of Truth?

A radiant light fell on the Book,
A thrill of joy my body shook.
The light! it scattered all my night.
My soul, it cried out with delight
"Oh, blessed Truth!"

The joy! No words or pen of mine
Could ever fully it define.
My soul just lay before the throne
Quivering with joy its Lord to own,—
The God of Truth.

Again that still small voice I heard,
"Now, son of man, take you My Word,
And hold it up to all mankind,
That they, too, may have light to find
The Way of Truth!"

What of the Seminaries?

By Rev. Leslie E. Dunkin, Rochester, N. Y.

I WISH to express my appreciation of the value and the work of The Christian Workers Magazine. It is to me a bright and shining light in the midst of darkness. I place it next to my Bible in my reading, and each week I read six other religious papers and magazines and have access to many more. It has a clear ring to it that nothing else possesses except the Bible.

I am a premillenarian and yet I am attending a theological seminary in the East. When one considers that all the seminaries in the East are postmillennial this statement may seem inconsistent.

The reason I did not go to The Moody Bible Institute first was because I was a premillenarian. I wanted to broaden out so that I could look at the question from a neutral point of view, if possible. After doing this then I could decide which point of view I would accept throughout my ministry.

When I came here I did not believe in a verbal inspiration of the Bible. I have been giving myself to the study of literature which teaches postmillennialism and also that one can cut out first one place and then another of the Bible and call it uninspired and full of errors.

What has been the reaction upon my own life? It is this: I have become a believer in the verbal inspiration of the Bible and hold more firmly to the premillennial beliefs.

This is not due to intellect but to the fact that my life has been held before the Almighty in prayer. The glory goes to Him.

What the Seminaries Teach

The question then arises, "What of the seminaries?" The seminaries, to a large extent, are neglecting one of the most important elements in the training they are supposed to give. They are producing men of intellectual power, but void of the fire which caused Paul to say, "I am become all things to all men, that I may by all means save some."

They teach men to criticize the Bible (a thing that is not wrong if done in the right spirit), to know the Bible as a literary, religious, and historical gem, to write essays on religious and semi-religious subjects, and to frame a re-statement of the atonement of Jesus Christ in harmony with the Christian moral and religious consciousness and the outcome of historical investigation; but they fail to instill into the men a passion for souls.

In most seminaries the greater part of the time is spent on a critical study of the Bible, while one short course, hardly running half a year, is all that is devoted to evangelism.

The churches do not want critical essayists. They want men filled with the Holy Spirit and fired with a passion for bringing men to Christ as well as men of intellectual power.

In conclusion let me relate a conversation I had with one of the upper class-men during my first week in the Seminary. We had just returned from a prayer-meeting where I had given my testimony that nothing satisfies but Jesus, and he said, "Dunkin, never again during or after your seminary course will you be able to give such a clear ringing testimony."

I replied, "If I do not it will be because I have neglected prayer."

THE DOCTRINAL STATEMENT OF THE WORLD CONFERENCE ON CHRISTIAN FUNDAMENTALS, MAY 25-31, 1919, IS AS FOLLOWS:

1. We believe in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as verbally inspired of God, and inerrant in the original writings, and that they are the supreme and final authority in faith and life.
2. We believe in one God, eternally existing in three persons, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.
3. We believe that Jesus Christ was begotten by the Holy Spirit, and born of the Virgin Mary, and is true God and true man.
4. We believe that man was created in the image of God, that he sinned and thereby incurred not only physical death, but also that spiritual death which is separation from God, and that all human beings are born with a sinful nature, and, in the case of those who reach moral responsibility, become sinners in thought, word, and deed.
5. We believe that the Lord Jesus Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures as a representative and substitutionary sacrifice; and that all who believe in Him are justified on the ground of his shed blood.
6. We believe in the resurrection of the crucified body of our Lord, in His ascension into heaven, and in His present life there for us, as High Priest and Advocate.
7. We believe in "that blessed hope," the personal, premillennial and imminent return of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.
8. We believe that all who receive by faith the Lord Jesus Christ are born again of the Holy Spirit, and thereby become the children of God.
9. We believe in the bodily resurrection of the just and the unjust, the everlasting blessedness of the saved, and the everlasting, conscious punishment of the lost.

The addresses at this Conference will be issued in book form at the price of $1.50, and may be ordered from the Conference Committee, J. D. Adams, Executive Secretary, 1723 Spring Garden Street, Philadelphia.

Manipulating Gospel Music

A Letter from Rev. Henry Ostrom, D. D.

TO The Christian Workers Magazine:

What I say to you is not intended in the least as sharp or harsh, or as born of disappointment or disgust. Rather, I notice a tendency, which I think you can aid greatly to correct. The tendency is toward the greater manipulation of gospel music so as to render it undevotional and wearisome.

The average song leader is more professional than the average spell-binding Chautauqua word—hemorrhagic public tantalizer.

Emphasis may well be placed upon the following, if my observations are reliable.

1. "Cut out" expressions like, "You folk of this town." The leader will find it hard enough to gain the best recognition (not to say fellowship) if he ignores that he is an imported quantity.

2. "Cut out" the commenting after nearly every verse. Cease to project one's own personality so persistently into the effort. Give the Holy Spirit an opportunity.

3. "Cut out" this "sing it for me again. You sang it for me as well as I ever heard it sung," etc.

4. "Cut out" this custom of asking the men and women to compete or of asking one section of the house to sing one part and another the other part, before the leader has been long enough in the place to gain the confidence of the people. Later, when established in a good record with his crowd, this might be a benefit occasionally.

5. "Cut out" this smack of teaching a "singing school" or even, as is so evident occasionally, this smack of leading a kindergarten.

6. Why tell the people "We are putting in good talent here, we will interest you?" Is the effort a concert? A phrase or so uttered in commendation, however, would not conflict with the spirit of humble service which God can use.

7. When singing a prayer, let the people alone. Lead them by singing. What would one think of a preacher saying (after a man in the congregation had prayed one minute), "now that is very good, but you can do better (for me) the next minute?" How absurd!

8. Do not begin the service with a jarring tune. Let the pace be set for the service in the use of a tune which has a majestic swing, assisting time and tempting people to a sense of assurance.

9. Do not encourage the singing of a song like "Hallelujah for the Cross" while the people remain seated.

10. Familiar church hymns are needed and often needed, but it seems better to choose some less familiar (though good and rich) in such services as revivals and Bible conferences. The very familiar ones allow the people to strike their accustomed gait, and robs them of the conviction that something special is now on, unless the company is made up of the more active Christians.

11. Look out as a leader if you dare imitate for a line or two the careless half-hearted singing of the people with a view to prodding them into zealous effort. You may do it, if they know you well, and if you are sure they are with you, but otherwise do not try that trick. The game will kick. That can be done in the class room much more safely than in public meetings.

12. The cornetist. If he plays solos, let him choose the oldest, cherished tunes. Thousands of people do not know many of the modern and popular ones.

13. Every gospel singer should make a specialty of knowing by heart the hymns and tunes of our grandfathers. For instance, "Lord, in the morning Thou shalt hear, My voice ascending high," "Come ye sinners poor and needy," "O think of the home over there."

14. It cannot be imperative or impressive to always begin a service with a "Song Service" (whatever that may be). I think the devil wants to destroy the power of gospel song. And this custom of arranging a regular song drill at each service robs the effort of spiritual power and nourishes religious dissipation. Occasionally let there be a prayer service first. Occasionally arrange the song service at the close of the public service.

15. When have you known a gospel singer to break down and weep while singing about Calvary? The music-box experts are having too great influence. In gospel work we need "uncanned," present-moment, spiritual power.

16. Lecturing the people, exhorting, nagging, jollying—all these are of little worth to say the best of them. Nothing makes singing, like singing.

I have been blessed greatly through the efforts of the gospel singers, but, because I want our Lord to have the best, I humbly offer these suggestions.

Very sincerely,

Henry Ostrom.

At the meeting of the International Committee of the World Alliance for International Fellowship held at the Hague early in October, fifteen nations were represented and German pastors conceded that Germany had acted immorally in attacking Belgium. They, however, believe that their people are caused great suffering through the blockade unfairly. From all that could be learned, it seems that the German people are still uninformed as to many of the things that have stirred the outside world during the war.

World's Christian Citizenship Conference

Copious Excerpts from the Official Report

THE Third World's Christian Conference for World Reform, November 9-16, closed with a great consecration meeting in the Syrian Mosque, Pittsburgh's greatest auditorium, morning, afternoon and evening meetings being held, frequently turning away hundreds from its sessions.

The labor problem was given prominence, not only in the addresses but in the discussions from the floor. One of the greatest labor meetings ever held in this country was that conducted on Sunday afternoon, and which was addressed by George W. Perkins, formerly associated with the United States Steel Corporation and a leader in great financial corporations; Dr. F. Herbert Stead, of London, England, warden of Browning Hall, noted for his activities in reform movements throughout all England; and Dr. Charles Stelzle, organizer of the Labor Temple on the lower east side of New York and for ten years in charge of the Labor Department of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.

Former Judge of the United States Supreme Court, Charles Evans Hughes, spoke to an immense audience on "The Antidote for Bolshevism," on one of the week nights, thousands being turned away from the Mosque. Mr. Hughes not only presented the legal aspects of the industrial situation confronting our country, but he made some practical suggestions for the bringing about of better relations between capital and labor. "I believe in collective bargaining through representatives appointed by the working men themselves," declared Mr. Hughes, but he insisted that the appointees of labor should be men of character who were opposed to lawlessness.

"Revolution and Religion in Russia" was presented by Dr. William Fetler, of Russia, and Dr. Samuel Zane Batten, Secretary of Social Service Commission of the Northern Baptist Church Convention, presented the report of the Commission on Capital and Labor, which was one of the most statesman-like papers on the labor question presented at any Conference.

Dramatic situations developed during the discussion on Mormonism. It developed that one of the "Twelve Apostles" of the Mormon Church was in the audience and quite a contingent of the Mormon sympathizers, and at the close of the address given by Mrs. Theodore Cory, of London, who presented the report of "The Commisson on Mormonism," and Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard, of Salt Lake City, who talked on the Mormon Menace, a request was made that the "apostle" be heard. He was finally given the floor and made his statement of defense of Mormonism. However, he admitted that the Mormons still believed in polygamy, although he declared that they did not practice it because it would be "contrary to the laws of the United States." He denied, however, that thousands of young girls were brought to Salt Lake City from foreign countries and were literally made "white slaves" in Utah.

Concrete instances were presented by Mrs. Shepard, and others, of young women being enticed from their homes abroad, and it was declared that many hundreds were awaiting the opportunity to secure transportation to Salt Lake City. While the "apostle" at first declined to answer the challenge that he wore the "secret garment" of the Mormons next his skin, the wearing of which implies the taking of an oath of treason, he afterward admitted that he wore this garment. The session on Mormonism was altogether the most exciting of any during the Conference. Addresses were given by Dr. William Thomas, of Switzerland, Dr. William Parsons, of Jersey City, Mr. Henry Peel, of Liverpool, Mr. William E. La Rue, and there were many spontaneous addresses from delegates from the floor on this subject.

The Conference on Immigration, for which Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, of New York, was responsible, brought out many interesting facts regarding the immigrants of America, and Dr. Gulick and those who spoke with him presented a program for the future with reference to the immigration problem. The rally of negroes in Carnegie Music Hall was very largely attended and not only at this rally, but during the Conference the colored question was freely discussed.

The All Day Temperance Celebration, beginning with the report of the World's Commission on Intemperance, by Dr. Edwin C. Dinwiddie, of Washington, D. C., and closing with the splendid appeal of Dr. Daniel A. Poling, was a day crowded with great speeches—among them those of Mademoiselle J. Merle d'Aubigne, of Paris, who talked on "Alcohol and the War in France;" Dr. John Thomas, of Cardiff, Wales; Dr. Homer W. Tope, on "America's Call for a Dry World."

Among the important features of the Conference were the down town daily noon-day meetings, held in the First Presbyterian Church, which were addressed by Dr. James A. Francis, of Los Angeles, California. The large auditorium was crowded every day and the audience overflowed into the chapel of the church.

Many prophetic utterances were made at the Conference and the speakers presented their arguments with perfect freedom and great clearness. Notable among this series of addresses were those given by Dr. Henry Van Dyke, who spoke on "The World That Is to Be;"

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, who, as already stated, spoke on "The Federation of Nations;" "The New Internationalism" by Bishop Matt S. Hughes, and "Christianity's Answer to the Present World Crisis," by Dr. Daniel A. Poling. Complete stenographic reports were made of all the addresses and it is understood that they will be put into book form by the National Reform Association, under whose auspices the Conference was conducted.

Well-Pleasing to God

By Rev. Philip Wendell Crannell, D. D., President, Kansas City Baptist Theological Seminary

FAITH is a jewel of many facets. It is the open hand that receives salvation, the grip that clutches the cable of divine power, the gate into the soul that lets the life of God in Jesus Christ flow in.

But its brightest facet is the fact that it pleases God; it rouses a thrill of satisfaction, of deep joy, in that infinite heart.

This "trustful and obedient reliance on God" pleases the sovereign and center of all, for it gives Him one more faithful and loving subject and satellite for His orderly kingdom and universe.

It delights the Great Artist, whose most splendid earthly masterpiece is a strong and beautiful human spirit; for such obedience, trust and reliance is at once the foundation, beauty, and pinnacle beauty of human character. Beautiful as Spring's white blossoms is the simple faith of a little child; and more beautiful still, as beautiful as the mellow autumn fruit, is the ripened faith of the mature Christian who has learned amid, and from, all earth's storms, to look up into that face, and say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him!"

It thrills the bosom of God, the Saviour, when He finds a man or woman who will thus "trust and obey," and lean; He rejoices more than over rubies. He is beholding the soul who will "give God a chance." He can do anything for that soul in spiritual grace and blessing, for nothing is shutting out His empowering life, and that obedient spirit can be exercised to any stretch of skill and power. Also He can do anything with that soul in His blessed conquest of the world, set him to hold any trench, to capture any fort, to compass any Jericho.

The Father Heart

But the heart that faith most pleases, is the Father heart. Three things any father heart yearns for, and the infinite heart yearns for them with an infinite intensity. It wants to be believed; and faith is the intellectual assent to God's truth, sweetly aligning itself with Him. It wants to be obeyed; and faith is the child's will getting into line with the Father's will, than which nothing could be more charming to see, or more delightsome, both for the Father and the child to experience. And the Father wants that son so fully to accept the fact of His strength, of His wisdom, of His love, that there is no place for a tremor in the heart. Some children can do that with "the fathers of their flesh," and why not we with Him? "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee because he trusteth in thee."

When the Sovereign finds a subject like that, and the Artist a "poem" like that, and the Saviour a believer like that, and the Father gets answering trust and love like that, how His great heart leaps! Does He get that thrill from me?

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE

The Scripture Gift Mission has undertaken a very large and far-reaching work in France, a work which French pastors and Christian workers have taken up very keenly, and all feel that it is a thing which France needs today. The idea is as far as possible to systematically place a Gospel in every home in that country. Much care will be exercised in the efforts, and all readers are asked to remember this special work before the throne of grace.

It cannot be done in a day. It is expected to take some years to be fully accomplished, but it is a scheme which surely must appeal to all lovers of the Bible. The cost will not be small, and the mission has asked for special donations, but surely if the Word can only be gotten into the homes of France it will be worth while spending much money. The ignorance in France regarding the Scriptures is appalling. Many have never heard the name Gospel, and have no idea as to what it is, or the message it contains.

It is hoped to form centers all over the country, from which the workers will radiate and thus reach the villages. A beginning has already been made in Paris, Marseilles, Nantes, Lyons, and other large towns, and encouraging reports come in from time to time.

Gifts for the furtherance of the work of distribution of the Scripture may be sent to the secretary of the American branch, Robert B. Haines, Jr., 119 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia, Pa

The Fifth Annual Conference of the Hebrew Christian Alliance

By Rev. Elias Newman

THE meeting place was the church of the Epiphany (Reformed Episcopal) in Cleveland, O., date, October 13-17.

Among the different speakers were Revs. S. B. Rohold, Maurice Ruben, Henry L. Hellyer, Joel Levy, A. R. Kuldell, J. H. Ralston, Joseph Flacks, J. R. Lewek, John L. Zacker, H. Zeckhausen, Daniel Rose, B. A. M. Schapiro, John Solomon, R. H. Spiro, A. Lichtenstein, Elias Newman, and others.

On Tuesday night Rev. S. B. Rohold, the retiring president, gave his interesting and appealing address on "Palestine and Its Needs." He spoke feelingly of his own experiences in the land of his birth, told in a very real way what he saw, and drew a realistic picture of the great need. He expressed gratitude to the British military authorities who did all they could to help him; to many of the missionaries, especially Rev. David Baron, the veteran Hebrew Christian missionary and Bible scholar, for their practical sympathy and assistance.

On Friday night, the last evening of the Conference, the newly elected President, Rev. Henry L. Hellyer, M. A., gave his great address on Russia. It was eloquent, interesting, and depicted vividly the sufferings of the Jewish people in what was formerly the Russian Empire. He also made a strong appeal in behalf of their evangelization. After the Friday night meeting over $5,000.00 was pledged toward the work of the Alliance in America, Russia and Palestine.

The retiring President, Rev. S. B. Rohold, was again urged for re-election but repeatedly declined and was presented with an illuminated address and resolution which referred to his past unstinted efforts and untiring zeal in behalf of the Alliance during the years of its existence.

The object of the Alliance is best stated by Article 3 of the By-Laws.

1. To bring together into mutual fellowship all Christian believers of the Hebrew race.
2. To endeavor to present to Jews, Gentiles and the church at large a corporate Hebrew Christian testimony.
3. To provide for the evangelical Christian churches of America an authoritative and reliable channel how best to serve the cause of Jewish evangelization.
4. To extend such practical aid to converts in distress as its officers may deem necessary.
5. To prepare, print and distribute Hebrew Christian literature.
6. To help to educate and send forth divinely called workers for Jewish evangelization.

The Present Task

1. To witness to the three and a half millions of Jews in America.
2. To evangelize the multitudes flocking to Palestine and to establish a Hebrew Christian colony in their midst.
3. The sending of suitable evangelists and missionaries to the seven millions of Jews in Russia, Poland, etc.

The officers and executive elected are:

Rev. H. L. Hellyer, M. A., President, New York City.

Rev. Maurice Ruben, 1st Vice-President, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Rev. A. R. Kuldell, 2nd Vice-President, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE CHICAGO CHURCH FEDERATION

At the recent meeting of the Chicago Church Federation Dr. Herbert L. Willett was re-elected president for the ensuing year. The budget of the Federation has been increased from $5,000.00 to $32,300.00. One hundred and thirty-five public meetings were held under the auspices of the Federation during the past year, with an attendance of about 100,000 persons. At the meeting of the Young People's Department of the Federation, Dr. J. Campbell White, the associate secretary of the entire inter-church world movement, spoke to some 1,500 young people.

The Berean Band

A Simple and Practical Way of Memorizing Scripture

By George V. Kirk

THE Moody Bible Institute is now the American representative of the Berean Band of London. It is an international and interdenominational movement to encourage the memorizing of salient portions of the Holy Scriptures, and was founded in 1905 by Mr. Charles J. G. Hensman, of London, who is its general secretary.

Two presidents are selected each year, one for Great Britain and one for America; the respective officials for 1920 being Rev. J. Russell Howden and Rev. James M. Gray, D. D. The list of vice-presidents included the names of many well-known Christian leaders on both continents.

The members of the Band are asked to commit to memory at least one verse of the Bible every week, although provision is made for those who desire to memorize more than one. The verses are carefully chosen, a definite subject being selected for each month, with the object of a cohesion of thought, and, as far as possible, a completeness of subjects in each year.

If fifty-two verses of such a character are accurately and permanently stored in the memory, what possibilities there are for the Holy Spirit to use His own Word to the glory of God in the upbuilding of Christian character and the extension of His cause!

The organization of Branch Bands is encouraged, and such groups may be formed by six or more members in churches, young people's societies, missions, schools, orphanages, families or groups of families.

A Braille Auxiliary has been organized which has the verse printed in that type and will supply them gratuitously, as far as funds permit, to all blind people who are willing to memorize them. There are also French, Spanish, South African, New Zealand and Chinese Auxiliaries, and one especially for schoolboys.

The Band publishes a paper, The Berean, which is issued quarterly and contains the news of the movement.

Membership in the Band does not involve burdensome obligations, but offers opportunity for individual effort that will improve one's self, help others and honor God.

The habit of memorizing the Scriptures not only causes a deepening of the spiritual life; but also gives helpful intellectual exercise, stirring the mind to activity and alertness, "For thy word hath quickened me." (Ps. 119: 50.)

As a verse is stored in the mind and recalled from time to time it becomes one's own in a peculiar sense, and new meaning and blessing are discovered in it.

What more delightful and beneficial influence could be brought into the home than that of the whole family uniting and competing in learning the Word of God. The verses planted in the minds and hearts of the children will bear fruit in the years to come, "some an hundredfold, some sixtyfold, some thirtyfold" (Matt. 13: 8).

Perhaps the failure to thus sow the Word in the past is responsible to a large extent for the neglect of the Bible in recent years. But the unrest and violence of the present time are causing thinking men and women everywhere to say that we must get back to the Bible, back to the old time religion of our fathers and mothers—or it might be truer to say of our grandfathers and grandmothers.

By enlisting in the Berean Band one joins the vanguard of the "back to the Bible" army, for it is not a movement to supplant Bible study, or to offer an excuse for not doing it; but rather to encourage and supplement it.

Not only is the memorizing of Scripture in itself Bible study, but there is nothing like it to stimulate an appetite for the Word. Surely, in these days that are emphasizing the uncertainty of the institutions of men we need to make our own such passages as, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away" (Matt. 24:35).

The Berean Band offers a definite plan for doing this and further information may be secured by addressing The Berean Band, care of The Moody Bible Institute, 153 Institute Place, Chicago.

STARTLING FACTS

Of the 500,000 people living within the corporate limits of Newark, N. J., 75 per cent are of foreign born parentage. The decline of Sunday-school membership in this district in the last five years was 2,600, with a corresponding loss in church membership. The population of Brooklyn has grown to 2,250,000 in twenty years. The Baptists in that city have only 200 more members than they had twenty years ago, and Methodists have no better record, and there has been an actual loss on the part of Presbyterians. These facts were brought out in a meeting held in New York City in connection with the installation of Rev. John Kelman, D. D., as pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, of New York.

I Believe in God

John 14:1, 8-10. Mark 9:17-24. 11:22.

"Believe in God." "Have faith in God." "If thou canst believe." "Lord I believe."

These are the dominant words in our Scripture lesson. The first three are the utterances of our Lord given by way of counsel, the fourth is the cry of a needy but trusting heart.

The greatest force in the world is faith, that power which, like the roots of a tree, grasps the unseen forces, the hidden resources, and utilizes them. Nine-tenths of all of our human problems are solved by a sincere and intelligent utterance from the heart of the words of our topic—"I believe in God."

This confession "I believe in God" indicates more than a mental assent to a proposition, or a repetition of the words of a creed, or an expression of belief in the being of God. It involves the deeding over of the life to God as to one who is to be trusted, always, everywhere, and for all things. The basis for this surrender and trust is the revelation of God in His Word, especially in the gospel of His Son.

"I believe in God" implies belief in His Word. Has God spoken? Yes, he spoke in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, and He has spoken unto us by His Son (Heb. 1:1, 2), and also concerning His Son (1 John 5:9-11).

Now what has he said? For the answer see 1 Corinthians 15: 3, 4 and Romans 4:25. Read these verses, then say from the heart, "I believe in God, I believe that He has put away my sin at the Cross, I believe in His pardoning grace, and in the wonderful provision that He makes for me in His Son, who was delivered up for my trespasses, and raised again that I might be justified. Yes, I believe in God.

"Moreover, I believe not only in God's pardoning grace but also in His providential control. He has said that all things work together for good to them that love Him (Rom. 8:28). I believe in God for this, I believe that He will, through providential circumstances, as well as by His Word and Spirit, lead me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.

"Furthermore, I believe in God that He will not only pardon and provide but that He will protect and preserve. He has spoken concerning this also. Kept by the power of God through faith (1 Pet. 1:5). Preserved from all evil (Ps. 121:7) and presented faultless before the presence of His glory (Jude 24). I believe in God for all of this.

"Finally, I believe in God's purpose and plan. I believe that He will carry it through to that glorious consummation promised in His Word, when His Kingdom shall come and His will shall be done on the earth as it is done in heaven. I believe that God is able and that God is faithful. I believe in God."

A Strong Character and How to Attain It

Proverbs 4:1-13

The book of Proverbs is fragmentary in character, its separate parts contain great principles and truths for the direction of the people of God on earth.

The first verse of our lesson is an exhortation to "hear" and "attend." It comes from a Father to His children. There are dangerous places along the way, hence the injunction to "stop, look, listen." There is a good deal of noise and haste and confusion. Many voices are calling, we hear that to which we listen, therefore, "hear" and "attend" the Father's exhortation.

Following this exhortation, there is some good counsel, culminating in verse 4 with the words, "Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom, and with all they getting, get understanding." Then in the remaining verses 8 to 13, the results of hearing and heeding are displayed. There is promotion and honor (v. 8), grace and glory, (v. 9), lengthened years (v. 10), enlargement and stability (v. 12), and life, the life that is life indeed (v. 13).

These are the qualities that make for strong, rich, character, they are the worth-while things. Who then would not seek for the root which produces such fruit, such enrichment, such glory? Yet strangely enough, the wisdom which produces these very qualities is ignored (see 1:20-25). Wisdom cries out continually to all who are going the wrong way, the broad way, the way of self-will, self-pleasing, self-exaltation, sin. Through conscience and inward constraint, through the Bible and the church, through good books and wise friends, through providential circumstances, wisdom cries in the words of 1:23, "Turn you at my reproof: behold I will pour out my spirit upon you, I will make known my words unto you."

The spirit of wisdom is the Spirit of God (Isa. 11:2). He it is who comes to abide with us when we turn to God from idols, to serve the living and true God and to wait for His Son from heaven whom He raised from the dead, even Jesus, who delivered us from the wrath to come (1 Thess. 1:9, 10). "The fear of the Lord," the reverential fear which leads us to turn to God, "is the beginning of wisdom." In the New Testament revelation, Christ is declared to be the wisdom of God (1 Cor. 1:24). A right relationship towards Him as Saviour and Lord is the way of wisdom for us now.

The attainment of a good and strong character is impossible apart from this right relationship towards the Son of God, and proper adjustment to the Spirit of God; for in the Son of God are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge (Col. 2:3), and through the Spirit of God alone, these treasures are made available to us.

There is a worldly wisdom which is often regarded as an important factor in attaining a strong character. Both in essence and expression, it is selfish, self-assertive, and self-exalting. It mistakes meekness for weakness. It cometh, not from above (James 4:15), but is earthly, sensual, and devilish. "We speak not the wisdom of this world" says the Apostle (1 Cor. 2:6), "but we speak the wisdom of God," the wisdom of God as seen in His redemptive work through Christ and which leads to that way of life which, in the judgment of God, is the way of wisdom and which shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

My Favorite Psalm and Why
Psalm 121:1-8

The 121st Psalm is a Psalm of trust. In the first two verses, the Lord's help is proclaimed, and in the remaining six verses, the Lord's help is promised. The Psalm begins with the contemplation of the creation, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills." Then comes the question, "Whence cometh my help?" Can it come from the things created? No, it must come from the Creator. This leads to a contemplation of the Creator Himself, rather than His creation. It is not the hills that is the source of help, but the Lord. "The Lord is thy keeper," "The Lord is thy shade," "The Lord is thy preserver." "He will not suffer thy foot to be moved." "He will preserve thee from all evil." "My help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth."

This does not imply that the contemplation or study of the creation is without profit but it does imply that the source of help is God Himself. Somehow we must find Him before we can find real help. Many an one utters rapturous phrases concerning created things, who is utterly estranged from the Creator of those things. His first and great need is to be reconciled to God (2 Cor. 5:18-20). We do not climb up through nature to nature's God, but we do get to nature through nature's God. The heart that is reconciled to the Creator through His redemptive work in Christ is brought into fulness of harmony with all the other works of the Creator. Mountains and fields, lakes and plains, sea, earth and sky, become objects of contemplation, leading to intelligent Christian worship.

The discussion of this subject will afford abundant opportunity for personal testimony concerning the helpfulness of the Psalms both for the deepening of our devotion and the inspiration to service. Do not confine yourself to this Psalm given for the Scripture lesson, but testify freely and boldly to any Psalm or part of a Psalm which has become a favorite to you because of help and blessing received through it.

The World's Need of Christ
Ephesians 2:1-13

The thirteen verses of our Scripture lesson are sufficient of themselves to teach us "the world's need of Christ." What a dark picture it is! What a description of men and women it presents! "Dead in trespasses and sins," "walking according to the course of this world," deceived and dominated by Satan the prince of the power of the air, living in the lusts of the flesh and of the mind, impulsed by pride, pretense, passion and prejudice, the "children of wrath" because of transgression, separate from Christ, "without God and without hope."

This is the condition of the unregenerated part of our world, and this condition constitutes the need for Christ who is the only Saviour. These are facts from the Word, now look at these facts from the world.

Missionary statisticians have compiled the following as representing the populations of the great areas of the world untouched by the missionary:

Holungkiang (Manchuria)	1,500,000
Mongolia	2,000,000
Tibet	6,000,000
Bhutan and Nepaul	5,000,000
Afghanistan	4,000,000
Khiva and Bokhara	1,500,000
French Indo-China	21,500,000
Malaysia	1,000,000
Total for Asia	42,500,000
Tripoli and Hinterland	9,000,000
Morocco and Algeria	5,000,000
Portuguese Africa	1,000,000
French Guiana	1,500,000
	16,500,000
French Territory further south	8,000,000
Nigeria	4,000,000
Kamerun	3,000,000
French Congo	8,000,000
Belgian Congo	20,000,000
Portuguese Angola	2,000,000
Portuguese E. Africa	2,500,000

British and German E. Africa	4,000,000
The three Somalilands	700,000
Sudan (Wadai)	4,000,000
Total for Africa	72,700,000

Several facts should be borne in mind in regard to this list. First, there are some few missionaries in most of the countries mentioned, but those who are there can only touch the merest fraction of the populations. Secondly, the vast fields of South America are not mentioned; and thirdly, millions upon millions in other regions have not heard the gospel.

Dr. Robert E. Speer, in commenting on this list, said:

"We shall never ourselves become aware of the facts, and of the obligations which the facts involve, unless we approach them in the spirit of prayer and weigh these obligations in that atmosphere where alone they can be justly weighed. . . . We are never going to see our duty until we come into the compassion and the sympathy of Christ, and we shall never come into them save in His presence, and in that presence open to us through the reality and the tenderness of prayer."

Practical and Perplexing Questions

Answered by the Editors

J. H. Courtenay, B. C. will probably find a sufficient answer to his inquiry in the article in our last issue, page 285.

Mrs. M. T.: "I would like to know what you think Psalm 49 and Matthew 10:28 mean."

The inquiry about Psalm 49 is rather indefinite, as no particular verse is named; but so far as the New Testament passage is concerned, the Bible Commentary, by Jamieson, Faussett and Brown, states our thought when it says that the verse is a proof that there is a hell for the body as well as the soul in the eternal world. In other words, the torments of the lost have elements of suffering adapted to the material as well as the spiritual part of our nature, both of which we are assured will exist forever.

G. H. F., Highland Park, Mich.: "Why does it seem to you so essential for a person to join a visible church which you assert has departed from the truth of the gospel?"

Pardon us if we reply that we never said so. What we did say was, that a truly saved man will be baptized and join the church unless unusual circumstances prevent. He will be baptized surely, which commonly involves joining the church. But of course he will not be baptized in and join any local visible church which, as such, has departed from the gospel. The true church is hidden at present within the visible church, and if a believer would function as a recognized member of the body of Christ, an outward union with some company of fellow-believers seems to be a necessity.

E. J. S.: (1) Is the coming of Christ in the air for His Church to be the first of future events?

(2) Does the Tribulation set in immediately after, according to Matthew 24?

(3) Does Christ come to earth to reign in Jerusalem, thus ending the Tribulation? Matthew 24.

(4) Is His reign to last a thousand years?

Our replies to the above are all in the affirmative, except that as to number 3. We do not think Christ reigns on the earth during the millennium in the sense that He abides there. We think that His reign will be carried on intermediately between heaven and earth, i. e., in the air. (See Progress in the Life to Come, Gray, page 47, published by Revell, New York, and Chicago, 35 cents.)

SOME SEARCHING QUESTIONS

In the appeal for a night of prayer the last night of 1919, the following questions are asked: Has the professing body of Christ ever come nearer being a corpse than it is today? True, it is full of "good works." It has plenty of money. It has still a "little strength," but—has it not left its "first love"? Is it not, in its own sight, "rich, and increased with goods, and in need of nothing"? Does it know that in God's sight it is "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked"?

Is it not loaded to the breaking point with carnal rubbish and filthy lucre, its membership largely unregenerate, its powerhouse of intercession well-nigh unworked, its family altar neglected and its prayer meetings either entertainments or practically deserted altogether? Are not many of its members patronizers of Sunday trains, readers of Sunday newspapers, desecrators of the Sabbath, seekers after worldly pleasure, conscienceless violators of God's laws, having "turned the grace of God into lasciviousness"?

Peter and John Heal a Lame Man
Acts 3

Golden Text:—"Freely ye have received, freely give."—Matthew 10:8.

The indications are that some months have elapsed since Pentecost. The believers were being taught by the apostles, who were showing their credentials by their mighty works (2:43). The miracle of the healing of the lame man was of great importance.

I. The Lame Man Healed (vv. 1–11).

1. The Occasion (v. 1). Peter and John were going to the house of worship. They were friends who were mutual complements—the one having that which the other lacked. This fellowship was according to the Lord's own arrangement and most fitting. They were going up to Jerusalem to worship though they knew full well the corruptions of Judaism. They were not separatists. What is needed today is not separation from denominational bodies so much as for those who know the Lord and the higher things of the Christian life to help lead those who lack these things into the better way. At any rate, those who know the Lord will not neglect the place of worship. An hour of prayer for each life is a great need. Jesus himself had times of prayer and taught His disciples to practice the same (Mark 1:35; Luke 6:12; 22:39-41; Matt. 6:5, 6).

2. The Place (v. 2). It was at the Beautiful Gate which led from the outer to the inner court of the temple. It was called "Beautiful" because of its magnificent bronze doors. This man was placed at the entrance of the place of worship, because where man comes closest to God he also comes closest to his fellow man. Human instinct is quick to discern this. Beggars are seldom found at doors of theaters and infidel lecture halls.

3. The Man (vv. 2, 3). This beggar was infirm from his birth. He brought his ailment into the world with him, and was now forty years old (4:22). He was a familiar figure—known by the people for years. When he saw Peter and John he asked alms.

4. The Method (vv. 4-8). (1) Gained the man's attention (v. 4). Peter and John commanded him to look on them. The sinner's attention must be secured before Christ can heal him. Having secured his attention they gave him more than he asked or expected. He asked for money and got healing. Some things are more valuable than money; health, friends, and salvation are of more value than silver and gold. (2) Peter commanded him in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth to rise up and walk (v. 6). This was the very thing he was unable to do for so many years. Was not this mocking his very impotency? No! No! it was in the name of Jesus. With the commandment went the ability to do. This is always the way Jesus does. What He commands He gives the ability to do. (3) Peter took him by the right hand (v. 7). This act was meant to give impetus to his faith; not strength to his ankles. (4) The man's response (v. 8). Strength came to his feet and ankle bones at once. He stood, he walked, he leaped and shouted praise to God. He thoroughly advertised the miracle. He ascribed the honor to God for his healing and walked into the house of God. We should always acknowledge our indebtedness to God for His blessings, and use the strength which He gives in His service. The one who has experienced the life of Christ will surely make it manifest. Reality of conversion is proven by one's activity and testimony. What would you have thought of this man if he would have remained in the position of a helpless beggar? If you have the life of Christ you will not stay where you were before He healed you.

5. The Effect (vv. 9-11). The people were filled with wonder and amazement. The multitude ran together to see this wonderful thing. There was no question as to the genuineness of the miracle, for this man was a familiar figure for many years. It was evident that something supernatural had occurred. When men and women today, bound by sin, are being loosed from its bonds and set to singing God's praises we know that something beyond nature has occurred. This miracle may be regarded as a parable setting forth the work of the church in the world. (1) The helpless beggar had to be carried to the temple gate. Men and women out of Christ are spiritually helpless; they need to be brought where the life of God can be applied to them. We should bring sinners to Christ. (2) Taking him by the hand shows the manner of the Christian's help. Ministers of Christ may not have silver or gold, but have something infinitely better to give. Men and women need Christ more than they need money.

II. Peter Witnessing of Jesus Christ Before the Multitude (vv. 12-26).

This miracle focused the attention of the people upon Peter and John. Peter immediately turned their attention from himself to Christ. This was most unlike the claimants to divine power today. They strive after notoriety and delight in it. Disclaiming power of his own, he seized the opportunity to preach Christ to the people who had assembled. He told them it was faith in Jesus Christ, whom the God of their fathers had glorified, whom they had deliberately delivered up and denied before Pilate when he desired to set Him free, and that they desired a murderer to be granted freedom instead. He showed that the disciples are also witnesses that God had raised Jesus from the dead, and charged home upon them their awful guilt; for they had denied the holy one and the just, and chosen Barabbas, a murderer, instead of Christ, and killed the Prince of life. Despite their aggravated crime He appeals to them to repent (v. 19). Since they had committed this awful crime in ignorance, God would pardon their sin if they would repent, assuring them that they should yet enjoy refreshing seasons from the Lord, when God shall send Jesus Christ back to earth to consummate the work of redemption. He appeals to the Scriptures as the basis of his warnings and promises (vv. 22-26).

The Boldness of Peter and John

Acts 4

Golden Text: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." 1 Corinthians 16:13.

I. Peter and John Arrested (vv. 1-4).

The occasion for their arrest was the great stir caused by the healing of the lame man. As the people flocked to see this notable miracle the apostles took advantage of the occasion to teach them concerning Jesus. This teaching was fruitful, for the number of men came to be about five thousand. Such a large following in so short a time would naturally cause alarm.

1. By Whom (vv. 1, 2). The priests and Sadducees. The priests were intolerant because these new teachers were encroaching upon their ministerial functions and thus arousing their jealousies. Antagonism is stirred up today when teaching and preaching are done by those upon whom official hands have not been laid. The Sadducees opposed them from doctrinal consideration. They were the intellectuals of their day. Their materialistic philosophy caused them to deny the resurrection from the dead and the future life. Although they were the liberalists of their day they were cruelly intolerant. The most outstanding bigots of our day are the professed intellectuals whose watchword is "scholarship." It angered them beyond measure to be told that the one whom they crucified had arisen and would appear again.

2. The Result (vv. 3, 4). Having been arrested they were now put in confinement till the next day, as it was too late for trial that day. Though the apostles were held by chains Christ continued to work, for the number of believers had now greatly increased. Opposition helps God's cause. The storms of adversity only fan the flames of Christian enthusiasm. "Christ is not bound."

II. Peter and John on Trial (vv. 5-12).

This trial was before the Sanhedrin, the supreme court of the nation.

1. The Inquiry (vv. 5-7). They were asked "By what power, or in what name, have ye done this?" This inquiry admitted the reality of the miracle. They wanted to know what it signified, or perhaps they desired the apostles to incriminate themselves by ascribing the power to some other being than God.

2. Peter's Answer (vv. 8-12). Peter filled with the Holy Spirit calmly and courteously answered. With stinging sarcasm he showed them that they were not being tried as evil doers, but for doing good to the helpless and needy man. He showed the absurdity of dealing with men as criminals who have merely relieved the suffering and helpless man of distress—thus they are placed in a most ridiculous and embarrassing position. Since they could not deny the miracle he boldly declared "Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him does this man stand here before you whole. This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner." He further declared that "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby ye must be saved." Peter showed that not only had the miracle been wrought in the name of Jesus Christ, but the only way for him and his judges to have eternal salvation is in this name. He thus went beyond their inquiry, showing them their guilt and only hope of salvation from it.

III. The Impression upon the Sanhedrin (vv. 13-22).

1. They marvelled (v. 13). The fact that they spoke so boldly, being unlearned men, caused them to marvel. They saw that the behavior and words of Peter were as unusual as the miracle. They were made to feel that instead of sitting as judges they were themselves on trial.

2. They Took Knowledge that They had Been with Jesus (v. 13).

They saw that though they had killed Jesus, His life and work were being reproduced in His disciples. If we have really been with Christ there will be something about us which will remind the world of Him. Being with Christ (1) gives an experiential knowledge of Him. The one who really knows Christ can and will testify of Him and for Him. (2) Gives freedom from fear. Peter, who shortly before this quailed before a Jewish maid, is now bold before the most august assembly of the Jews. (3) Opens a man's lips. What the heart feels, the mouth must speak out. This is pre-eminently true of the preacher and the Sunday-school teacher. Let there be experiential religion and there will be passionate preaching and teaching.

3. They Commanded Them not to Speak in Christ's Name (v. 18). They could not deny the miracle or gainsay the accusation which Peter brought against them, so they attempted to intimidate them. This is ever the way of evil men. Only as men and women are filled with the Holy Ghost shall they be able to withstand such intimidation.

4. Peter and John's reply (vv. 19, 20). They expressed their determination to disobey their instructors—they openly defied the Sanhedrin, "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God judge ye; for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard." By this declaration they repudiated the authority of the rulers of Israel and set the church in a place of independence from the Jewish state. Obedience to rulers has its limitations; obedience to God is paramount. When the rule of man in the church or state runs counter to God it must be repudiated.

5. Their Release (v. 21). Having further threatened them they let them go, as they had no way to punish them, seeing the people were on their side

IV. The Church at Prayer (vv. 23-31).

As soon as Peter and John were set free they hastened away to their fellow disciples and rehearsed to them their experience. It is natural for Christ's followers to seek the fellowship of His disciples in order to share with them their trials and blessings. They took the matter to God in prayer, and in their communion they turned to the Holy Scriptures for comfort and strength. They found the needed message in the second Psalm. They praised God for deliverance and prayed for boldness to speak His Word, and that their testimony might be confirmed by signs. We may expect opposition and trials in this age, for "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution" (2 Tim. 3:12), and we should constantly pray that boldness may be given to bear testimony in all our trials.

Their prayers were answered by the shaking of the place where they were assembled, and they were filled with the Holy Spirit. The Spirit did not come with a sound as at Pentecost, but the place was shaken, showing the presence of the Almighty. May all believers go to God in prayer that they may have boldness to testify in this time when men are opposing God!

Peter Stands up for Truth and Honesty

Acts 5:1-16

Golden Text: "Lying lips are abomination to the Lord: but they that deal truly are his delight." Proverbs 12:22.

In this lesson we see the new community now called "The church" (v. 11) vindicated. In the boldness of Peter and John we see that the break with Judaism has come—the authority of the Sanhedrin is repudiated with the determination on the part of the disciples to be led by the Holy Spirit. It is for this reason that the body now gets the name "church." Since the break has come it must be shown to be a holy body; it must have recognition as being sacred. The sanctity of the tabernacle is transferred to the new body, which is God's dwelling place (Eph. 2:19-22). The church itself, as well as the people about, did not know this until God's judgment burst forth. This is a lesson men and women are slow to learn. Moses did not take off his shoes until bidden by the Lord; Nadab and Abihu must be stricken down in the beginning of the Mosaic economy for their presumptuous offering of strange fire before the Lord; Achan was put to death for secreting a part of the booty soon after entering the promised land.

I. Characteristics of the Primitive Church (4:31-35).

1. It Was a Praying Church (v. 31). For every want and every need they betook themselves to God in prayer.

2. It Was a Spirit-filled Church (v. 31). A praying church is a Spirit-filled church. The Spirit is given in answer to prayer (Luke 11:13).

3. It Was a Church Which had Great Boldness in Preaching the Word of God (v. 31). The minister in a Spirit-filled church will not offer an apology for the Bible, but will fearlessly preach it.

4. It Was a United Church (v. 32). They were "of one heart and one soul."

5. It Was a Charitable and Generous Church (v. 32).

They held nothing back from those who had need. As needs arose, supplies were given from a common fund.

6. Its Ministers Had a Powerful Testimony. (v. 33).

7. It Was a Church Whose Membership Exhibited Unblemished Characters (v. 33). For "great grace was upon them all."

II. The Sin of Ananias and Sapphira (vv. 1-11).

1. The Occasion of (vv. 1, 2). This was their hypocritical imitation of the generous act of Barnabas (4:36, 37). Because of the peculiar distress of the early church when the open rupture was made with Judaism, the members for a time had a "community of goods." This was not universal nor permanent; some continued to own their own homes, as for example John Mark's mother who used her home in which to entertain Christians. Ananias kept back a part of the money received for his land while pretending to have brought it all. His wife was a partner in it. They wanted the honor of generosity without paying the price thereof. Not only this, but perhaps they were receiving a share of the common fund under the pretense of having brought all.

2. The Judgment (vv. 3-10). Ananias allowed Satan to fill his heart and lied to the Holy Ghost in keeping back a part of the price of the land. It was in part an acted lie. A lie is no less real though a word may not be spoken. They were not under obligation to sell their land, or having sold it, to bring any of the money and place it in the common fund. Peter declared that they were absolutely free to do as they pleased with it. Love of praise is causing many today to make the same dreadful mistake. People are walking in the way of Ananias and Sapphira when they make a profession of religion for temporal gain and pleasure; or even preaching sermons not their own. Frequently men preach the sermons of Moody and Spurgeon without giving credit. Physical death was visited upon both Ananias and Sapphira for their sins. God is passing judgment upon many today for their sins (1 Cor. 11:27-30). The mysterious deaths of men and women about us may be accounted for in this way. May this solemn warning be heeded by us all! Perhaps covetousness and avarice may be gaining control over us when least we suspect.

III. The Effect (vv. 11-16).

1. Great Fear Came upon the Church and upon All Who Heard of these Things (v. 11). Irreverence is an outstanding sin of this age. The church should be recognized as holy—the very dwelling place of the Most High God.

2. Multitudes of Men and Women were Added to the Lord (v. 14). This caused the fame of Peter to be spread far and wide, so that the people were anxious to come under his shadow. Were the holiness of the body of Christ recognized, there would be many coming for pardon and salvation.

3. The Hypocrites Did not Dare to Join (v. 13). It is interesting to note that this vindication of the holiness of the church did not deter any but hypocrites from joining it. Nothing unhallowed nor any unregenerate person has a place in the church. This applies to our offerings as well as to our person.

Peter and John in Samaria.

Acts 8:4-25

Golden Text: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Acts 1:8.

I. Preaching the Word Everywhere (v. 4).

After the stoning of Stephen the enemies of the Lord were more active than ever in their efforts to stamp out the new faith. With Saul as their leader they rushed back to the city, dragged from their homes and imprisoned those who confessed Christ. One wicked act seemed to call for another. In this the devil overreached himself, for the believers took flight and went everywhere preaching the Word. The time had now come for the witness-bearing to extend beyond Jerusalem and Judea, as the Lord had commanded. Preaching was not now confined to the twelve. Perhaps the disciples were slow to obey the Lord's command, so persecutions were permitted to scatter them. They did not allow this, however, to stop their preaching. The Lord thus makes the devil's wickedness to further His own purpose. Sometimes He allows dissensions within and persecutions from without to scatter believers in order to get them to do their duty in witnessing for Him. Frequently in the hour of trial Christians see more clearly their duty and bestir themselves to perform it. If Christians will not move on, the Lord will shove them on.

II. Philip Preaching the Gospel in Samaria (vv. 5-13).

Among these fugitives, the most prominent was Philip, who fled to Samaria and there preached Christ. The Samaritans were a halfway people, who in the providence of God had been prepared for this transition. Hitherto the gospel had only reached Jews, now its scope is broadening and a Jew is preaching to Samaritans, and Samaritans are rejoicing in the gospel of Christ proclaimed by a Jew. Mighty works and a new outpouring of the Holy Spirit accompanied his preaching. His preaching was fruitful, for multitudes believed his message. Much joy in this Samaritan city followed the reception of the message. It is always thus; the gospel is "good tidings of great joy" (Luke 2:10). Both Samaritans and Jews were looking for Christ, so they were glad to know that the Christ had come. Christ is the one name and person who will break down race prejudice. In Him there is unity and real brotherhood, for He is the universal man.

So great was Philip's success that Simon Magus professed faith and was baptized. Simon was a sorcerer who by magical devices had made a great reputation, gaining control of many of the credulous and ignorant so that they regarded him as some great one from God (v. 10). The people turned from this sorcerer to the gospel of Christ.

III. Peter and John Sent to Samaria (vv. 14-17).

It is not clear as to whether Philip sent the news to the apostles or that they heard it indirectly. At any rate, they were pleased with it and sent two of their best men to encourage the work. They had discernment to know that the Spirit had not yet fallen upon the believers, so they gave that their immediate attention. They laid hands upon the believers and the Spirit was given unto them. These Samaritans were really converted, regenerated, but had not yet been filled with the Spirit. In this they were like many church members today without the Spirit's gift. We should seek to get all believers filled with the Spirit at once, for this will exclude the filling with the interests of the world. The mission of Peter and John shows the unity of the church, showing that the mother church gave sanction to the new work in Samaria. Those who profess faith under the ministry of evangelists should be examined, instructed, and brought into the regular church organization. The real evangelist is the one who takes the gospel to those who have not believed in Christ. Much of the work of the modern evangelist is a failure because it is not properly followed up by those who will instruct and bring the converts into relationship with the living church. The interval of time which elapsed between the baptism and the reception of the gift of the Spirit, in the case of these Samaritans, is no warrant for the "second blessing" idea, for under right influence and teaching the believer should at once enter into the fulness and joy of salvation.

IV. Simon's Wicked Request (vv. 18-24).

When Simon saw that the power which Peter had exceeded that which he possessed and that it was received through the laying on of hands, he offered money for the gift. This act reveals the hypocrisy of this man. He professed faith and was baptized, following after them for a selfish end. To desire and seek the gift of the Spirit for selfish aggrandizement is to be guilty of Simon's sin. All traffic in sacred things has been called "simony," from the name of this sorcerer. Peter most severely rebuked him. He told Simon that he had neither part nor lot in this matter, and that there is one thing he must do, that is, to repent of his wickedness. and pray to God for forgiveness, even for the thought of his wickedness. He requests Peter to pray for him. We do not know whether he repented or not. We see that this matter developed in a time of great revival. We need not be surprised that cases of hypocrisy should develop at such times; indeed we may expect them. This does not prove revivals to be unreal, but the reverse; for counterfeits are only found in connection with the genuine.

The sin which Simon committed was that of making merchandise of religion. This originated in a covetous and ambitious heart. He practiced the art of sorcery for gain and influence. Now that he found his profits diminishing and his influence waning he endeavored to acquire new power. All persons who use their religion to further their ambitions to get gain are guilty of this sin. Sometimes men join the church for business, social, and political reasons; sometimes official positions are coveted for the prestige and power they give. To make merchandise of our religion is a fearful thing. Peter dealt severely with this hypocrite. Let his doom be a solemn warning to all who follow in Simon's steps!

A GREAT RECORD

Hon. John Wanamaker of Philadelphia has just been elected chairman of the Executive Committee of the World's Sunday-school Association. Mr. Wanamaker succeeds H. J. Heinz who died in May of this year, at the very time when the annual meeting of the Executive Committee was in session. Mr. Wanamaker has been actively engaged in Sunday-school work since January 17, 1848. In just a few months he will have seventy-two years to his credit for continuous Sunday-school membership, and he is still on duty every Sunday. He is superintendent of the Bethany Presbyterian Sunday-school of Philadelphia, which reports an enrolment of 2,555. In 1889 he became actively interested in the Pennsylvania State Sabbath-school Association and has been its president since 1894. Not only does this active business man hold these Sunday-school offices but he fills them with service. When Mr. Wanamaker was Postmaster-General he continued his activities in the Bethany Sunday-school in Philadelphia and made it the rule to return each Saturday from Washington that he might be in his place in the home school on Sunday.

HOW THE REVIVAL CAME TO INDIA

By Rev. M. C. Clark, of India

An address delivered at The Moody Bible Institute

A little over twenty years ago there was a serious crisis in India. Missionary societies were formed among the Hindus and these were endeavoring to retard and stop the progress of the cause of Christianity in British India, and it became such a serious problem that Christendom everywhere was stirred in regard to it. Some of the appeals were sent out through the Missionary Review of the World, edited by Dr. A. T. Pierson, and there were calls for prayer because it was a serious situation. These agencies came to our country, got all the statistics that we were ashamed of in this country, such as the number of divorces, etc., and they got hold of the writings of Tom Payne, Bob Ingersoll and others showing that Christianity was not a success even in a Christian country, and to the unlearned and untaught these were very effective weapons. People everywhere felt that something must be done. Intercessory prayer was enlisted of the people all over the world. They began to pray that the progress of His kingdom might go on in India, and God sometimes answers in a far different way than we expect.

In answer to those who thought to retard the progress of salvation in India, a strange thing happened. The population is entirely dependent upon agriculture. In the hot season, which begins about the middle of March and lasts until June, that great peninsula suffers from great heat. In the evening, at nine o'clock, walking along the roads, I have felt the heat as when you open your oven door and feel the heat rush out that almost takes your breath away, and it is of course very easily explained. The monsoons come. The peninsula becomes heated and that starts a current and that great atmosphere laden with moisture rushes forward to fill the vaccum, rushing on to the mountains, striking the cold, it condenses and falls in great showers, known as the monsoons of India. It is a wonderful sight to see nature changing at that time. Before, everything has been hot and dusty. All nature seems to be crying for rain. The clouds go stealing northward, and there is a change of the atmosphere. Sometimes it comes with thunder and lightning, and how glad we are! We usually go out and get wet. How good it seems to have the rain fall upon your face! The water goes gurgling down, and all nature seems to be praising and thanking God for the copious showers that have come.

In 1900 the clouds went far north, but no rain fell, and in a little while famine conditions were on. I cannot attempt, in this brief talk, to describe the conditions, but will give you just a little glimpse of the conditions of the famine. It is beyond description, when you see thousands dying and hear them crying day and night at your gates, begging for food. It is awful to hear them and to see them, tottering skeletons, and with swollen and extended stomachs. It is an awful experience to go through a famine. Children were separated from their parents. They rushed from one village to another expecting to find food, but finding none, and lying down to die and be eaten by the jackals. The plague followed, and it looked like doomsday. That year the famine conditions were on and the people were dying by the thousands. The missionaries said, "We must save their lives if we can do so." They gathered up the children, for they were the only ones that seemed to be worth saving. They were deserted by their parents, and during this famine probably one hundred thousand children were gathered into all the different orphanages in India.

The Great Indian Famine

You remember that famine. The Christian Herald, of New York, made loud and plaintive calls. America responded nobly. The Government furnished the ship, loaded it with beautiful corn and sent it from Boston to Bombay, India, the first corn that they had ever seen in India, and all you needed to preach to these people then was a sack of corn. You took the sack of corn and divided it homiletically, and the more divisions you had the more the people appreciated it.

They would come and say, "What is this?"

We would answer, "Corn."

"Where did it come from?"

"From America."

"How did they know we were hungry and thirsty and dying?"

"That is a Christian land; they know many things; they are Christians and because of the love of Christ they have heard of you and they make no distinction as to race or color; the only fact is that you are hungry and they have sent the corn."

It was a wonderful chance, and many were gathered into the fold. The truth of Christianity was brought to them in a very practical way. I believe that was God's answer to prayer God has to answer sometimes differently from what we expect.

Children were gathered into the orphanages, and the great problem was to take care of them.

Appeals were sent out. Fifteen dollars to twenty dollars a year would clothe, educate and take care of one of them and give him or her some industrial training. The people responded nobly from all parts of the world, and these children were gathered into the orphanages and the training began to show upon them in just a little while, and they were happy. They learned to read and write. Then the people said, "Look into these great orphanages; they have gathered the brightest of our land; they will make Christians out of them, and in a little while the truth of Hinduism must be cut down," and so they began persecution again, trying to get them out of the orphanages. They tried to pass a law that all children in orphanages in India should be taught in the religion in which they were born, the Mohammedans the Mohammedan religion, the Hindu children the Hindu religion, and so on, but there was much prayer again; God's people went to prayer, and in answer to prayer the scheme was defeated, and so we were left with these under our immediate care and supervision, and then we felt the need of a spiritual revival. Just at that time in Wales that revival was going on; even the secular papers were full of it. Factories were stopped so that the people might go and pray, and the revival swept everywhere. Up in the North of Assam there was a little Welsh Presbyterian Mission, working away there without success. They were thinking of selling their property and going to some other part of the country to try their work among other peoples, for the people where they were seemed so low and degraded and unresponsive to the gospel. A little band acquainted with the situation said, "We think God can hear prayer and send the answer ten thousand miles away as well as He can in the next town," and so that little band began to pray that God would send the same revival away there to Assam, 10,000 miles away, and God sent the answer; it came in the following way:

How the Revival Came

In a little chapel one night the missionary was discouraged. He went to the little prayer meeting and took His Bible up very listlessly, and turned it over to read and go through the form and have the prayer meeting and send the people home. But his eyes fell upon the crucifixion of Christ, and someway the Spirit of God fastened his vision to it, and before he realized it he was sobbing aloud, and he looked, and, to his surprise, the entire congregation were weeping and sobbing bitterly. He closed the Bible and said they would pray, and everybody began to pray everywhere in the room, some confessing their sins and some crying and some lamenting their sins. Another missionary heard the cries and slipped down to the place. He said, "I think the people are drunk; they have brought derision into the church of God and I am going to put them out and not allow them to come in any more," but when he entered the door he saw a scene that he had never seen before. He stood there for a moment with bowed head, and then said, "God is here." And so that revival swept over the country and thousands upon thousands were brought into the Kingdom of God. In less than two years we heard of it in India, and it made our hearts hungry. We were in Southern India, two hundred missionaries, in a gathering on those hills for a time of conference and prayer and rest, 6,000 feet above sea level. God knew that in the future His tired missionaries would need rest, so He wanted to get them up a little nearer to His heart, that He might give them the refreshing, cooling climate of the green tree. On this particular year we had a missionary convention, the subject of which was prayer. Every message was on prayer, and there were references made to the great revival sweeping Wales and Assam in the north—it had not then struck India. Oh, how faint denominational lines are when we get into a country like that! We never thought of asking, "What denomination do you belong to?" Everybody was a brother, and we took one another by the hand and felt we had a common interest—we were there for the salvation of the people, and this particular afternoon was a remakable one. I shall never forget it; some of the most searching messages I ever heard in my life. My heart was hungry. I was so hungry I did not know what to do. I never heard such a searching message on prayer, and the speaker said, "If there are any whose hearts are real hungry let us gather for fellowship and prayer," and I was about the first one to get down, and I could not think of any words to pray, and finally those words came to me from the prayer of Daniel: "O Lord, righteousness belongeth unto thee, but unto us confusion of faces, as at this day," and that seemed to express everything in my heart someway, and God's blessing came to my heart, and we had a wonderful time of refreshing. Going home to our mission we were praying that God would send the revival there. Every missionary was praying.

While the children of these orphanages had been taught the things of God in a way, intellectually, yet we lacked that spiritual revival someway that changed their hearts and their lives. I can only tell you briefly how the revival came to our own mission:

The All-Night Prayer Meeting

We were gathered together one Saturday night for prayer, and I was so tired that I could not pray and my wife was tired, and finally it seemed that no one had any particular power in prayer, and I said to my wife, "I think we will go home; I have to preach in the morning and I am so tired, and I think it would be more honoring to the Lord for me to go home," and so we went home. About one or two o'clock in the morning I was suddenly awakened, and I heard singing right by our door out on the veranda, and this was what they were singing:

> "I would not live always;
>   This world is not my home;
> I would not live always,
>   For heaven is now my home."

And, oh, there was something in the voices I had never heard before. When I struck a light and they knew I was awake they broke out: "The Holy Spirit has come; the Holy Spirit has come." I got up and rejoiced with them, but they were so filled with joy that they could not retire. They awoke their comrades, perhaps fifty or sixty, and they had prayer meeting all night, some seeking the Lord and confessing sin. I never heard anything like it in my life.

I remember one evening about a dozen gathered around our desk and one after the other confessing of stealing and this thing and the other thing, and the floor was fairly wet with tears that rained down their faces. They seemed to be in agony until they had confessed it and made arrangements to make restitution as far as they were able to do so, and then they would pray.

I do not care very much for the demonstrations. I would say but little about it here, but there was genuine repentance. One little boy looked like he would die and he said, "Oh, Sahib, can you forgive me? I have stolen three limes out of the garden, and I have no money; I will work two weeks; I will do anything to pay you. I feel I must do it and get it off my heart and my conscience." I said, "All right," and he dropped down on his knees, and then such a prayer as he prayed I never heard in my life, and then he stood there as though he were a brass figure, and oh, how happy he was, and oh, how he prayed as those little hands reached up higher and higher!

And this was the way the revival swept on, but the great night in particular was on a Tuesday night there in our own mission. The students could not study. Imagine that here in this institution they would start to teach geography, and down to the floor would drop two or three girls and all begin to pray in concert until everybody was praying.

We had some Brahman teachers and they got up and ran home. They would say, "There is a power in their God that we do not know anything about." Our superintendent sent over and said, "Meet in the chapel, and I believe God will do something wonderful for us this evening." I was thinking of writing a note to him to suggest the same thing, so we met there. The boys headed out for the chapel, and it was very quiet when a hymn was announced, "What can wash away my sins?," etc. Just as we got to the chorus the Holy Spirit fell on the entire congregation. The meeting continued until three o'clock the next morning, and oh, the songs of those who had been redeemed, and the confession of sin and the joy and happiness!

God's Spirit swept on over India, especially through the orphanages, and here they were now transformed, some into preachers in one day! I wish I could tell you how they preached, and some of the testimonies they gave, but I have not the time. God called them out into His work, so you see here are the very footsteps of God in British India.

God is working in that great land. The great movements that are sweeping India today, I believe are due largely to those who have been blessed and filled with the Spirit of God. And here was the great revival that swept from Wales and spread from Wales down into British India and swept over the Christian church and the Christian orphanages.

THE MISSIONARY IN KOREA AS VIEWED BY THE JAPANESE PRESS

Extract from the Chosen Shinum

The stirring up of the minds of the Koreans is the sin of the American missionary. This uprising is their work. In investigating the cause of the uprising two or three missionaries have been arrested and have been examined. * * * There are a good many shallow-minded people among the missionaries and they make the minds of the Koreans bad, and they plant the seeds of democracy. So the greater part of the 300,000 Korean Christians do not like the union of Japan and Korea, but they are waiting for an opportunity for freedom.

These missionaries look upon the present Korean as they did upon the old Korean, and they consider it proper for the Koreans to say anything they want, if only they enter the Christian schools. They make the statement of Wilson about the self-determination of nations and hide behind their religion and stir up the people.

However, the missionaries have tried to apply the free customs of other nations to these Korean people who are not wholly civilized. From the part that even girl students in Christian schools have taken, it is very evident that this uprising has come from the missionaries.

Behind this uprising we see the ghostlike appearance (tokgabi) waving his wand. This ghost is really hateful, malicious, fierce. Who is this ghost wearing the dark clothes? The missionaries and the head of the Chuntokyo. These missionaries who have come out to Korea, their wisdom, character and disposition is of the low trash of the American nation. They have sold themselves for the petty salary of 300 yen per year, and they have crept out, as reptiles on their belly, as far as Korea. There is nothing of good that can be said of their knowledge, character, and disposition.

SUCCESSFUL PRAYER

Psalm 138:3

I. The Psalmist's Prayer.

1. A Deep Sense of Need. "When I cried." All men stand in need; but to cry—pray aright—we must feel it, be conscious of it.

2. A Feeling Sense of Inability. Divested of all self-confidence and self-complacency we must feel our entire dependence upon God.

3. Earnestness of Application. Prayer is intense desire, the soul's longing for God. Our earnestness is a sign of our sincerity, although not necessary to mere duty.

4. Confidence in the Divine Being We Approach. A firm trust in Him and a reliance upon His truth, ability and willingness.

II. Its Successful Issue.

1. God Heard His Cry. God can hear prayer. The gods of the heathen cannot. Baal could not. Our God in every place, seeing all; knowing all.

2. God Answered His Cry. God is pledged to answer the believing prayers of His people, when they ask in accordance with His Word.

(1) On the ground of faithfulness. Promises absolute.

(2) On the ground of goodness. "If your parents being evil," etc.

(3) On the ground of Christ's intercession. Our Advocate; our High Priest; Him the Father heareth always.

(4) On the ground of the Holy Spirit's groanings within us. The Spirit stirs us to prayer, suggests what we need. To reject our cries He must forget His Word and refuse to hear His Son.

3. God Answered Him Immediately. "In the day." Not always so because not always best. Paul besought thrice. It is desirable to ask and seek a present blessing. Expect it, God is able.

4. God Imparted Strength to His Soul. It requires—

(1) Strength to resist enemies. We have to wrestle, fight.

(2) Strength to suffer. With Christ, meekly, patiently.

(3) Strength to work. To do His will and to labor in His vineyard.

(4) To be firm and persevering. To stand fast. To be immovable. To go forward. Press toward the mark. Run as to obtain. Application. Learn the remedy in trouble. The importance of soul-strength. The efficacy of fervent prayer.

4. To the world—John 6:15, John 4:32.
5. On the cross—John 19:30.

THREE ARMORS

1. Armor of Righteousness (2 Cor. 6:7) Protection from the World.
2. Armor of Light (Rom. 13:12)—Protection from the Flesh.
3. Armor of God (Eph. 6:11)—Protection from the Devil.

—B. B. Sutcliffe.

THREE UNITIES IN EPHESIANS 4

1. Unity of the Body (v. 4)—Recognize it by the life of Christ.
2. Unity of the Spirit (v. 3)—Keep it by the love of Christ.
3. Unity of the Faith (v. 13)—Pursue it by the light of Christ.

—B. B. Sutcliffe.

THE PRECIOUS BLOOD OF CHRIST

Why precious?

1. Because it redeems us (1 Pet. 1:19).
2. Because it brings us nigh (Eph. 2:13).
3. Because it blots out our sins (Rev. 1:5).
4. Because it brings peace (Col. 1:20).
5. Because it justifies (Rom. 5:9).
6. Because it cleanses from all sin (1 John 1:7)
7. Because it gives boldness in the day of judgment.—D. L. Moody.

SEVEN TESTS TO TRY SPIRITS

There are seven tests in 1 John 4 that are useful to test any impression, spirit, or doctrine:

1. Does it confess the true humanity of Jesus Christ? 1 John 4:2,3.
2. Does it confess the true divinity of Jesus Christ? 1 John 4:9,15.
3. Does it confess the vicarious atonement of Jesus Christ? 1 John 4:10,14.
4. Does it tend to worldliness, and to a love of the outward? 1 John 4:4,5.
5. Do the deeply spiritually-minded agree with it? 1 John 4:6.
6. Does it witness to the spirit of divine love? 1 John 4:7,8.
7. Does it accord with the teaching of God's Holy Spirit? 1 John 4:13.

The teaching of the Holy Spirit is found in the hearts of believers and in the Scriptures which He has inspired. The first of these has been mentioned under test five. We ask, secondly:—Does it accord with the Holy Scriptures? Not with one text, but the combined teaching of God's Word?—C. H. P.

ATONEMENT IN THE TWO TESTAMENTS

The difference between the atonement, as set forth in the Old Testament and as presented in the New, says Dr. C. I. Scofield, is that in the former case the sheep died for the shepherd; in the latter the Shepherd died for the sheep.

"I AM NOT ASHAMED OF THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST"

Romans 1:16

1. I am not ashamed of the Power of the gospel:
   "For it is the power of God."
2. I am not ashamed of the Purpose of the gospel:
   "For it is the power of God unto salvation."
3. I am not ashamed of the Limitations of the gospel:
   "For it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth."

—William R. Farnum.

The arrow may be keen and true, the shaft round and straight, the bow strong, and the arm sinewy; but unless the steel be winged it will fall to the ground long before it strikes the target. Your arrows must be winged with faith, else orthodoxy, and wise arrangements, and force, and zeal, will avail nothing.—Alexander Maclaren.

THE NEW YEAR

'Tis midnight's hour, and everywhere
A holy hush rests on the air,
As if the world in silent prayer
Were looking up to God.
And gently dropping, soft and white,
As feathers in their downward flight,
The snowflakes fall, and veil from sight
The paths o'er nature trod.

And when the morning's golden beams
Shall rouse the world from slumber's dreams,
O'er all the hills and vales and streams
A spotless robe shall lie;
A robe by unseen hands outspread,
A shroud to wrap the old year, dead,
A clean page for the new, instead,
Dropped from the bending sky.

So, Heavenly Father, may Thy grace
As kindly cover every trace
Of my sad wanderings from Thy face:
Let not one spot remain.
Before me lies the new-born year,
Each page as yet all white and clear.
Oh, help me write it in Thy fear,
And keep it free from stain.

Here, in the solemn hour, I raise
My heart to Thee in thankful praise
For all the good that crowned my days
Throughout the old year, gone.
Into the new I cannot see;
I know not what 'twill bring to me;
I only know that Thou lovest me,
And still wilt lead me on.

—Ex.

EXPOSITORY PREACHING

Spurgeon once quoted McCheyne as saying that in his experience he found it to be God's Word and not man's comment upon it which was instrumental in the salvation of souls. And the greatest pastor of the nineteenth century corroborated this from his own experience.

It is more than possible that herein lies the secret of so many failures. In a recent article on city missions the writer mentions a worker who affirmed confidentially that there was enough in the glorious book (i. e., the Bible, of course) to save New York. But in the entire evening service only eleven words had been read from it by that same worker, the time being taken up with his own talk.

A Scotch professor once criticized the use of the Scriptures in the American pulpit, saying that too often the text was used merely as a springboard from which to jump into the middle of the subject. When preaching becomes really more expository, when the minister's utterances are devoted, not to enlarging upon the text, but only in contributing to the impression it makes upon the hearers, a new era will have dawned.

The preacher does not need to vindicate the revelations God has made to man. Now and again, he may, by timely illustration or explanation, make clearer the meaning of a text. But it is God's Word which does the work of regeneration upon the soul of the hearer, under the influence of the Spirit, and when God's Word finds its way more unrestrainedly into sermons they will lose more and more of their character of essays and become forces.—Christian Work.

A SADLY FATAL MISTAKE

This is emphatically a money-loving and a money-making age. The age is developing money-makers and little else. It is not developing patriotism or statesmanship or philanthropy or any of the nobler traits of character that bless humanity. It need not be pointed out that there are enormous quantities of money given by rich men to benevolence. We reply that there is no more being given in proportion now than in the poorer days of our country. Men get surfeited with needless millions and relieve their ennui of gain by giving. We insist that the whole trend of commerce and business today is to make money-machines out of men who become as real automatons as if they had no souls. Success points out how and why so many such human beings succeed in business but fail as men:

He was no greater than his occupation.

He never learned to look on the sunny side.

He stuffed his pocketbook but starved his brain.

He had no use for sentiment that could not be cashed.

He never learned to take the drudgery out of his work.

He did not live in his upper stories but in the basement of his being.

He regarded his business as a means of making a living instead of a life.

He never learned to enjoy little things, to see the uncommon in the common.

He never learned to lubricate his life's machinery with laughter and good cheer.

He lost his early friends by neglect, and had no time to cultivate new ones.

He made life a grind, out of which he got neither pleasure, profit nor instruction.

There was only one side of his nature developed and that was the money-making side.

He never learned to enjoy himself as he went along, but was always postponing his happiness.

Trouble and perplexity drive us to prayer, and prayer driveth away trouble and perplexity. —Melancthon.

It is important for us to speak to men about God; but it is vastly more important that we speak to God about men.—C. I. Scofield.

Dr. Frank Arnold conducted a two weeks revival campaign in the First Presbyterian Church at Lincolnton, N. C., with C. B. Brooks in charge of the choir. The meeting resulted in 300 consecrations and 50 conversions.

The special meetings recently held at Lead Mine, Mo., by F. A. Geisenheiner, '99, were largely attended, seating room being at a premium during most of the series. Besides the Christians being strengthened, there were a number of conversions.

The Congregational church of Lexington, O., of which Rev. H. W. W. Allen is pastor, just closed a very successful evangelistic meeting. Rev. Karl F. Wittman of Toledo, O., was the evangelist. Over 80 came forward and the church was awakened.

G. A. DeFlon reports souls saved in his meeting at Sedan, Kan., From there he went to Traer, Kan., where seven men spent a half day cutting and sawing wood to help overcome the fuel situation. The Lord is blessing his work there.

Mr. and Mrs. Imrie, singing evangelists, report they are in a fine meeting at the First Baptist Church, Dodge City, Kan. Large crowds are in attendance and conviction for sin is felt. Rev. Mr. Cole from Hutchinson, Kan., is preaching.

Evangelist Robert L. Layfield of Kansas City, Kan., with Rayner C. Eddins of Independence, Mo., as musical director, have closed a successful union meeting in Oberlin, Kan. Over 100 had professed to receive Christ when the meetings had to close on account of the coal strike.

The evangelistic meetings closing Nov. 30, at Hays, Kan., resulted in 416 reconsecrations, 26 old church letters turned in, 136 new decisions, 31 dedications for Christian work. Rev. Carl P. Eklund of Lindsborg did all the speaking. B. Edward Zeiss had entire charge of the music.

The Vom Bruch Evangelistic Party closed a two weeks meeting in Redondo Beach, Watts and Long Beach, Calif., with gratifying results. Besides conversions and consecrations several young people offered themselves for definite Christian work. The party is now in Los Angeles.

J. W. Troy writes: "The Lord is blessing our efforts at Walla Walla, Wash. Great conviction is on the people. Dr. Lane, formerly pastor of the First Church in Tacoma, is doing the preaching and I have a large chorus. I am also doing boys and girls work and have started a Junior and Intermediate League with 70 members."

Frank McKeegan reports a meeting at Mishawaka, Ind., at the First Baptist Church, assisting Rev. Mr. Johnson, also a meeting at Templeton, Wis., with the United Presbyterian church, assisting Mr. Moss. On Nov. 30 he and his wife went to Scugog, Ontario, Can., to assist in a union meeting with the churches of the Island.

P. H. McCarthy, Superintendent of the Morning Star Mission, Joliet, Ill., writes as follows: "God is still blessing the little mission, and to Jesus be all the glory." They just held their Tenth Mission Jubilee which was a success in every way, various churches in the city assisting with the program.

Edward L. Jeambey writes: "We have just closed an evangelistic meeting of two weeks duration at De Witt, Neb. The Pocket Testament League took the town by storm and a great revival of daily Bible reading has been the result. Prayer was the key that opened the door of impossibility."

E. Clare Harding closed a meeting at Washington, Ind., in the Christian church, at which place the choir presented him with a valuable traveling bag. He next went to Vinton, Ia., where he was in a meeting for a brief period when the shortage of coal developed. The meeting was closed and he was at once called to Hebron, Ind. He has open dates for January and may be addressed at Mexico, Mo.

Captain Gipsy Pat Smith witnessed great results for Christ in his meetings at Sunderland, England; Motherwell, Scotland; Belfast, Ireland. He conducted campaigns in London and Hull, and on December 16 sailed for New York City. Starting Jan. 4 he is to conduct an evangelistic campaign in Brooklyn. During his stay here he is to be married to Miss Karin M. Tjader of New York City.

S. D. Goodale writes:

"We closed our meeting at Fairmont, Neb., last Sunday night. It was a hard fought battle, but we won out. We had a genuine revival among the church folks, and about 85 professions. We began here in Ashland, Kan., last Tuesday night. The weather has been very unfavorable, and there is very little fuel in town, so I am not able to judge as to what the outcome will be as yet."

An eleven days series of meetings recently held at Cosby, Mo., resulted in one of the representative citizens and his three sons taking their stand for Christ, besides a number of others being reached. Christians were awakened and the church received a number of persons into its membership. The pastor, Rev. F. G. Hilbers, was assisted by F. A. Geisenheiner of Chicago, a former Moody Bible Institute student.

Pastor J. B. Phillips of the Baptist Tabernacle, Chattanooga, Tenn., has resigned his pastorate to enter evangelistic work January 1. During the Billy Sunday campaign, in Chattanooga, he was chairman of the Conservation Committee, which is to conserve the results of the Sunday campaign. It closed on the 21st of December and he will give his full time to evangelistic meetings all over the country.

Dr. L. W. Munhall, after concluding his Bible class and conference work at Ocean Grove, N. J., which was protracted through the entire summer, spent the last two weeks of September in evangelistic work in the anthracite mining regions of Schuylkill County, Pa., and most of October in Bible Conferences and evangelistic work in Hamilton and Toronto, Can., and has since been doing similar work in Binghamton, N. Y., and the while editing the Eastern Methodist.

Evangelist Herbert C. Hart of Hart and Magann has just closed a most gracious and successful evangelistic campaign in the First M. E. Church of Collingswood, N. J. The large membership are unanimous in declaring they never witnessed such a deep, great and successful meeting in this city. The many conversions together with the benefit to the large membership in the deepening of their experience as well as successful soul winning workers will long be remembered.

A. J. Fitt writes as follows: "Our 'Y' hut at Fort Logan, Colo., closed on Nov. 1. The War Department took the work over. It was the only place that religious services were held in the Fort. We had 111 conversions in October. Our most successful work was done by the Gideons from Denver. The state president, L. L. Moe, and Messrs. Knight, Baer and Jewell came out every other Sunday evening. They preach a full gospel and always got conversions. They are a splendid bunch of Christian men."

After an evangelistic campaign by Dr. H. P. Dunlop and wife at Nevada, Mo., in the First M. E. Church, the pastor reports 80 accessions and every department of the church wonderfully stimulated. The evangelist awarded seventeen leather-bound, gilt-edged Bibles to children who learned all the texts. After a successful campaign at Houston, Tex., these evangelists find it necessary to hold two services each Sunday night to accommodate the big crowds at the Presbyterian church of Vandalia, Mo.

L. W. Breaw reports meetings at Golconda, Ill., where they worked under unfavorable conditions, although there were a few people, at least, interested in God's Word. One of the leading members of the church made the statement that he did not believe there were over a half dozen in that town of 1500 population who did not attend the "movies." The meetings were conducted by the M. E. and Presbyterian churches, the pastors doing their own preaching, one of whom was Thomas G. Kelly, former student of The Moody Bible Institute.

The Steve Burke Evangelistic Party closed a great meeting at Heavener, Okla., on Nov. 26 and then held a meeting at Talihina, Okla. These were both union meetings. The four churches of Heavener will receive about 600 new members, most of them being men. The meeting attracted people from many different towns in eastern Oklahoma. The preaching of the gospel in old time power brought men in large numbers to take a stand for Christ.

The party, in addition to Mr. Burke, is composed of Rev. N. M. Tatum, manager, and the Runnels Twins, singers.

Lucky Baldwin, Protestant Chaplain for the House of Correction, Chicago, issued a very encouraging annual report of the services rendered men sent out from the Institution. Some of the most interesting figures are the following:

Divorces Stopped, 20; Born Again, 130; Bibles, New Testaments and Tracts Distributed, 790; Families United, 103; Visits to Homes, 250. The Religious Census shows the following affiliations of the convicts: Catholic, 390; Episcopal, 42; Methodist, 55; Baptist, 242; Lutheran, 71; Presbyterian, 46; No Church, 144; Jewish, 15; Russian Church, 1; Evangelical, 13; Christian Science, 2.

The Rayburn-Wickland Party closed their five weeks Union Tabernacle Campaign in Winfield, Kan. The meeting was especially happy because of the unusually sweet spirit existing among the churches. The total number making profession of Christ and signing cards was 656. Among them were 317 men and boys, and 339 women and girls. Over 400 of these united with the various churches of Winfield on the Sunday following the meeting. There were 30 ex-service men converted in the meeting. The meeting was scheduled for five weeks but upon the urgent request of the people the meetings were extended three days.

The party next went to Pratt, Kan., where they closed shortly before Christmas. The tabernacle was enlarged so as to accommodate almost 2,000 people. Pratt is a railroad town of over 4,000 people.

Evangelist John M. Linden, with his associate, Wm. S. Dixon, of Chicago, closed, on November 2, a campaign in which Cairo, Ill., cooperated in a big tent seating 1,500 people. While it rained almost every day, the campaign swept on with power. Over 700 took some kind of a religious stand, and 42 volunteered to give their lives for Christian work in the ministry and Christian mission fields, if God so willed. Many family altars were established. Scores of tithers were pledged. Miss Sara C. Palmer, who assisted in this campaign, did an exceptional piece of work with the women of Cairo, and won the hearts of all. After this meeting they held a meeting at Council Bluffs, Ia., in which the three Baptist churches united in the First Church building. There were 342 decisions, of which 111 were new converts. Twenty young people volunteered for Christian work in the ministry and mission fields. Many family altars were established.

Joseph W. Hakes reports as follows: "I am pleased to report that the Lord has just given me the best campaign that I have ever had. We have just closed a three weeks union meeting at Washingtonville, N. Y. There was a great deal of opposition to the meetings from members of the churches and also from those outside. The Lord in a wonderful way answered prayer so that there were a great number of souls saved. There were about a dozen family altars erected. Two Methodist churches that have been closed for some time are to be opened again for the preaching of the gospel. The churches were all brought to that place of oneness and are now united in the one effort to reach the unsaved in the community. The last day of the meetings there were more people present than we had in all the meetings the first week. The old, old story still draws the crowds and saves the lost. Praise His name.

I have open dates after the first of the year. This month I am in Brooklyn at The Atlantic Avenue Mission."

A WEEK OF REST FOR THE WORLD

Rip Van Winkle really was not such an enviable person, because the world progressed away beyond him during his twenty years' sleep, and when he woke up he was quite out of date in every way. The sleeping princess of the fairy tale, however, is a different person and a different story. Her whole court slept, too, and when they all opened their eyes they were able to resume life exactly where they had left off. They still had their youth and health and energy, and the customs of the land remained the same. It seems today as though a little nap like that would do the old world a heap of good.

The world is pretty tired about now. It has just pulled through a terrible war, and although the doctors say it is about cured, troubling symptoms persist in many places. There is irritability and unrest, class strife and race strife. Undoubtedly a good deal of it is simply due to nervous exhaustion. Rest is what the world needs most, and seems least likely to get for a while.

It isn't possible to go to sleep for a hundred restful years and wake up refreshed and ready to move civilization along with a great, sane program of co-operation and renewed faith. But it is possible for individuals to pause in the whirl of strikes and riots and national quarrels and politics and high prices and seek for themselves a little personal poise.

An international rest week wouldn't be a bad idea. A program for such a week would include more regular sleep every night, more fresh air and exercise every day, a few quiet evenings at home, a little time given to reading good literature. Wouldn't everybody feel better after that?—Lima (Ohio) Republican-Gazette.

Book Notices

Any book favorably mentioned below may be secured at prices named from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 822 North La Salle Street, Chicago.

Faithful Stewardship and Other Sermons, by Father Stanton.

These sermons, except the last two, are published verbatim, as reported, and at the instance of Sir W. Robertson Nicoll. A part from the interesting literary peculiarities of the preacher, one finds as the outstanding characteristic the exaltation of our Lord as supreme for the whole of life, done in a spirit of supreme love and reverence.

What Peace Means, by Rev. Henry Van Dyke, D. D.

Here are three short sermons, beautiful in thought and perfect in expression. They are not intended to be doctrinal, but the doubt cast on the final state of those who die out of Christ may be considered a defect. The sermons were preached in the church of which the son of Dr. Van Dyke is pastor. The little book is one of the choicest offerings of the book world for the gift season.

Les Richesses—Nos Richesses

This is the translation into French of Mr. A. C. Gaebelein's well known "His Riches—Our Riches," which in English has been used greatly for the salvation of souls. The translation into Spanish has been much blessed throughout the Spanish speaking world. The French translation will go to Belgium and to points in America where French speaking people are found, besides being sent in quantities to France.

Copies may be obtained free of cost by addressing Mr. A. C. Gaebelein, 456 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Readers are encouraged to write the author about the free circulation of this book, which, it may be added, is in process of translation into the Czecho-Slavonian and other languages.

The Vital Choice: Endor or Calvary, A reply to Sir A. Conan Doyle's "The New Revelation," by Lieut. Col. D. Forster, C. B. E., D. S. O., R. E.

Our readers are aware that Sir A. Conan Doyle is one of the latest and most popular apostles of Spiritualism, and Col. Forster, though a layman, has done good service in opposing him and his cult in this brochure.

Its method is orderly and progressive, comparing first the new revelation so-called, with the old revelation in the Bible; then referring to what the Bible says about this new revelation, comparing the phenomena of Christianity and Spiritualism, placing before the reader the alternatives and urging him to a choice of the right, the holy and the true.

The style is lucid and calm, not calculated to arouse antagonism and yet uncompromising. Scripture is used intelligently also, so that we can heartily commend the book, only wishing that it contained a little more fire.

JOHN G. AND JOHN B.

Used to live side by side—John G. and John B.—fifty years later they are separated by an impassible gulf.

John G. rides to his office in a 1919 model auto that purrs softly through the streets. John B. rides to the factory on a rattling 1908 bicycle while John G. is still asleep. When John G. takes a trip, his secretary lays his ticket and drawing room reservation in front of him along with a reply wire from the best hotel. When John B. goes on an outing he fights his way up the gang plank of a crowded excursion steamer, a baby on one arm and a lunch basket on the other. John G.'s son is at college and John B'.s son has been in the shop since he was fourteen. A wide gap? Yes. Yet they started at the little red school house with the odds in favor of John B. He used to spell John G. down and help him with his sums.

The neighbors said then that John B. would be president yet. And John B., always expecting to strike it rich, put nothing by for the future. He never made that lucky strike. John G. was plodding but kept moving up the line. Part of his hard earned money was always put where it would earn more money. And finally the day came when he bought a partnership in the business. He still keeps his dollars working for him but now at sixty his income is sure whether he works or not.

Where will you be at sixty? Today is the time to find out. Can you keep a dollar? Have you the backbone to take the price of a Thrift or a War Savings Stamp out of your pay envelope according to its size? If you have there will be no lean years. If you can't save, make up your mind right now to the bitterness of a penniless old age. You don't have to guess about it, nothing added to nothing makes nothing.

NEW ADDITION TO OUR WORKING FORCE

Professor Grant Stroh has accepted a call of our Board of Trustees to be associated with the work of our Educational and Correspondence Departments and the editorial side of the magazine.

Professor Stroh is an alumnus of Lake Forest College and McCormick Theological Seminary. After nine years in the pastorate he spent two years in the Bible Teachers' Training School, New York, in equipment for Bible teaching. This was followed by three years as Professor of Biblical Literature in Kendall College, Okla. For the past four and a half years he has been professor of biblical literature in Carroll College, Wis. He is the author of the volume entitled When God Comes Down to Earth, for which the introduction was written by Dr. Gray, who regards the book as one of the most scholarly and interesting presentations of dispensational teachings of the Bible extant.

The Professor has always been a warm friend of the Institute, and is happy in the thought of an official relationship. He is to become the head of the Examining Bureau of the Correspondence Department, whose expansion is continuous. He will also become an associate editor of the magazine, and substitute for a while in the class rooms of the Educational Department, both in the Day and Evening Classes, pending the establishment of a permanent chair for him.

DR. GRAY AND THE MINISTERS ON THE PACIFIC COAST

Dr. Gray's tour of Oregon and Upper California in the interest of the fundamentals of the faith awakened considerable interest and was productive of good results. Almost all the evangelical denominations, including the Friends, were touched by it to some extent, ministers, college and theological students and returned missionaries being particularly refreshed and quickened in faith in many instances.

The climax of the meetings was reached in Berkeley, Calif., where unusually large audiences greeted these brethren twice and sometimes three times a day in the First Presbyterian Church, Rev. Lapsley A. McAfee, D. D., pastor, ministers and laymen in large numbers coming in from distances of seventy to eighty miles.

One morning meeting, especially for ministers, addressed by Dr. Gray, was marked by unusual power, as he talked to them out of his heart and long experience concerning the integrity of the Bible as the Word of God.

He spoke of the fact that for more than thirty years he had been making the Bible and cognate matters his special study, and that being a teacher of youth for most of that time he had been obliged to keep up with so-called modern thought in order to meet their trained and alert minds.

His professional chair included the subjects of biblical criticism and apologetics, he said, and his faith in the traditional view of the Scriptures and of Christianity was practically the same as it had always been.

He went on to show that specialists in those lines, while valuable in their place, are not always reliable in the conclusions they draw from the facts of their own discovery, or in their generalizations upon the facts of others. This was illustrated by the history of the Higher Criticism from the days of Astruc and Eichhorn down to those of the current writers on the same theme.

He pointed out also that scholarship in the case of some of these men is not always what the popular mind supposes it to be. Dr. Gray is a wide reader of biography and was able to give his hearers inside information as to the careers of some of the men much looked-up to as leaders of the evolutionary hypothesis, that seriously shattered some of the idol worship given them.

He dwelt at length on Alfred Russel Wallace, the co-discoverer with Darwin of the so-called "Origin of Species," and Herbert Spencer, author of Synthetic Philosophy. He said the latter had done more than any other man to put "Evolution" into the thinking of the people, but that he was a man without the learning of the schools, and apparently bereft besides of any knowledge of a personal God, and almost from birth was destitute of any sense of obedience due to authority, human or divine. Spencer's works, he said, had an unusual reading in Russia and he attributes the lawless thinking of the intellectuals of that part of the world very largely to what they learned from him.

"You think you can give up the written Word," said Dr. Gray, "and still hold on to the Word incarnate, but in the long run that will be found impossible, for all that we know of Jesus Christ is revealed therein."

This was illustrated by the position now taken by some professors in the theological seminaries and divinity schools, who, as the result of the destructive criticism were not only negativing the Deity and atoning sacrifice of Christ, but even questioning whether He was the real founder of Christianity.

Ministers of all denominations were outspoken in hearty praise of Dr. Gray's testimony, and in gratitude for the comfort and strength it had brought to them.

Steps were taken by the alumni of The Moody Bible Institute on the Coast to have the conferences of this year repeated next fall.

CORRESPONDENCE DEPARTMENT IN ITS NEW QUARTERS

As related in the November magazine the growth of the wonderfully blessed and far-reaching ministry of the Correspondence Department has necessitated more commodious accommodations which have now been provided in the Guild House at 152 West Chicago Ave. The entire third floor has been given over to the Department after being partially reconstructed and attractively redecorated on the same lines followed in the Auditorium, as indicated by the accompanying views.

The Department personnel held a "house-warming" on the evening of December 4 attended by members of the Institute Council. After the visitors had inspected the various offices, including that of the examiners, in which were displayed some interesting and most creditable examples of students' papers, Dr. Ralston related the history of the Department and its gratifying advance in recent years, and announced that the enrolment for the months of September, October and November, 1919, exceeded the figures for the same period the previous year by sixty-three per cent, while the active enrolment had passed 5,000.

Dr. Gray then extended his congratulations on behalf of the Board of Trustees and the Faculty, and enlarged somewhat on the Department's beginnings, giving special credit to the vision and steadfast perseverance of Mr. A. F. Gaylord, the Business Manager, in nursing the new venture through a long period in which its success was in doubt. Refreshments were served, and the visitors departed with an enlarged appreciation of this most important phase of the Institute's educational activities.

THE INSTITUTE FAMILY'S THANKSGIVING DAY

Thanksgiving Day at the Institute is always looked forward to with peculiar anticipation, both by those who are to spend it here for the first time and those who can look back upon many similar occasions. This year nothing was lacking of the delightful fellowship and inspiration that have always characterized these happy family gatherings.

The festivities began with the dinner at one o'clock, at which 584 were served in the dining room and 316 in Keith Hall. Following dinner, walks were taken to different points of interest by several groups under the direction of Dr. Ralston.

For those who preferred to remain indoors full provision had been made by the committee having charge of the social features of the day of which Mr. Schuler was chairman. These spent an hour in the reception hall and Massey chapel with guessing games. "Musical Terms" and "Recent Portraits of the Council" proved especially amusing, the first being represented by various objects which had been placed about the rooms.

Of the portraits, three "striking likenesses" were noted—one of Mr. Gaylord, shown by a picture of an English lord surrounded by many bits of bright color; another of a massive bridge, instantly reminding one of Miss Strong; and a piece of rough wood called before them the genial publishing agent of our magazine.

At four o'clock in the Lecture Room "stunts" and contests which were enthusiastically entered into by both men and women held the attention of a "full house." One of the most exciting of these was the "Traveling Game," for which the platform was made the station, and from it the travelers started, two at a time. Each carried a suitcase containing a coat and hat, the object being to see which could make the journey to the further end of the room, open the suit case, don the apparel, remove it, replace it in the suitcase and return to the station first.

Miss Thomas and Miss Williams, assisted by a number of students, gathered the older children in the gymnasium where they were kept happy with games, bell-music and sleight-of-hand tricks, while their parents enjoyed meeting the old friends found among the guests. In the quiet and seclusion of the Faculty dining room, twenty-one other prospective students, ranging in age from one month to three years were cared for by Miss Gaymon and Mrs. Riebe with their assistants. Who knows but that among them there may be another D. L. Moody?

The Faculty and Business Staff, members of the Evening Department, the Married Women's Guild, the employees of the Institute and the resident students met for the six o'clock

A View In the New Offices of the Correspondence Department luncheon served in Keith Hall. One hundred twenty-five loaves of bread, 1400 rolls and 95 gallons of cocoa formed a part of the good things that were prepared for the eleven hundred who enjoyed this hour of fellowship.

The musical program in the Auditorium which followed was finely rendered, and received with warm appreciation.

That which came last was the best of the feast—a testimony and consecration service led by Dr. Gray, in which he narrated a chapter from his personal experience on obeying the command, "Be filled with the Spirit," closing with a consecration prayer. The power of God was manifest and doubtless many of those present will look back through their lives to that hour with praise and thanksgiving, as the time when first they received, by faith, the filling of the Holy Spirit.

One who has been a part of the Institute for over twenty years, was heard to say, "There is always something new and rich about this day here," and another for whom the first Thanksgiving had just ended, said, "It has been a wonderful day. Could there have been a richer one anywhere?" Apart from all personal reasons for praise, every heart felt a new sense of gratitude for The Moody Bible Institute.

CALIFORNIA REUNION

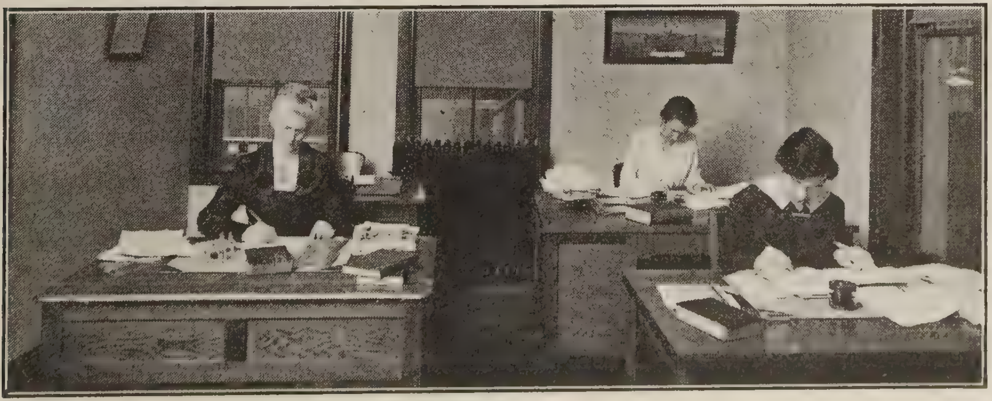
The presence of Dean Gray in Berkeley, Calif., during November, was the occasion of a fine reunion of former students who came to the Bible conference under the auspices of the alumni association in the First Presbyterian Church of that city, Rev. L. P. McAfee, D. D., pastor.

C. H. Coultes

To Mr. C. H. Coultes chiefly, who is now an elder in that church, was the credit due for the conference. He worked indefatigably for weeks to make it a success, and his labors were richly blessed. Indirectly it shows what a local alumni association can do under earnest leadership to promote the cause of the Institute and the cause of the Lord at the same time. A competent witness was heard to say that it was the greatest thing of the kind that had come to that part of the Coast during his residence there of some ten or twelve years.

The meetings, lasting for a week, were all held in the large auditorium of the church and were splendidly attended both afternoons and evenings. It was encouraging to have an unusual attendance of pastors and leading church workers of the Bay region at all the meetings, and one morning session was specially given up to them when Dr. Gray spoke on the integrity of the Bible as the Word of God.

The Rev. W. P. White, D. D., of Albany,



Three of the Correspondence Department's Examiners at Work

Ore., who had planned and accompanied Dr. Gray on a teaching trip in that state, also took part of the program, speaking once and sometimes twice a day, illuminating his instruction along dispensational lines by a large and very clear and comprehensive chart.

All the expenses of the conference were amply met by the offerings and a few pledges previously obtained from interested individuals, while five hundred and fifty dollars additional in cash and pledges were given by the people for the work of the Institute.

Rev. Mr. Sutherland, of San Jose, president of the alumni association, suggested this gift to the Institute and presented the matter to the people, who responded heartily. Dr. McAfee and the trustees and session of his church deserve warm thanks for their cooperation in permitting these pledges to be secured, in offering the use of their church free of charge, and in promoting the interests of the conference in many other ways.

A banquet was held at the Hotel Shattuck on one of the evenings, when some forty former students and friends gathered around the tables, and brief speeches were made by Miss May Blodgett and Messrs. Sutherland, Holloway, Ogg, Coultes and Holmes. Dr. Gray also said a few words, and some of the old songs were sung.

The feeling was expressed at the banquet that there is a growing appreciation among the laity in favor of the things for which the Institute stands, and that the alumni should more than ever be on the alert for new students and for financial supporters of the work.

The following are the names of those who sat at the tables: May N. Blodgett, Wm. R. Bradshaw, Frances D. Davis, John Foster, Fred E. and Mrs. Holloway, A. A. Holmes, Letitia Simcoe, Florence Sutherland, San Francisco, Calif.; Mrs. Jacob Borglum, Rev. Axel and Mrs. Brandt, Grace Herriot, H. A. Holcomb, Mrs. H. A. Holcomb, Otis and Mrs. Ironmonger, William K. Sempey, Howard L. and Mrs. Taylor, Oakland, Calif.; C. H. Coultes, Rev. Clarence Dillaway Herriott, Lilian Taylor (Mrs. C. D.) Herriott, Mrs. Fanny H. Lincoln, Mrs. Moffett Rhodes, Jessie Snyder, L. A. Winchester, Mrs. L. A. Winchester, Berkeley, Calif.; A. K. Locker, Frances E. Standen, San Anselmo, Calif.; T. W. Harris, Casper, Calif.; Anna M. Stocking, Eugene E. and Mrs. Stocking, Sacramento, Calif.; D. W. Anderson, Hanford, Calif.; William Duncan Ogg, Eureka, Calif.; J. A. Sutherland, San Jose, Calif.; Rev. W. P. White, D. D., Albany, Ore.; P. W. Campbell, Grand Haven, Mich.; Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., Chicago, Ill.

A SURPRISE FOR THE BITTIKOFERS

At the monthly supper of the Institute Council, November 21, Mr. and Mrs. Talmage J. Bittikofer were presented with a large wardrobe trunk as an expression of the warm regard of the Council members, and their regret at their approaching departure. The presentation remarks were made in delightful vein by Dr. Ralston. Mr. and Mrs. Bittikofer begin their new labors at Glenwood, Ia., January 4, with Evangelist George Stephens.

JUNIORS ENTERTAIN SENIORS

Seniors of the fall term were entertained by the Junior class at a party in Keith Hall the evening of December 8. The program was enlivened by lantern slides reproduced from snapshots and cartoons of students. It included also a piano solo by Mrs. Marie Duffie, a vocal solo by Miss Florence Shoop, a recitation by Miss Grace Farr, a duet by M. G. Nelson and J. C. Murdock, and an address by the Rev. W. W. Ketchum. Ice cream and cake were served after the program. Arrangements were in the hands of Mr. Murdock.

DANIEL BRINK TOWNER

By E. O. Sellers

An Appreciation

Taken as an all-around musician, judged as a teacher, composer of gospel music, conductor, author and editor, or soloist, it is doubtful if D. B. Towner ever had an equal. Others of course, were his equal along one or more lines, but none could equal him along a combination of these various lines.

As a teacher he was without a peer, and he will ever be remembered by literally thousands of his students who have gone to practically every nook and corner of the globe.

A list of the prominent and successful song leaders at work today who have been his students will include, to be conservative, at least 75 per cent of all thus engaged. Charles M. Alexander is perhaps the most widely known, while here in the southland and among the Baptists alone, I can name men by the dozen, including practically every one of the leaders in this line of Christian work.

The directors of music in most of the Bible Institutes, as well as teachers in many colleges and conservatories have been instructed by him and felt the touch of his great, consecrated heart.

The writer's personal contact with D. B. Towner dates from his student days of 1897. To remember Dr. Towner's singing of "Paul and Silas" is one of the greatest spiritual uplifts of my life.

Now he has gone to join the ranks of the redeemed gospel singers of his generation—Sankey, McGranahan, Philip Phillips, Lowry, Doane, Sweeney, Palmer, Case and a host of others who won souls for the Master, and along with Luther, Charles Wesley and those of the past, are singing the song of "Moses and the Lamb."

For five years I was his associate in the Music Department of The Moody Bible Institute and on the Faculty nearly seven more. I want to acknowledge the inspiration of his life to me, also the debt I owe him for his teaching and the spiritual uplift of my contact with him through the years.

D. B. Towner knew God, knew how to pray and to lead souls to Christ. Not without his faults, like all of us, yet it can truthfully be said that in all that he did as teacher, composer or public performer, his one aim was to exalt the Christ he loved and served.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT NOTES

Rev. George E. Guille's fruitful teaching ministry in the North Avenue Presbyterian Church of Atlanta, Ga., the closing week of November, is reflected by an invitation for a return engagement next September. During December he gave three addresses at the Laymen's Missionary Movement Convention at Knoxville, Tenn., and a "book study" at the Philadelphia School of the Bible.

The Union Bible Classes now being taken "Through the Bible in Ten Weeks" by their teacher, the Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe, are generally still on the upward curve in attendance. During November the general averages were: Pittsburgh, 194; Pitcairn, 148; Youngstown, 396; DuBois, 102; Brookville, 368; New Castle, 260; the average for all classes per week is 1,444.

Dr. Henry Ostrom was a speaker in conferences on Christian fundamentals in St. Louis, Nov. 23-27 and Winnipeg, Dec. 7-14. He also preached in the First Baptist Church of Minneapolis, Thanksgiving Day.

Miss Elinor Stafford Millar's ministry at the Lancaster, Pa., Y. W. C. A., is thus summed up by the general secretary: "We found her wonderfully adaptable and sympathetic. Her spiritual messages were surely inspirational and we were truly warmed and stirred, especially those of us who are carrying the big responsibilities. Her special success lay in winning society and club women." Dec. 7-17 she filled an engagement with the City Mission, Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. Margaret T. Russell concluded her fall schedule at Palestine, Tex., where she gave a series of Bible studies in the Baptist church.

Mr. C. E. Putnam aroused unusual interest in Bible study at Rochester, Ind., and after filling his second engagement at Racine, Wis., was invited to return for a more extended period.

Rev. Rollin T. Chafer was engaged in field work in the southeastern district.

A LETTER OF APPRECIATION

Until recently the Chicago Branch of the Hebrew Christian Alliance held its business meetings at the Institute, and a letter from the secretary, Immanuel Gitel, expresses hearty appreciation for this courtesy.

The meeting place has now been changed to Zion's Mission, 3719 W. 12th St., because the work of the organization centers in that locality.

PERSONALIA

E. L. Wolslagel, '09, returned to the evangelistic field in November. His first engagement at Albany, N. Y., at a conference on Christian fundamentals was to be followed by one at Durham, Mo., and several in Florida.

John A. Ross, '10, representative of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, writes: "Just recently I had a young man accept Christ in a horse-stable. Christ is no respecter of places. I thank God for the training I received at the Institute."

George A., '17, and Mrs. McLeod (nee Joy Smith, '17), spent November at the Institute. Mr. McLeod is one of the "American Four" quartette associated with "Mel" Trotter's evangelistic work. J. H. Davies, '00, general representative, home district for the American S. S. Union at Philadelphia, Pa., writes of a journey he took through the mountain region of the South last summer, where services were held in log cabins and crude school houses without plaster or boards on the interior walls, and minus desks, the pupils sitting on long benches. He writes also of a typical evening meeting, after a supper of corn bread and biscuits, in front of a two-room home, with one lamp separating day from night, as the word of life was spoken to these very attentive people, living many miles from any railroad.

Herbert J. Bryce, '05, closed his work as pastor of Calvary Church, Des Moines, Ia., in October to become pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Paxton, Ill.

John A. Troy, '15, conducted the singing at several Methodist conferences on the Pacific Coast, and gave four addresses on church music at the Oregon Baptist state convention held at Salem, Ore.

Miss Lucia Dwight, '19, was the first member of the August '19 class to leave for the foreign field, sailing Nov. 15, for Egypt, where she will teach in a mission school under the United Presbyterian Board.

Gerhard, '16, and Mrs. Jacobson, '11, spent last summer at the Nanking Language School and are now stationed at Tangsi, China. They ask for prayers, especially for health, for daily progress in the language, and that the church there may have Spirit-filled preachers.

A. C. Emmons, '15, was ordained at Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 5, and is now located at Detroit, Mich., where he is pastor of Trinity United Brethren Church. He finds the people eager for the gospel and very active. They are planning to hold revival services in January.

J. Walter Field, '15, has accepted the pastorate of the Farnam Baptist Church, Farnam, Neb.

Joseph E. Phipps, '94, has been ordained a minister of the Presbyterian Church by the Presbytery of Lackawanna, in the Synod of Pennsylvania.

Miss Leila Loucks, '19, sailed Nov. 27, under the Ceylon and Indian General Mission, for S. India, where she will teach in the Hebron School, at Coonoor. Address, care Miss E. Chaplin.

Miss Emma L. Wick, '02, sends encouraging news from her field in S. Africa, with headquarters at Johannesburg. In referring to recent numbers of The Christian Workers Magazine she says, "I do appreciate them very much, and have been without them so long. May the Lord bless those who enable you to send them to the missionaries, who need such Bible food. Having been away from the United States nearly ten years, I do enjoy reading about the changes, and was trying to picture in my mind the present Auditorium of the dear old Moody Church. I am glad of the illustration in the September magazine."

A letter from Mrs. Radoykova, (nee Esther Pelasheva, '09), Rouschouk, Bulgaria, refers to the misery the war has brought to that country and the great spiritual need of the people. She earnestly desires prayer for Bulgaria, and herself, that she may be blessed in her work in the church with which she is connected. She says, "I am very glad I took the music course while in the Institute, because your method of conducting gospel music is not known here. I still possess the Alexander song book. We have had a week of revival meetings and many of the songs and solos I heard at the Institute, I trained young girls to sing for His glory. God speed the great work of the Institute."

L. M. Aldridge, '12, is associate pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Fort Worth, Tex. In a recent letter he says it would take him a life time, working twelve hours a day, to repay the Institute the debt of love he owes to it.

Frank H. Banyard, '18, is preparing for the ministry at Indianola, Ia., after having been in evangelistic work during the summer.

C. E. Bulander, '19, pastor of the Baptist church at St. Clair, Mich., reports growth in attendance and interest and asks to be remembered at the Fellowship meeting. He attended the recent Baptist state convention, during which fifteen former M. B. I. men gathered a dinner, and held a business meeting of the Michigan alumni.

Henry Woolnough, '15, and wife are located at Steger, Ill., having returned from overseas, where Mr. Woolnough served in the British Hospital Corps during the war.

Frank S. Clark, '98, writes from Rowayton, Conn., on behalf of his wife and himself, very appreciatively of Dr. Towner.

He was in the Presbyterian hospital in New York City, during November. Their home address is 1136 E. 2nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. They ask for the prayers of the Institute family.

Sidney E. Harris, '17, is preaching in Swanton, Neb., where his charge is a union of the United Brethren and Methodist churches.

A. W. Lagerquist, '90, Laohokow, China, writes that he and Mrs. Lagerquist expect to sail for America next April. He says the work has been harder the past year due to the restlessness of the people because of no settled peace. Many are fearful, and others are so engrossed in the effort to make ends meet that they do not find time to listen to the gospel message. A note of cheer is sounded because of a gift that enabled them to begin some special evangelistic work. Prayers for these efforts are earnestly desired, and also that the few remaining months of service before their furlough may be greatly blessed.

John Best, '91, pastor of Congregational church, St. Louis, Mo., was at the Institute during November.

L. H. Miller, '16, accepted the pastorate of the Baptist church at Blackville, S. C., Sept 1. As a result of special meetings, for which his brother Charles O., '16, led the singing, there were 35 accessions, 24 baptisms, and a deepened interest in the entire membership, which was manifested by an offering of $57,000 for the Baptist seventy-five million campaign and local church expenses, $63,000 for a new church building and parsonage, and an increase of $400 in the pastors' salary. "THE COMMITTEE OF FIFTEEN"

The first bulletin of the "Committee of Fifteen" has just been sent out. This Committee has its offices at 10 S. La Salle St., Chicago. Its purpose is to aid the public authorities in the enforcement of laws against pandering, and to take measures calculated to prevent traffic in women. This Committee maintains present relations with all the social organizations of the city of Chicago, coming into closer touch with the Juvenile Protective Association than any other. Officers of the Committee are Henry P. Crowell, President; Julius Rosenwald, 1st Vice-President; Edward M. Skinner, 2nd Vice-President; David R. Forgan, Treasurer; Edwin W. Sims, Secretary. Samuel P. Thrasher is Superintendent.

COLLEGE RELIGIOUS CONDITIONS

College religious leaders met October 4 in Boston to prepare the way for the inter-church survey of New England institutions for higher learning. During the general discussion the fact was brought out that it is difficult in most of the New England colleges to secure for the department of biblical literature a worthy place. The curriculum in most institutions is so arranged that the first two years are given to required studies outside of this department and the last two years the majority of the students are compelled to give most of their time to major and minor subjects.

The Gospel in Print

SUNDAY READING

A minister who was supplying a pulpit not his own was entertained in the home of one of the prominent members of the church. The conditions of the home life impressed him deeply; and although he was careful not to disclose anything that could identify the family, he referred to the Sunday spent in their home as among the dreariest and least profitable in his whole experience.

The family, straggling down to breakfast Sunday morning, brought with them the gossip acquired at various places on Saturday night. Two of them had been to the theater, one had been to a party, most of them had been out late. More than one of the household began the day with a headache.

On the breakfast table were three Sunday newspapers. On these the different members of the family pounced, and were soon hidden behind them.

Only the father and the mother went to church; the young people were "too tired," and did not care to dress.

After the morning service the minister found the newspapers well shaken out and scattered. There was hardly a chair that did not contain one or more parts of one or another of them.

After the Sunday dinner the papers were seized again, and creased and recreased in the weary quest for new sensations.

The home had a good library, but no member of the family opened a book that day. The library had the poems of Whittier, Lowell, Longfellow and Holmes, as well as those of Shakespeare and Tennyson, but no member of the family read one of them, much less any distinctively religious book.

The hymn book on the piano lay under a trashy song that came with one of the newspapers. The family Bible on the center table was buried deep beneath the so-called "comic supplements."

The whole atmosphere of the home all day was commonplace, worldly and depressing. There was nothing that lifted the thoughts of the members of the family above the wearisome round of the world and the things of the world. Business, politics, scandals and bargains were the themes of conversation. The three secular newspapers, each with its sixty-four pages, covered not only the seats, tables and carpets; they covered the spiritual life of the family as well.

Without questioning the morality of such a Sunday, what may we not say of the pity of it? Is the soul of man so mean, so sordid, that not one hour or one day in the week can be saved for an acquaintance with the better things of literature and of life, and for the higher ministrations of the spirit?—Youth's Companion.

A Study of DEATH and the FUTURE LIFE

"What a good thing it would be if all Christians could have this book. Most of the books that have come under my study on "The Last Things" are hard for the common reader to understand. Your book, while every page bears the marks of a ripe scholarship, treats the subject of the Future Life in a way so lucid as to interest and comfort the ordinary reader."

What 15 Cents Will bring You From the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 15 cts. in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 27th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, briefly—here it is. Send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send you the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends.

Washington has become the World's Capital and reading the Pathfinder is like sitting in the inner council with those who mold the world's destiny.

Has GOD Called YOU?

I secured 120 subscriptions in two months, while soliciting in Wisconsin. I would advise any one desiring to secure a scholarship to begin early, as it is less difficult to secure the required amount, and you will enjoy the work far more than if put off until a few weeks before entering the Institute. I am still soliciting subscriptions. —P. J. Andreasen

It affords me pleasure in recommending The Christian Workers Magazine scholarship plan to any one hungering for a broader knowledge of God's Word. I won the scholarship in four weeks. What has been done can be done again. I praise God for the trials and difficulties which He led me into while canvassing for this scholarship. If God has called you, go to day. —D. A. Chapman

I am glad to recommend the offer given by The Christian Workers Magazine as a desirable and profitable, as well as enjoyable means of obtaining a scholarship for entrance to The Moody Bible Institute.—Sadie Poage

I take pleasure in recommending to anyone this plan, who is contemplating coming to The Moody Bible Institute. I am now enrolled in the Institute and enjoy my work very much. The spiritual as well as mental training is wonderful.—Mildred Couch Robinson

I wish to thank you for the opportunity to secure subscriptions to your magazine, to help pay my expenses through school; the task was very easy, I secured 125 subscriptions in two weeks; all I met were willing subscribers, and my friends are still sending in subscriptions, and I can recommend this plan to anyone that has not the necessary funds to start their schooling with.—C. E. Taylor

to do Christian Work

If you feel the Lord is calling you to do more definite work in winning souls, remember He has provided for you a place to be thoroughly trained for that work. Christian people are providing the funds for your education. All they ask is that you pay for your board, room and washing. This training is offered to you FREE at

The Moody Bible Institute

You may have a catalog giving full particulars, about the courses of study in the Bible, and music on request.

Are You Delaying The Work

by not responding to the call?

If it is because you need funds for your board and room, we offer you a plan of self-help by securing new subscriptions to The Christian Workers Magazine as follows:

Scholarship Offer

To any earnest young man or woman, pastor or Christian worker who desires a better preparation for Christian work and is accepted as a student of The Moody Bible Institute, who shall send in 130 new annual subscriptions, cash with order, within five months from the date of acceptance of this offer, The Christian Workers Magazine will provide a scholarship for one term (fifteen weeks) stay at the Institute, consisting of board and room (with another), heat and light (tuition being free). The student will be amenable to the same rules and conditions as apply to other students enrolled.

Candidates will send orders to The Christian Workers Magazine, 163 Institute Place, Chicago, and must complete the payment for the required total of 130 subscriptions within the specified time. In case of failure to fulfil this condition, the publishing agent will refund to the candidate the usual agent's commission on every subscription.

The acceptance of this offer insures (1) a helpful business experience, (2) a valuable training in how to meet and interest people, and (3) untold good done by the circulation of a helpful religious magazine.

Suggestions An entire young people's society or Bible class may work for a scholarship, nominating one of its members to use the same.

A pastor needing a trained layman to assist him, will find the scholarship plan an advantageous one for educating a young man or woman from his own congregation.

The scholarship plan may be used to extend the term of training for a student already in attendance at The Moody Bible Institute.

A series of scholarships may be planned, insuring the beneficiary, for instance, at least a year's uninterrupted stay at the Institute.

The Christian Workers Magazine
163 Institute Place Chicago, Illinois

I heartily recommend this method to obtain the comparatively small amount of funds necessary to secure what I believe to be the best instruction in the Bible or in Bible Music, that can be obtained anywhere.—Minerva S. Weil

We are very glad to recommend this plan for securing a scholarship to anyone wishing to enter The Moody Bible Institute. We are now soliciting subscriptions for the magazine—Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Young

I encourage every prospective student to act upon this splendid proposition. My testimony as a member of the Senior class, is this: I considered no effort too great which would enable me to enroll as a student in The Moody Bible Institute, upon which the richest blessing of God continually rests and where I have enjoyed the happiest two years of my life preparing for the service of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.—Geo. F. Orloff

I am grateful for the opportunity presented by The Christian Workers Magazine to secure a scholarship to The Moody Bible Institute, and would recommend this plan to anyone who loves the Word of God and is anxious to study it. I also recommend to anyone to begin work immediately. As a rule it requires some time and effort to secure the necessary number of subscriptions. I worked four months to secure the necessary number. Some may succeed in less time.—Myrtle P. Harrod

It is with pleasure I recommend obtaining subscriptions to this magazine to secure a scholarship or money towards the expense of attending The Moody Bible Institute. I was able to obtain about forty subscriptions in ten days during our summer vacation, most of them among the church members of Des Moines. It enabled me to leave this Magazine in homes of people where the Word of God is appreciated, and to come into personal contact with the people and, in many cases, to speak a word for my Saviour.—Beulah Mac Millan

Fourteen Satisfied Investors

Fourteen persons, who in previous years made investments under the Life Annuity Plan of The Moody Bible Institute, have recently sent in additional funds, adding to these investments.

Why?

First, they want their money to go as far as possible, after they have passed away, in spreading the gospel throughout the world, and are satisfied that it will be wisely used in furthering this purpose by The Moody Bible Institute.

Second, they have been receiving their annuity interest regularly and promptly.

Third, they realize the great importance at this critical time in the world's history of assisting The Moody Bible Institute to press forward to the utmost in its work of multiplying the number of Bible-trained Spirit-filled Christian workers, able "rightly to divide the word of truth."

The following interesting statements were taken from recent letters received from three of the largest old-line life insurance companies:

> "It seems to be a peculiar thing that annuitants are usually long lived. This is attributed to the fact that they have no cause for worry as to their existence or source of support, and with this eliminated from their minds they go on living to a ripe old age."
> "It is an old saying in the ranks of the M—— Life that while men who take life insurance policies die as per schedule, those who buy Annuity policies live on, and of course annuity contracts operate just the opposite from life insurance."
> "Annuitants live to an older age than insured lives, even although the insured lives are medically examined and annuitants are not; . . . . the mortality among annuitants is very low."

Full particulars of the Institute's Life Annuity Plan will be sent upon request. Address, THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE, 153F Institute Place, Chicago, Illinois.

ST. JOHN 10.

31 Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth.

32 Since the world began was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.

33 If this man were not of God, he could do nothing.

34 They answered and said unto him, Thou wast altogether born in sins, and dost thou teach us? And they cast him out.

35 Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when he had found him, he said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God?

36 He answered and said, Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?

37 And Jesus said unto him, Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee.

38 And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshipped him.

39 ¶ And Jesus said, For judgment I am come into this world, that they which see not might see; and that they which see might be made blind.

40 And some of the Pharisees which were with him heard these words, and said unto him, Are we blind also?

41 Jesus said unto them, If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth.

CHAPTER 10.

VERILY, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

2 But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep.

46

ST. JOHN 10.

3 To him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out.

4 And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice.

5 And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers.

6 (This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them.)

7 Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep.

8 All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them.

9 I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

10 The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.

11 I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

12 But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth: and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep.

13 The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep.

14 I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine.

15 As the Father knoweth me, even so

"THE BOOK THAT HAS HELPED MOST IN BUSINESS"

In an article published in a leading magazine under the title above it is related that a sales manager in a very successful business house asked the proprietor to suggest a course of reading that would make him a bigger business man.

REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D.
Author of the Synthetic Course

"What's the best book on business ever written" he inquired.

"The Bible," was the prompt reply.

Here are a few extracts from the business man's discourse which followed:

"All of us who are successful at selling ought to have a degree conferred on us, H. N. D., Doctor of Human Nature. If we win it's because we know men, if we lose our sale, it's because we have lost the key to our prospect's disposition and make-up. The Bible is the greatest encyclopaedia of human nature in the world."

"Any man who wants to know how a crowd will act can learn all about it by studying the one that Moses led around in the wilderness. Tremendously grateful to him for getting them out of slavery—grateful, yes, for about five minutes. No sooner were their feet a little wet in the wilderness, and their backs bitten a little by the mosquitoes, than they began to criticize Moses and wish they hadn't come. People haven't changed one single bit since those days. Moses found he couldn't keep them 'sold' for twenty-four hours at a time; all the sales work (persuasion) had to be done over and over again, constantly. We've discovered the same thing; that's why our advertising runs all the year round, in season and out."

"I read all this sales convention stuff that you send to my desk; I like to see what you sales managers and advertising managers are thinking and writing about. And do you know there's hardly a big idea in the whole mass of your stuff that isn't written somewhere in the Bible."

"It's the greatest course in direct forceful English in the world. As a drill in simple, direct, powerful Anglo-Saxon, the kind of language that we use in advertising, and in modern business, there has never been, and never will be, a book to equal this."

"No business or business man gets very far in this world without a big, long-distance vision of where they are going, and why. The Bible is the supreme developer of vision."

These quotations are given as merely an interesting aspect of the study of the Bible which is not often emphasized. And in urging our readers to enrol at once for one of THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE'S Correspondence Courses, we will add the following:

Says the Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, United States Senator: "That the Bible should be studied by all men and women must be the desire of everyone who reflects at all upon the condition of the world at the present time."

"I never knew a wise man who was not familiar with the Scriptures," says the Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy. "I never knew a public speaker who reached the hearts of his hearers who did not draw upon the Bible for his best illustrations and most convincing epigrams. No man is educated who is not versed in the Book of books."

It cannot be emphasized too strongly that nothing is more needed in our country today than Bible study and that there is rich reward to the individual student who earnestly undertakes it. We suggest that you consider and decide promptly on the course you prefer to take, and then fill out and mail the coupon below.

Testimonials of warmest appreciation are constantly being received from our students. For example:

"I am enclosing the last lesson of my course. As I finish it I find no words to express my thanks for the help it has given me. Neither is it possible for me to tell how greatly it has enlarged my knowledge of the Word. The Bible means infinitely more to me because of this series of lessons."

"I wish to express my appreciation of what this Bible course has done for me. It has been invaluable to me in my Sunday-school and Teacher Training work, and has opened to me a vision of the significance of the Holy Scriptures that is of inexpressible joy and satisfaction. No Christian should miss the opportunity of widening his knowledge and deepening his experience which is placed at his disposal in this work."

We offer eight courses, as follows: Synthetic Course, Scofield Course, Bible Doctrine Course, Bible Chapter Summary, Introductory Bible Course, Practical Christian Work, Evangelism, and Christian Evidences.

Publisher's Stuff

Beginning of a diary, written by light of an oil lamp—Uncle Sam still runs the trains—the missionary funds, etc.—the first poem (more to come)

DECEMBER 17, 1919. I am not waiting for opinions on the "Publisher's Stuff" columns at this writing—I am waiting at Leaf River, Ill., for a train from Omaha to take me back to Chicago. The Publishing Agent's life is one grand round of pleasant experiences. I wanted the readers of The Christian Workers Magazine to get their January number on time—so I took the 5:58 a. m. train from home to Chicago this morning—met my magazine assistant at 6:30—had 30 minutes for breakfast—and went to Mount Morris, Ill., to O. K. the page proofs and see that everything was ready to go to press. Before starting I diligently inquired if there would be a train back and got an affirmative answer, but the information bureau forgot to say "tomorrow." Regular train service has not been restored. I found it out at this end of the line! Nevertheless there's a way back.

A good Flivver took us seven miles across country to get the 7:45 p. m. train (at 10 p. m.) with the prospect of getting home at 1 or 2 a. m. Here we are in a country depot—cold and snowing outside, but a big cannon stove roaring hot, and me writing this on the ticket agent's window sill. It's interesting. He is patriotic. An American flag is nailed above the ticket window which says by its waving "Uncle Sam Runs the Trains"—even if they are two or three hours behind time.

A Post Peon in India

Away back, months ago, my good friend D. Rees Jones, Kalyandrug, South India, sent me a picture of his post man or letter carrier—he called him his "post peon." Not a bad looking fellow. Maybe he will see his picture here.

(Extra! Click-clickety-click-click: the station agent got up—came out of his office, threw a bucket of coal on the fire, wet his finger and erased the chalk figures on the Bulletin Board—and marked our train up to 10:25 p. m.)

Our Missionary Funds

I am counting myself very happy to be able to send the magazine free to so many workers in the foreign field. Subscribers contributed $452.66 during 1919 to further this work and many are the letters of thanks coming to us from all over the world. Will you not do more for 1920? We also received $160.29 to send the magazine to workers at home.

JANUARY 2, 1920, 7 p. m. It is several days from December 17, 9 p. m., when the foregoing was written, until tonight. I am back at my desk again, and have passed through some strenuous days. It seems as though everybody took those circular letters I sent out soliciting subscriptions and renewals, as personal letters. I tell you it made me feel good—but the subscribers—what shall I say to them?—a thousand letters or more are piled up waiting to be tended to, and accumulating with every mail. Every one will be tended to in time, all books and magazines mailed—but think of the complaints. Why am I telling all this to you? To let you know The Christian Workers Magazine seems to be really coming into its own—the largely increased circulation which it deserves—and we are getting extra help to care for the work. Every subscriber ought to rejoice with us.

Scholarships

Several students are to be congratulated for securing subscriptions to pay their expenses this term. Mr. Nils Hanson has the banner record. He has secured 750 subscriptions since the summer vacation, last August. Miss Leona Smith, St. Louis, Mo., begins a term at the Institute on a scholarship. Mr. J. Alban Berry, Mr. Ballard, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Larson, Mr. Anderssen, Mr. Blanchard, come to mind as securing numerous subscriptions. These names will be recognized by their friends.

When We Get Subscriptions and When We Don't!

A pastor in Michigan who let his subscription lapse since December, 1917, is back again. He says:

"You have written so often and asked for my subscription. Admire your zeal and stick-to-it business policy. Here you got it. You have landed another. God bless you in your work.

"Rev. G. N. L."

Do you know Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston? We didn't know where he was until today. He supplied the First Presbyterian Church, Portland, Oregon, on December 28. He writes:

"Dear Friend:

"Your persistence in following up an old subscriber excites my admiration. I have prized the magazine; but have not renewed my subscription because of absence from Chicago for the winter. We are here for a while; but our stay is uncertain. . . . On my return to Chicago, or if we should make our residence permanently elsewhere, I shall expect to renew my subscription to the magazine.

"Cordially yours,
"Howard A. Johnston."

Will subscribers who meet Dr. Johnston please loan him the current numbers on his itinerary? Thank you.

A Free Copy for the Poorest Preacher

"Tennessee, Dec. 30, 1919.

"My Dear Sirs:

"I have just found an old copy of The Christian Workers Magazine, date, August, 1916. It has so impressed me that I want a copy of the current number. I am the pastor of the poorest mission that I know of and am the poorest preacher so far as this world's goods is concerned that I know. So I feel that your magazine must be what I need. I think it must be a real godsend to poor Methodist pastors.

"Am yours, — ——."

Send him a bill for a subscription? No sir. I put his name on the list and charged it to Missionary Fund No. 2 (for home missions).

"N. Y., December 24, 1919.

"Dear Brethren:

"I love to read your magazine because it stands for the whole Bible, but I am unable to subscribe for it. I am receiving a very small salary for my services as a minister to a little rural congregation and have only a very small sum to use for books and magazines. It would be a very acceptable Christmas gift if you could put me on your free list of needy and worthy Christian workers.

"Yours truly,
"———."

Entered for one year Missionary Fund No. 2.

Next Is a Letter from Shonga, Nigeria, West Africa

"18th Nov., 1919.

"Dear Sir:

"A stray copy of your valuable magazine has come to me. I am sure we are pleased with it. This was the October number. My wife and I believe it to be one of the best, if not the best magazine we have ever read. Those articles as 'An Open Door and Many Adversaries' are very good. Some of those mentioned are known to us, as is also the author of it. 'The Dying Thief' is also good. And 'Passing of the Nebular Hypothesis,' very good too. Such articles are what help missionaries in their lonely stations, and give encouragement such as nothing else does, save the Blessed Word of God.

"Now we don't want to get a magazine some one else should get, but we note that you ask if there are those who would subscribe for a missionary and we wondered whether we could get it in this way. Money exchange is high, and we are far from a place where we can get Post Office money orders. However, if you can tell us how to get money to you, we will try and do what we can to get it.

"Thanking you in anticipation, I am,
"Yours truly, I. W. S."

Enter one year Missionary Fund No. 1 (Foreign Missionary Fund). This is where I spend the money you send me for the fund. Some day, it may be, a good friend will give me, say $5,000 or $10,000 and I will just hurry up and find all the missionaries I can in the out-of-the-way places and put their names on the list of the magazine.

Bad Advertisers

I sure am catching it this past month for the advertisements that were printed the past several months. You ought to see the letters I received from subscribers. Yes, there is a house cleaning going on. Some advertisements that appeared in 1919 will not appear in 1920.

Do You Know "How-to-Memorize" Evans?

I wrote to him last month, thinking he might give me a new suggestion about his book. You know the title. It is almost time for me to catch the 9:15 p. m. train for home so I will just put in his letter as he wrote it to me:

"Wheaton, Ill., December 30, 1919.

"Dear Mr. Woodruff:

"Thanks for your very kind favor of the tenth. I must apologize for not replying thereto before, but you know how it is when one is immersed in conference work, and then the Christmas holidays, etc.

"The volume 'How to Memorize' is the result of both personal experience and much reading and research along those lines. The book may not be very large, but every word in it 'weighs a ton' so far as helping one to memorize is concerned.

"I can recall how, when a student, I would spend literally hours in trying to commit to memory a brief passage or quotation, and then, next day in the lecture room, when I needed to recall it, behold, it had gone! Others could remember, why could not I? Then I began to study closely a number of the best systems of memory work I could find. But they were so large, intricate and cumbersome. One had to travel over so much ground to get so little that remained. Could not the cardinal principles be simplified and abbreviated? I believed they could, and set to work to do it. It worked with me—and with thousands of others. A man wrote me that he had memorized the thirteenth of first Corinthians in thirteen minutes by following the principles laid down in 'How to Memorize.'

"Torrey says: 'Dr. Evans has a remarkable memory of the Word of God.' Gray says: 'You know its contents . . . as few men do.'

"Is this the 'personal statement—some little anecdote about the book' that you ask for? If not let me know and I will try again. Many thanks for your kindly interest in the book. I most heartily appreciate it. Yours sincerely,

"William Evans."

Want a copy? Send me $1.50 for a year's subscription to The Christian Workers Magazine and I will send the book.

Say, Do You Know Rev. John Page?

He was so interested in reading Publisher's Stuff and the rest of the fine articles in the January number, he rode right by his station, for five miles, and getting home two hours late had to cook his own supper. Mrs. Page told me so.

That Poem

Miss E. S. Millar hinted she had a poem in mind for the Publisher's Stuff but it's not here yet and I must send this copy to the printer. Watch for the next number.

Yours truly,
The Publishing Agent.

JANUARY 7—One cannot tell when writing a suggestion where it will find a response. I think it only fair to publish the first "poem" received for "Publisher's Stuff," this month. Thanks to Mrs. Thompson, from Kentucky.

The Sunday School Times Company Takes Over Five Fundamental Books

Lewis Sperry Chafer, the well-known Bible teacher, writer and evangelist, chooses this publishing house to circulate his works in a uniform series

SALVATION

Do you know just what God's saving grace does? The book "Salvation" unfolds clearly the great Bible doctrines of the cross, salvation, and the eternal security of the believer. It is a handbook for every earnest Christian. Dr. Griffith Thomas writes the Introduction, saying: "I rejoice in his faithful and forcible message, and am glad of the privilege of calling attention to a presentation of the way of salvation which is certain to lead all who read it earnestly to a living faith in Christ, and then to a constant joy because of the abundant and assured provision of God for the Christian life."

SATAN

Most people know little about the real character of Satan. God's Word has given us a detailed description of Satan's person and career, beginning with his creation and original condition, his fall, describing his present kingdom and all its developments, and telling how his final defeat, banishment, and death will come to pass. Satan is a mighty personage: do you know what God would have you know about him? Dr. C. I. Scofield says of this book "Satan," which will give you the facts: "I know of no other book on Satan . . . so clearly stated. . . . I sincerely wish that all believers, and especially all ministers and Christian workers, might read it."

PROPHECY

The great Baptist preacher and writer, the late Dr. H. C. Mabie, read through Mr. Chafer's book, "The Kingdom in History and Prophecy," the day it reached him, and wrote the author, "The present drift of the world and the church seems to be a tremendous confirmation of the truths you have so well set forth." The book gives the Bible's answers to the questions, "What is the Kingdom?" "What is the Church?" "When and how will Christ return?" The Evangelical Christian of Toronto calls the book "a masterly summary of the teaching of God's Word on the Kingdom," and says it "will prove a surprise and delight to all."

EVANGELISM

Two days before he died, the great English evangelist Henry Varley wrote about Mr. Chafer's book "True Evangelism": "I praise God for your writing. The ministry of the Holy Spirit is clearly revealed in the luminous pages. You have revealed the cause of much failure in past evangelistic effort." And Dr. A. B. Winchester, the great preacher and Bible teacher of Toronto, writes that his own heart is "full of praise to God for empowering His humble and honored servant to send forth a message so virile, timely, and throbbing with power." The book is nothing less than revolutionary in the work of soul-winning; all soul-winners should know it.

VICTORIOUS LIFE

"Mel" Trotter, the widely-known rescue mission worker, gave a series of addresses last summer at Winona based on the material in Mr. Chafer's book, "He That is Spiritual," with the result that two hundred copies of the book were sold in about eight minutes, and Mr. Trotter said he could have sold five hundred copies as easily, but the books could not then be had. The Editor of The Sunday School Times counts this book the fullest and most satisfactory Scriptural study of the Victorious Life that he knows. Making crystal clear what "holiness" is according to God's Word, and how to be holy, it is a masterly study of the life lived in the fulness of the Spirit.

Each of these remarkable books may be had at the uniform price of $1, postpaid. They are now bound most attractively in handsome dark red linen, and the five books together make a set of very unusual value, to be kept at hand for constant reference in one's Bible study, and to be used permanently. The best thing about Mr. Chafer's books is that they are true to God's Word. They have already been a blessing to tens of thousands of believers. To own a complete set of these books and to keep them in circulation will prove a fruitful ministry.

"Ships That Pass in the Night"

There is a little alley in Chinatown connecting two streets. It is dirty, dark and uncanny. One is apt to enter this gruesome place rather hesitatingly, and leave with a sense of relief. Murder and robbery have cast their slimy shadow over this passage. It has a haunted appearance and folks who believe in ghosts had better—keep out. I have gone through there a thousand times or more. Not that I am more courageous than others, but —I am used to it and then—it is a "short cut."

The other night, suddenly out of the murky gloom, a human form jumped in front of me. Like a flash, I realized that by my soft step I had approached unheard. In the uncertain light, I saw for a moment the face of a mere child; big, blue eyes, that seemed to pop out of her head in fright. She gave a suppressed scream, flew past me like a startled bird and was lost in the crowd outside. I stood for a moment, as she vanished. A skeleton with clothes on and a pale face happened along just then. He flicked a paper from his pocket and sniffed something up his nose. I thought of the girl—"just beginning" and then the boy "just ending." Pity stirred my heart. "Where does this lead to" some folks inquired, as I was leaving "the lane." With the scene just mentioned fresh in my mind, I almost replied "to Hell," but I didn't.

THE OBVIOUS THING

When you go fishing, go where the fish are! When God opens your eyes, and you decide to help Jewish Mission work—then remember, help the Jews where the Jews are!

They are in New York—2,000,000 of them. Every third man in New York is a Jew. It is the largest assembly of Jews ever gathered in one spot since the sun began to shine.

Think this over and ask God, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" Then, let us hear from you. We'll welcome your help and your prayers. We need them. Our literature gladly sent to all contributors.

THE
Christian Workers Magazine

February, 1920

Editorial Notes

"Pray for us, for we are persuaded that we have a good conscience, desiring to live honestly in all things" (R. V., Heb. 13:18).

Cut from the Loaf

We never take up our pen to ask others to pray for us, without something of self-examination on this point. Is our life, or is our work, in God's sight of that character, that we can conscientiously ask our brethren to remember us in prayer? It is great to have this confidence, and our plea is for your help that it may be always so.

Give Us A Name

An enthusiastic reader has likened the contents of the Christian Workers Magazine to a well-ordered dinner satisfying in quality, quantity and variety, and properly served. And we have heard some testify that a single article has sometimes been to them a whole meal in the strength of which they have gone many days.

However, we now mention it only because it has been said that the scope of the magazine, as indicated in its monthly contents, is wider than its name implies, and that it ought to be re-christened with a name to more correctly cover the extent of its appeal.

This is something important, and we ask our readers' judgment upon it.

Do you recommend a change, and if so what name would you suggest?

Campbell inquires,

> "Who hath not owned . . .
> . . the magic of a name?"

And Cowper says,

> "Some to the fascination of a name
> Surrender judgment hoodwinked."

The reverse expresses our motive, however, for although we own the magic of a name, yet we wish our name surrendered to judgment.

We would have our readers bear in mind that the magazine is interdenominational; also that it is uncompromising in defense of "the faith once delivered to the saints," but at the same time catholic in its outlook in the sense in which the Bible touches the interests and activities of men in every phase of individual, community, national and international life and relationship. For this reason, it not only presents contributed articles illuminating Bible truth and dealing with biblical and related subjects of timely interest, but also occasional reprints, from secular as well as religious publications, of value as illustrating the working out of God's plan in the world.

It comments editorially, and always from the Bible viewpoint, on current news and events. It does the same with reference to social, moral, political, industrial and commercial conditions and problems, including biographies of eminent men and women which yield lessons applicable to the times.

It is a Bible magazine, but not in the exclusive or technical sense. It ministers to the needs of preacher, Sunday-school teacher and Christian worker of every name, but it also appeals to business men and other classes of readers who would not be distinctively classed as Christian workers.

Its contents are before you from month to month, and in the light of it we ask what name will most correctly indicate that which it stands for—its scope, standard and spirit?

We are asking God to aid us in answering this question, and shall be grateful if you are made His instrument in meeting our need.

A substantial payment in money will be given the author of the title which we may ultimately select from those offered to us prior to April 1. And further, to stimulate effort, we will compensate the authors of the next two most desirable titles as determined by our publishing board.

The title and its explanation if it requires one should be stated in not more than twenty-five words; and the name of the author should not appear with the title, but be enclosed in a separate and sealed envelope accompanying it. Address letters to The Publishing Agent.

Introductions

We pray that our readers may get the benefit that we did out of the article on "The Nature and Power of Intercessory Prayer," by Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston. Dr. Johnston is the author of Biblical Criticism and the Average Man, Scientific Faith, and Studies for Personal Workers, all of them most interesting and useful books. He is at present supplying the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of Portland, Ore., recently vacated by Dr. John H. Boyd to come to McCormick Theological Seminary.

Professor Robertson, of the Baptist Theological Seminary, of Louisville, has been a frequent contributor to our pages, but none of his recent biographical sketches excels the present one on "Stephen the Seer" in fine analyses, comparisons and practical teaching for Christian workers of all kinds.

We need say nothing about the articles on the life and teachings of D. L. Moody, which find their chief value in his personality which is still fresh amongst us. But we should be surprised if the personal testimony to divine guidance from Miss Waite's pen were not to many the most comforting word which this issue contains. Miss Waite was one who knew D. L. Moody well, and for whom as a Christian worker he had a high regard.

"Missionary Life in East Africa" will prove fascinating to more than those who are especially interested in Missions. And "Missions" leads us to express the hope that Professor Hamlin's report on the suffering in Armenia may result in generous contributions to the Committee on Armenian and Syrian Relief.

Is the Climax Nearing?

Last month the newspapers contained a Madrid dispatch to the Central News saying that political and diplomatic circles foreshadow an approaching union of the nations of western Europe, comprising Great Britain, France, Spain, Belgium, and Portugal, which is regarded as a positive guarantee for the future.

If that be so, then we have the formation of the toes on one of the feet of Nebuchadnezzar's image, and it ought not to be very long before those of the other foot exhibit themselves. It seems almost too good to be true that events are so rapidly nearing a climax, but whether or not, let us all be diligent in these days to spread the glad tidings of a present salvation through faith in a once crucified, but risen and coming Lord.

Garfield and Coolidge

No, we are not going into politics, but only exercising the American right of free speech. In a few months the national nominating conventions will meet, and while they have not solicited our opinion, we sincerely hope that both of them will make their slogan "Law and Order." There are other necessary things to be attended to, such as the Peace Treaty, the high cost of living, the reduction of taxes, possibly the tariff, a better understanding between capital and labor, etc., but the vital thing is law and order. There has been such an absence of it of late in this country that men of all classes are beginning to speak disrespectfully of the government, and if that continues and spreads it means general anarchy and bloodshed.

The reason we use the names of these two men as the title of this editorial is because they stand out prominently just now in defense of the public against the classes. Dr. Garfield in the coal strike, and Governor Coolidge in the Boston police strike, had the courage of their convictions and stood for law and order without regard to personal consequences. There is no politics nor partisanship in our saying this, inasmuch as one is a Democrat and the other a Republican. Neither of them is likely to receive a nomination, but if we know anything of the under-current of public feeling, such nominees would be a tonic to the body politic just now, and put more hope and courage in us than anything else that could be done. They would mean victory, too, for the party that dared to put them on its ticket.

Compel all classes to patiently obey the law, and, humanly speaking, there is enough wisdom, patriotism and sense of fairness and public righteousness in this great nation to settle every question now before us for the general welfare.

George Washington

We trust our readers will be as pleased as we are with the rather unusual and very beautiful picture of the father of his country on our cover. It is there because it is so attractive, and because this is the month in which we celebrate his birthday.

It is well to look on his strong and placid face, and recall his valor, wisdom and unselfish patriotism, in these days of government vacillation and divided counsels, of profiteering and place-seeking, of strikes and demagogy, of Reds and I. W. W.'s.

The memory of colonial and Revolutionary days ought to have a purifying and steadying effect upon our spirits, and lead us once more to "crave

The austere virtues strong to save,
The honor proof to place or gold,
The manhood never bought nor sold!"

Two Sides of a Question

Some of our readers think that the article in our last issue by Mr. Huston, "The Bible Confirmed by Science," places us in the position of contradicting ourselves because of that by the Rev. Clarence H. Benson on the "Passing of the Nebular Hypothesis," which appeared in October.

But such is not the case as we have not editorially taken a stand with either. Like most other orthodox Christians we have believed in the nebular hypothesis, but we confess that the facts presented by Mr. Benson weaken its hold upon us, and we are glad to be able to think that by relinquishing it we can confirm the Bible still more, which would be the ambition of Mr. Huston as well as ourselves.

In the meantime we are always pleased to open our pages to two sides of such a question when they are presented in the spirit and with the ability of the authors in question.

* * *

This is what we said to ourselves when we looked at page 371 of our last issue, "Two Baptist Homilies." We found one of them on that page, but where was the other?

Find the Other One

After a search it was discovered hiding on page 385, under the title "Well-Pleasing to God."

All we dare say is that the two were together when they left the editors' offices, but for discretionary reasons we pause at that point.

The New Attack of Spiritualism and How to Meet It

Editorial

OF WRITING books on Spiritualism in these days there is no end. Several of them we have read, but with a single exception, and that a foreign publication and quite inadequate in its treatment of the subject, we found none that could wisely or conveniently be put into the hands of a Christian desirous of learning how to meet and deal with this error from a biblical point of view.

Some were too technical, some too bulky and expensive and some so mixed with other error as to be impossible to recommend. By all odds the best among them was that of a Roman Catholic layman.

Not a few were written by those who were well-informed on the scientific phase of Spiritualism, the findings of the Society of Psychical Research or the doings of mediums and seances, but their authors appeared either ignorant of or else indifferent to the Bible, which to the Christian, of course, holds the first place and is of final authority.

Some of the writers were of the novelist type like Sir A. Conan Doyle, Basil King or Booth Tarkington, and positively antagonistic to Christianity, considering it a confirmed failure. They referred to the Bible to ridicule its teachings or to wrest their meaning into conformity with their own views, being convinced, as one of them said, that Spiritualism is "not only a new religion but the coming religion."

I

We intended to briefly analyze one of these books for the sake of the warning they contain, but this has been so well done by the Sunday School Times in the case of Basil King's The Abolishing of Death, that we take the liberty to quote. The reviewer confesses the masterful character of the work and the fact that it intelligently recognizes the fundamentals of the Christian faith, but, as he adds, it just as intelligently rejects them.

The unique inspiration of the Bible is rejected.

The finality of the Bible's message, as a complete revelation from God for all men for this life, is rejected.

The unique deity of Christ is rejected.

The necessity for the blood atonement of Christ is rejected.

The existence and reality of sin are rejected.

God's word that some men will be lost and some will be saved is rejected.

The reality of death is rejected.

The need of faith in Christ as Saviour as a condition of eternal life is rejected.

God's word as to hell, or the second death, is rejected.

The lines between sin and holiness are obliterated.

And the divinity of all men, which the Bible denies, is declared.

II

It is astonishing, and saddening too, to read some of the arguments advanced in books and other writings on this subject by Christian ministers in their efforts to dissuade their flocks from following these false shepherds.

One warns them to beware of the medieval system of demonology, which on further investigation turns out to mean really Bible demonology. He would have his ministerial brethren also deny absolutely that a medium can receive communications from another world, because, he adds, "this would make it inconsistent to suggest that their communications were from evil spirits"! It seems almost impossible that such a man ever could have consulted his Bible except as he may have gone to a book of familiar quotations to select a text.

That mediums can receive communications from another world there is no doubt, nor is there any doubt that their communications are from evil spirits, for the Bible confirms both propositions. That is not to say, however, that all mediums receive such communications, nor that any medium receives them in every case, there are frauds perpetrated as every one knows; but in principle it is as foolish to deny this as it is for an ostrich to hide its head in the sand and suppose that it can not be seen.

Another expresses the opinion that it is perfectly natural to seek communion with those we have loved and who have passed beyond, and that there is no reason why we should not talk with them if they are near to us; but advises against it because "the means of communication and the machinery of contact is as yet so imperfect"! In other words, as soon as scientists have perfected the apparatus, communications between the living and the dead may be popularized, not merely without harm to any but with positive benefit to all. It is like the aeroplane which will soon lose its interest for sportsmen and scientists and become a common carrier.

Inconsistent Teaching

Strange to say, this opinion is from a writer of the evangelical type apparently, for he goes on to say that while such intercourse with the dead would be a great comfort and a renewed assurance of the persistence of life after death, yet after all that is not religion. "Religion," he truly witnesses, "is the consciousness of God, the sense of redemption from sin through Jesus Christ, joy and peace in the Holy Ghost, service of the world, and love and tenderness for all mankind." One wonders that a man so intelligent in the gospel could possibly be led into folly of this kind and into such gross contradiction of the Bible. It may be natural enough for us to seek communion with our departed, but the reason we should refrain from it is because God has forbidden it. What further do we need?

Perhaps as confusing as anything we have seen was a review in an English evangelical periodical of four new books, in which the claims and teachings of Spiritualism were weighed in the balance and found wanting, and as to which the reviewer said he heartily commended them all. Two of these books were thoroughly sound and biblical in their contention, but one of the others was that referred to above as containing the theory that mediums could have no intercourse with demons, and the fourth advocated as an offset to Spiritualism that Christians give more diligence in intercession of the saints and prayers for the dead.

The reviewer would explain his inconsistency doubtless, by the circumstance that all agreed in teaching that between Spiritualism and Christianity there was no affinity. Nevertheless, if such lack of discrimination were everywhere, we could well appreciate the remark of another Englishman that "the word 'Christianity' has undergone such enlargement that I scarcely know what it means when I see it."

III

Speaking further of the inability and lack of biblical knowledge in dealing with this subject on the part of many who ought to be "teachers in Israel," it recalls the situation when Christian Science first raised its head as an avowed rival of the church, and the ministry was thrown into a panic.

And by the way, the editor of Christian Work on his return from England not long since, reported that now one seldom hears Christian Science referred to there. The war, he said, has dissipated all illusions as to the non-existence of evil, and to quote his words, "Men who have been buried under a shower of legs, arms, heads and mutilated trunks of human bodies falling all about them, do not make easy converts to that faith. But everybody is talking about Spiritualism, and spiritualistic meetings are being held all over the country, and there are seances on every street. So alarmed have the churches become that the preachers are delivering sermons regarding it, and the religious press is printing weekly editorials."

Spiritualism and Christian Science Compared

It was the same in this country and especially in and around Boston, in the early eighties which saw the rise and development of Mrs. Eddy's delusion. Of course it was the proper thing to deliver sermons and write editorials against it if only they used the right ammunition and aimed straight; but pastors and church committees not a few, were ready to capitulate or compromise after the first campaign, and to admit the validity of Christian Science as a church and grant letters dismissory to it. We remember that A. J. Gordon was proclaimed a saviour when in an issue of the Congregationalist of April, 1885, he contributed an article, later circulated by the thousand in leaflet form, entitled, "Christian Science Tested by Scripture." Everybody thought Scripture should be recognized in the premises and that its dictum would settle the matter at least for believers, but until Dr. Gordon rose up to say the word, no one else seemed able or willing to go about it.

History is repeating itself, but while many, like the Hebrews with Saul at Gilgal, are going "over Jordan to the land of Gad and Gilead," not a few are remaining true and with trumpet of no uncertain sound proclaiming a "Thus saith the Lord."

We are happy to join their number, and at the request of several of our readers we have in mind a series of articles, which later may form the chapters of a book, intended to aid Christians in understanding and meeting the error of Spiritualism from the Bible point of view.

Our next will deal with the modern history of Spiritualism.

The Nature and Power of Intercessory Prayer

By Rev. Howard Agnew Johnston, D. D.

An address before the Missionary Union of The Moody Bible Institute

IF I WERE to ask you to take paper and pencil and write down what you conceived to be the highest, finest expression of a victorious Christian life, I wonder what you would write! Perhaps the announcement of this subject might lead you to think of something that you might otherwise not have written, for I have asked that question without any intimation as to the subject of my address, and several have told me what has come into their minds.

I will not take time to suggest the various ideas they have thought of and would have written down as the highest, finest expression of a victorious Christian life. But no one yet ever told me that this was in his mind. This is what Jesus Christ would say, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should abide; in order that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you" (John 15:16). In other words, it seems that Jesus makes it perfectly plain that the highest, finest, noblest expression of a victorious Christian life is in this—prevailing power with God.

Jesus said to His disciples, in John fourteen, in substance, this: "Now I am going away from you. I am going to the Father, and I want you to begin now a new feature of service, something you have not done before. Hitherto ye have asked nothing. I want you to begin the business of asking God for things. It is going to be your great business now, because I am going to Him, to ask God for things." And He said, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do that the Father may be glorified in the Son. He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to the Father."

An Undreamed World of Power

We must realize that so many times those disciples of His heard His words for the first time. It is hard for us to realize that. They never heard such a thing as that before, and they said, "What a marvelous thing the Master has said! Can it be that He means to tell us there is a marvelous world of power that is to be opened to us, of which we have never dreamed?"

And Jesus said, "Yes, that is what I want you to realize"; because, in John 15:7 He said almost the same thing—"If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." And they looked again and said, "That is almost what He said a bit ago. What a wonderful thing this is! Surely He can hardly mean to say such a thing as this to us!"

And Christ said, "Yes, I want you to get this, all I am telling you about this life of abiding in me in a fruitfulness that will glorify the Father, all I am telling you about this new law of life that will drive you out to win a world for me, all I am telling you about this crystallizing of your life into one like mine, this abiding that shall develop into a permanency of character, I am telling you all this in order that you may climb up, up, up, up to the place of asking my Father for things and getting them." That is the supreme objective.

Why did He say that? Go back to the second Psalm. There we have the Father saying to the Son, "Ask of me and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession." Now God only can do that. God only can give the nations to Jesus Christ. God only can give individuals to Jesus Christ, working by His mighty Spirit. He only can regenerate, He only can cleanse and sanctify, and keep and fill, and gird for service and use to the salvation of the world. God only can do it. And He said to the Son, "Ask of me and I will give thee the nations."

Christ Working Through His Church

But, mark you, Jesus could not ask until after His cross, until after the broken tomb, until after He had returned to where He was before, where He now ever liveth to make intercession for us; for, in that seventeenth chapter of John, where we have an insight into His marvelous intercessory life, He says distinctly that He is not praying for the world immediately, directly, but He is praying for His church. "I pray for those who believe on me and those who shall believe on me through their word—I pray for them." Why? "In order that they may be sanctified, in order that they may be faithful," —in order that we, rather, shall we say, for we are in that number, that we may be true to His plan for us, that through a witnessing and interceding church the world might believe. O yes, the world was in His objective beyond His church; but the teaching is perfectly clear; Christ can only ask now through us.

He can only ask through us from the earthly side. He ever liveth to make intercession, not immediately for the world, but for His church; that His church may be sanctified, that His church may be true. And this is the pathos, the tragedy of the centuries since He went back to the throne—that His church has not been true. Two thousand years of Israel's failure that the world might know of the true God, and nearly two thousand years of the church's failure likewise, with more people alive today who have never heard of Jesus Christ than were on the earth when He was here in the flesh. Why? Because we have never entered into His will touching His plan to enable God, if you please, according to His law, to release His saving power for the human race.

If there be one thing that should burden us, it is the realization of the task that He has given us, in which we should constantly emphasize the truth that the secret of all our power is that we should have God taken into account and related to this thing according to His law, that we can do absolutely nothing without Him, absolutely nothing.

You know there flashed upon me recently this, that we have a way of thinking God is laborer together with us. We have a way of thinking that, and it is a real danger. No! We are laborers together with Him. Reverently speaking, God is the whole thing. He only hath the power. Once hath God spoken, twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God. Let us get it. Let us realize it. It enters into everything.

What Is a Burden for Souls?

Two things come out of a burden for a soul. First, you are driven to God in intercession for that soul. We have no real burden unless that be the first inevitable sequence. Secondly, you are filled with a great desire that God might enable you to speak as a true witness to Him to the souls that need Him. When the disciples came to Jesus in Luke eleven, they came with this conviction.

There is a marvelous thing about the prayer life of our Master. They had been watching that prayer life of Jesus. In almost every instance of the manifestation of God's power and presence in the life of Jesus in a distinct way we read that Jesus prayed, and it was as He prayed these things came, and the disciples realized there was something there they did not know anything about. Those disciples had been saying their prayers as we have, but they had never known how to pray, and they knew there was no power in their prayers, just as we know, for the most part, that there is very little power in ours. And they said, "Lord, we want to know the secret of this thing. We realize you have something we have not." And so Jesus, as you remember, gave them that model prayer revealing the appreciation of our utter dependence upon God as the great Giver, the great Forgiver, the great Deliverer and the great Leader. God, God, God only.

And our right to pray to Him, to ask Him, not only for ourselves, but for others. He told them that story about the man who had his friends coming out at midnight and he had no bread for them. He went to a neighbor's home to get bread, for his friend. That is a picture of the ministry of intercession—of intercessory prayer. This man was not asking for bread for himself but for somebody else.

Mark another thing in that story. People say, "Well now you must remember when we talk about intercessory prayer, when we ask about praying for somebody who is not believing in Jesus Christ, that somebody else may be saved, you must remember that power to the contrary in the human will." I know all that, and so did Christ. But there is a very different thing which He put into illustration that day, and that was this: There was power to the contrary in the stubborn will of that man. He did not propose to get up and give the other man any bread; but, because of the other man's insistence, he finally did it.

In the eighteenth chapter of Luke, Christ taught the same lesson over again, that men ought always to pray and not to faint; and there again we have the judge who did not propose to do this thing the woman was asking of him, but because of her importunate prayer he did it. Christ clearly teaches that there is a law in the prayer life that reaches a certain point that releases the power of the Spirit of God to overcome the stubborn will. Surely that is there in both of those teachings of the Master.

Keep on Knocking

Now He comes to this emphasis of the importunate intercession. I am sure if we were to come and say, "Father, we want bread," He would be eagerly glad to give us bread for our own souls, but this is a stronger appeal than that. We want bread for a neighbor who has no bread.

Now get one thing there, a very humane, but suggestive thing, for that is what those disciples immediately appreciated. It was a very common thing for a man to come at midnight and visit you. In the east they travelled largely at night, especially moonlight nights. They did not travel in mid-day—it was too hot. So it was a most common thing for a friend to come and knock at that hour. And this man who went over to his neighbor's house said, "I have a friend who has come to me, and I have no bread for him." "Do not bother me, we are all in bed." They were all down on the floor, on a mat, the whole family under one cover. "And my children are all in bed with me."

This is what he did—kept on knocking. He knew what that would do. "Brother Jones, I must have this bread." I want you to get this, because this is the very thing those disciples got. They knew this knock. He kept right on. He knew what it would bring him. The children might wake up. Old folks wake up first, you know, and the man was afraid if his caller kept on knocking the little folks might wake up. He kept on. That got it. He gave him the bread.

And Jesus said, "I say unto you, Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you." Knock, just keep on knocking.

Every one of those disciples realized what the force of that figure was. He kept on knocking till it came. Now that is at the heart of Christ's teaching. There are of course other elements that enter in. I have not time to go into this whole story,—a most fruitful study for the development of the spiritual life, for the development of the prayer life, hindrances to the acceptable prayer, and conditions of prevailing prayer.

The Motive That Has Power

Now of course it does not mean that you are going to get the particular thing you ask for. Because you must be in the will of God, and you must be seeking His glory. If you come and ask God for something, and at the heart of it you have not intelligently this great, deep longing that you shall glorify God only, that His gift of this thing shall enable you to be used of Him in such a way that you will glorify Him because of the gift, and He can use you to make you a blessing, then you have asked amiss. He gives us the light that we need to know how to enter into His will not only, but He does something more.

Remember Romans 8:26, 27. "We know not how to pray as we ought, but the Spirit helpeth us in our infirmity and maketh intercession for us"—with us, in us—"with groanings that cannot be uttered." And God searcheth the hearts and knoweth the mind of the Spirit, for the Spirit prompts us to pray according to the will of God.

And now Jesus has that very thing in mind when He says, "Do not suppose you will always get the particular thing when you ask." You know, if you are a father, and your child asks you for what he thinks is bread and you realize it is a stone, you will not give the stone to the child. And if he comes and asks for what he thinks is an egg, you will not give him a scorpion.

Well then, "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will your heavenly Father give good gifts to them that ask him." Now that would have been the logical thing, we think, for Christ to have said. But He named what was the very best gift, and said, "How much more will your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." Why? Because the Holy Spirit will teach us the will of God, will get you to that point where you yourself know the will of God, and you will know the will of God so clearly about the big things, the vital things involved in the development of the life of the Kingdom of God in each individual heart, that you will be helped of the Spirit to pray for the things that are according to the will of God; and the Spirit will then give you a confidence that is marvelous.

He does not always give it, and then you may wonder just whether it is according to His will; but whenever He gives you that confidence so you cannot doubt, which He sometimes does, you cannot doubt when you come to pray for some things that seem to be impossible.

I could tell you of some marvelous instances of answered prayer. Some of you may have read Miss Vaughn's book Unanswered or Answered. If you have not, you ought to; there are marvelous instances in it, showing that God is eager to do definite things today, just as He did other times. The Holy Spirit will help you to get to the point where you realize that He is. You never can get there without Him.

A Burden With Peace

But now note what is in the 26th and the 27th verses. And then you come to the 34th verse and you find that Christ ever liveth to make intercession for us.

And do you suppose He makes intercession in a different way from the Holy Spirit, who maketh intercession with groanings that cannot be uttered? Have you ever thought of that? It must be that Christ makes intercession with groanings also. Of course there is a marvelous peace, but these two things can be in the same mother-heart—the peace that passeth understanding and the burden for a boy that is off yonder in sin.

Talk of the joy of heaven! But you must talk of the anguish of heaven today. The mediation is not over yet, and there will be great sorrow in heaven until the end of this mediation age, as well as the joy. When He says there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repents, what does that mean? Why that there was not that joy there before. The joy came in the salvation of the soul. We must realize the heart of God. We are told Jesus Christ is crucified afresh, He is crucified afresh now. Well that means that it hurts.

Oh, if we could but get past our lazy, lethargic, indifferent complacency, and know something of the fellowship of His ministry of intercession!

Now just one thing in the way of a condition. The nineteenth verse, "If any two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father who is in heaven" (Matt. 18: 19, 20). Now you know the Greek verb translated "agree" is the word "symphonize." "If any of you shall talk together"—and the twentieth verse explains the nineteenth. "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." He is the key-note in the orchestra, and all the instruments in the orchestra must be symphonized in the key-note, or there cannot be any real music.

It does not mean two people coming together and saying, "Now Lord we have met the conditions." I have heard that. They have met, but not intelligently. The two lives must symphonize in Christ clear down to bed rock—then you meet the condition of prevailing prayer.

The Higher Critic at Silver Bay

Do you wonder why there is so much impotency in prayer? Down at Silver Bay at one of the student conferences, a teacher of the Bible came in,—one of these higher critics who knew more than the Book. He came in on Wednesday, after four or five days of the conference, and after Mr. Mott had been speaking about the "Morning Watch"; and, if you ever get to know Mott, and you get into his life and he tells you something about what that "Morning Watch" has meant to him, you will understand the thing that explains John R. Mott.

Robert Speer had been there, and he had spoken. W. W. White was there, and he had said something about it too.

This professor said, "Let's take a little walk around the Bay." When we got off into a quiet spot he said, "I have discovered something here and I am concerned about it. I have discovered a great poverty in my own prayer life. I have been teaching my classes that we could not expect any answers to prayer in this great realm of law; that it did not do any good to ask God with the idea that He would answer us. I thought the aspiration was a good thing to cultivate."

I said "My dear man, do you mean to tell me you have been trying to bring the realm of the Spirit down to physical laws and their limitations? You have got to think of a father and his children. What would you think if my son should come to me and ask for something and I should reply that I could not give him that because we live in the realm of law? You would understand at once that there was something wrong about me."

The realm of the Spirit is a realm of marvelous freedom. If my child comes to me and asks for particular things, of course it will make a difference in what I do for that child. And that is just a suggestion, but it is all right in the line of suggestions. Christ made plain to us that our Father can be approached with a liberty far beyond that of any earthly father, in his home and relationship to his children. He has a freedom of infinitude, of liberty and power, so that He can touch any of us and do things for us.

Why Christ expected that His particular prayers would make a difference with God, and they did and yet, mark this in passing, we have a mistaken idea that if God wanted to, He could pour out a mighty blessing upon this very company here in the Moody Institute; that if God just wanted to, He could fill every heart here with a marvelous blessing.

Unbelief a Hindrance

That is a mistake. You remember that we are told Jesus could not do any wonderful work that day because of their unbelief. You remember that Jesus stretched His arms out over Jerusalem and said, "How often would I have gathered you, and ye would not." He said, "That is what I came for, to bring you the whole blessing of God. I want to pour out upon you a wonderful blessing, but you will not." And He could not do any more mighty works there because of their unbelief. They hindered Him in their unbelief. Keep that symphonized life in mind and move down into the Pentecostal moment where they are all with one accord in one place.

You see—all with one accord, symphonized. There could have been no Pentecost that day without that symphonizing, and through those days they continued with one accord in prayer, all through those days they had a symphonized church for a while, and nobody considered anything his own.

Marvelous thing that symphonized church. Then something happened, self came in; some thought they were not getting their share, and what did the apostles do? They got the believers together and said, "We have been making a mistake. We have been working too much and not praying enough."

People say, "Is not work prayer?" No, never. Work that is not penetrated and saturated with prayer is not work. "We have been working too much and not praying enough. Brethren. get somebody else to take care of these tables. We will continue to give ourselves to prayer and the ministry of the Word." Note the order, not first the ministry of the Word and second prayer, but first prayer and second the ministry of the Word. That is what they said. "We have been working too much to the exclusion of prayer."

A Woman Who Never Owned a Bible

Now let me give you an illustration or two. A few years ago there was a church where there was a Mrs. M———, a godly woman, who had learned the secret of intercessory prayer, and in the other half of the double house in which she lived, lived a woman by the name of McMurray. They were fine people, ethical, intelligent, quite cultured in other things than the Spirit.

She had not been inside of a church for years. The woman never had owned a Bible, and this Mrs. M——— became concerned, and we had a covenant of prayer about her. She asked her to go and see a Mrs. Chapman and she came to see this woman, who was upon a bed of pain, with agony. But on a little table by her bed-side was an open Bible, and her face was shining like the face of an angel, and she was talking about how good God was to her. In one and another detail she spoke about the goodness of God to her, and this Mrs. McMurray looked perfectly astonished, and when she came out she said,

"Will Christianity do that?"

"Do what?"

"O you know. Do that. Why if I would drive up and offer that woman a million dollars to change her life for mine, with all my health, to change her faith in her God, for my unbelief and ignorance she would pity me."

"Yes, she would pity you."

"If Christianity will do that I must know about it."

Next Sunday she came to church and I met her. The next week she went to St. Louis for a visit and developed the need of a surgical operation and came back nearly scared to death.

"I am going to die," she said. "I want you to tell me how to get ready to die right here."

I said, "You are very nervous, you have a hundred questions, and the doctors want you to be quiet. You are going to the hospital tomorrow. Mrs. McMurray, will you tell me what you do believe?"

"I believe in Mrs. Chapman's God."

I said, "Do you believe in Mrs. Chapman's God?"

"I have been thinking about it so much. I am sure that Mrs. Chapman's God is worth believing in."

"Well," I said, "Do you think that, as a little child, you can trust Him as your Father for a day or so, till your operation is over? Can you trust Him as a child would trust her father? Put away these doubts and we will discuss this matter when the hospital experience is over."

"Well," she said, "I can try."

"Will you try?"

"Yes."

And we had a prayer. She went to the hospital and I had a talk with her about what it meant to take Christ, but the thing I asked her to do was to trust God, and she did. The next day they told me the operation was successful and in a couple of weeks they let me go to see her, and then they told me she was very weak. When I came into her room, she held up a little hand and said, "I am a Christian now."

She had never seen a Bible, and I wondered, and, as I came near her bed, she said, "Will you please kneel down here and pray for my husband? I will never have a moment's rest until he is a Christian."

When I had finished praying, she said, "Will you bring me a Bible?" I brought her a Bible, and she began to pore over these Gospels of Christ, and in a few weeks she was received into the church.

Praying for Her Husband

That night there were ten men in that session. She began to ask each one of them personally if he would pray for her husband. She had asked me before to pray for him daily until he was a Christian. Of course I said I would. At the session that night when she said to those ten men, "Will you promise to pray for my husband every day till he is a Christian?" they each promised to do so. She did not get up and make a general request; you have heard a good many of those, but she went to Mr. Brown and asked him, and to Mr. Smith,—each one of them.

On the following Tuesday I went to see him and he said, "I do not know what to make of my wife. She used to have an awful temper. That is all gone. She says she is just broken hearted and that she cannot be happy until I am a Christian. I do not understand it."

"Well," I said, "Mr. McMurray, can't we make it right? Why don't you take Jesus Christ?"

"No, I'm not going to do it."

I said, "Mr. McMurray, if your wife keeps on praying the way she is praying, I think you will."

He hesitated a minute and then said, "Well, I am not going to do it just yet."

Down in that man's heart, he knew that he could not resist the power of the Spirit of God. There you had Romans 8:25-27,—the Spirit praying in that woman, for her, with her, with groanings that could not be uttered.

She heard about it. Wednesday she came to me. "I want you to promise that you will pray more earnestly than you have yet prayed for my husband," and I promised.

I said, "Mrs. McMurray, if you keep on praying this way, your husband is certainly going to be saved."

And within two weeks he yielded that stubborn will to the Spirit of God, and he came the very next communion after she came, and they set up a family altar, and the joy of that home, and the prayer life, was just a great marvelous trophy of God's grace.

Now that is the real thing. Did you ever pray that way? Why if I had the time I could tell you of any number of these incidents, but I will have to come back some morning and tell them to you, if you will let me.

I will tell you one that was in my mind when I talked about the matter of some people thinking that work is prayer. In the first chapter of the Acts when the Lord came to His disciples after the resurrection, you remember,—they were perhaps feeling that it was time to get busy. "What a tremendous job there is to do," they probably said, but Jesus said, "You are not ready yet. Wait in Jerusalem. Wait for the promise of the Father, which you have heard of me. Wait, wait, and you will have power when the Holy Ghost comes. Then go out." He is saying that to thousands of people who are rushing out without having waited.

"Praying Hyde"

Now this is the story I want to tell you. Out in India there was a man who labored there for years. His name was Hyde. His sister came to me the other day and said she had heard somewhere lately that I had been telling this story about her brother.

Out in India this was the thing that they thought about Hyde,—that he was praying too much and not working enough. He went up to Labar, to the home of Turner, the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. and Turner was away. He made himself at home and stayed all night.

In a day or so when Turner came back his servant said, "The man who sleeps little and prays much was here,—you know whom I mean." And instantly Turner knew who that was, and every missionary in India knew who that was. There was only one missionary there who was recognized by that description, but there was one—the man who sleeps little and prays much.

Out where he was stationed they told me this story that had occurred a few days before I got there. The missionaries were coming in for a week of meetings, and Hyde, with some of his workers, had been up through the villages, and they sent word to stop down at a certain village. The little Christian church out there had been divided. There had been sin and the minister said the people were a source of great trouble and discouragement, and the people said they did not want the minister, and the officers of the board had about decided to go down and disband the church.

They sent word to Hyde to stop there and investigate things and find out the situation. The missionaries told me this. They gathered the minister and the people together and Mr. Hyde said to them, "Now, you probably would like to tell me your story. Each of you have your case to tell, but there is going to be no statement. We are going to pray; but, before we pray, I want to read a passage." He read the passage of Ananias and Sapphira lying to the Holy Ghost, and he said, "Some of you have been doing that. Both of you could not tell the same story—your sides are so diverse and opposite. Somebody has been lying to the Holy Ghost. We are just going to pray now that God will do His work here and convict of sin, of righteousness and judgment, and take the things of Christ and make them plain,—the love of Christ and bring it here."

So they all went to prayer. India had been used to praying all day for some time. It was in the days of those privileges in India. They prayed an hour,—a whole hour; and as yet no sign; and they went off into the second hour, when somebody suddenly broke out in great agonizing of soul, in confession of sin, and then another, and another, and another, and in a little while these people of the church had confessed their sins before God and plead so for forgiveness, and this is what they said to the minister: "We do not want you to go. We want you to stay, because we are going to have a revival here now."

And there was a marvelous out-pouring of God's spirit there. Dr. Wherry, whom some of you perhaps know, said to me, "Brother Johnston, we are under such a sense of conviction of sin. Here we had been saying 'Hyde works too little and prays too much. It would be better if he would get busy and work.' And yet now this man, because he had been close to God, was used of God to do in one day the healing up, the cleaning of all that sinful condition there, and the quickening of that church into a wonderful revival that is going on this minute. God was able to do more with that one man than He could have done with the rest of us with our work. We would have smashed that into pieces and left them in their sin."

O, yes, the time will come, I believe it will come. Do you know that you and I could have something to do with hastening the coming of our Lord? We could hasten the coming of our Lord if we would get into His will in interceding and witnessing until He has gathered out the sons He is waiting to gather out.

A Consecration Prayer

Mrs. Ralph A. Brown
(née Florence E. Cole,'18)

Anoint my ear, that I may hear
In every voice of Thine
Thy loving word of guidance, Lord,
Unto this heart of mine.

Anoint my hand to be Thine own,
To use as pleaseth Thee,
An instrument of righteousness
Wherever I may be.

Anoint my feet to tread Thy paths
While walking here below,
That they may do Thy bidding, Lord,
And on Thine errands go.

Anoint my lips to offer Thee
A sacrifice of praise,
To tell men of Thy marvelous works,
And all Thy wondrous ways.

Anoint me for Thine own, dear Lord,
For service fill my frame;
Then use me, Master, where Thou wilt
To glorify Thy name.

Stephen the Seer

A New Testament Biography

By Professor A. T. Robertson, D. D., Louisville, Ky.

1. AN EPOCH MARKING MAN

STEPHEN does not cut a very large figure in the book of Acts. His story comes wholly in chapters 6 and 7, save Paul's allusion to him in 22: 20 as "Stephen thy witness" (martyr), "but its vital importance for the history is obvious from the pages of the Acts" (Rackham).

He stands at the parting of the ways and marks a revolution within Jewish Christianity. His speech is the longest in the Acts and Luke evidently regarded him as the true transition from Peter to Paul. He was a "new man" (Rackham) and so well suited to an era of reconstruction. He was a pioneer of progress and, as is often the case, paid the penalty for his prophetic insight and foresight by being ahead of his age. We need not say that he created the crisis between Christianity and Judaism, for that was inevitable. But he precipitated it and so challenges our interest today.

2. A MAN OF RARE GIFTS FOR THE EMERGENCY

He comes into the story in a rather incidental way as one of the Seven who were chosen to "serve tables" (διακονειν τραπεζαις, Acts 6:2) so that the twelve might attain to prayer and to the ministry of the word" (τη διακονια του λογου, v. 4). The distribution of the funds for the poor (chaps. 3 and 4) had taken too much of the time of the apostles who had to "leave the word" (6:2) "to minister to tables."

The modern minister is constantly exposed to this very temptation. He must be a church, denominational, and civic leader. The merely administrative side of his task threatens to thrust the spiritual and educational to one side. Paul carried the balance well as missionary, statesman, evangelist, teacher, theologian, author, pastor.

Perhaps the twelve might not have felt the burden so keenly but for the criticism of the Hellenistic (Greek-speaking Jews from without Palestine) Christians that the Hellenistic widows were discriminated against in the distribution of the common funds. One of the largest givers was Barnabas, Hellenist, of Cyprus. It is not easy to allay suspicion of that nature, however unjust. The twelve adopted the bold plan of asking the church to choose seven men, approved by the church, full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom, men whom the whole church trusted.

It was a wise solution of the predicament. It seems likely, though not certain, that "deacons" grew out of this arrangement. There is no mention of "elders" till Acts 11:30. Besides, all (or nearly all, if we judge by their names) of the Seven were Hellenists. Thus the Hellenists must now judge the fairness of a Hellenistic body, not of an Aramaean body like the Twelve.

First of the Seven

The outstanding man in the list of seven is Stephen. Crown (στεφανος) is the meaning of hisname. He won the martyr's crown and wore the halo of glory from the face of Christ. He heads the list as "a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit" (6: 5). He entered upon his work "full of grace and power" who also "wrought great wonders and signs among the people" (6: 8).

It is plain that Stephen was like Paul in the combination of the mystic and the practical. He was a man of vision who brought things to pass. He was a poet in both senses of the word (the seer and the doer). He had faith and grace (trust and charm). He had wisdom and power. Without faith one cannot pierce the veil of the future. Without grace he cannot win followers. Without wisdom he cannot lucidly project his vision into the realm of the practical. Without power (dynamite, δυναμις) he cannot drive it through to realization. Stephen had all these powers and energies and the gift of the Holy Spirit who suffered with divine afflatus all that he did. He was a combination of the practical idealism of Woodrow Wilson, the hardheadedness of Clemenceau, and the dynamic energy of Lloyd George. "We have the story of but one day in his life, the last: yet there is no man in the New Testament of whom we are told so much without one blemish being revealed" (Furneaux).

Stephen furnishes one of the famous "ifs" of history. If he had lived, who can tell what his career would have been? Would he have challenged first place with Paul as the heroic pathfinder for Christianity? Already he excelled the twelve in his philosophic grasp of the significance of the Christian movement in its bearing on Judaism.

Stephen belongs to the long list of gifted young men cut off in the prime of power and promise like Keats, like Rupert Brooke and many another genius sacrificed in the plentitude of hope. Stephen wrought miracles and had every mark of the seal of the Holy Spirit upon his work.

3. AN IRRESISTIBLE APOLOGIST FOR THE FAITH

He cut a wide swath among the people and soon swept beyond the office for which he was chosen.

If Stephen and Philip (the evangelist, as he became) are types for modern deacons, some of them fall far short of their opportunities. The average deacon takes this office more as an honor than as a call to service. It must be remembered that all the early disciples are witnesses for Christ. One of the saddest misfortunes in Christian history is the officialism that has confined soul-winning so largely to preachers, some of whom do not know how to do that, but only to deliver sermons.

Certainly Stephen did not feel that being one of the Seven cut him out of preaching the Word. The rather it gave him a fresh prominence and a new leadership among the Hellenists whose representative he was. So we see this deacon and lay-preacher busy in the Hellenistic synagogues of Jerusalem.

His bold and powerful proclamation of the gospel of grace and freedom in Christ awakened opposition in these synagogues. Stephen became the center of debate as the champions of Judaism challenged his presentation of Christianity and Judaism, "disputing with Stephen" (συνζητουντεζ τω ξτεφανω).

It was exciting work, we may be sure, but Stephen was flushed with victory, for "they were not able to resist the wisdom and the Spirit with which he spoke "(6: 10). They rose up quickly (ανεστησαν, aorist tense, ingressive action), but they had not strength to stand against (ουκ ισχυον αντιστηναι) this spiritual tornado that swept down all in his path.

A New Type of Preacher

For the moment Stephen, not Peter, held the center of the stage in Jerusalem. Stephen was a new type of preacher. He had Hellenic culture, was possibly an Alexandrian, and was able, like Apollos and Paul after him, to give a philosophic interpretation of Christianity that was out of Peter's range.

There is no evidence that the twelve felt any jealousy of Stephen nor was there opportunity for them to come to his help at his trial. They themselves had been on trial before the same Sanhedrin.

Stephen undoubtedly alarmed the rabbis by the power of his message. Their very failure to answer "this first great apologist for Christianity" (Press, Int. St. Bible Encyclopaedia) reminded them of Jesus in the Temple whose destruction he foretold on Olivet. Stephen dared to proclaim the perfect equality of Jew and Gentile in the Kingdom of God and he showed the spiritual nature of worship as Jesus had done to the woman at the well (John 4).

Among those rabbis who rallied to the defense of Jewish orthodoxy was probably the young man Saul, the pride of Gamaliel and his school. In the Cilician synagogue this brilliant young rabbi of Tarsus who had led all his fellow-students in Judaism (Gal. 1: 14) met Stephen and, like the rest, fell before the might of Stephen's arguments.

A public humiliation is hard for a proud man to endure. For the moment Christianity was triumphant unless Stephen could be gotten out of the way. The people were with Stephen. Why were the rabbis so opposed to him?

4. PROPHET OF THE INEVITABLE BREACH BETWEEN CHRISTIANITY AND JUDAISM

It is not every man who can see the drift of a new message or policy. Most people run in ruts until jolted out by a sudden clash. The Pharisees were quick to see that the message of Jesus meant their own undoing if his theory of the Kingdom won the day. They were right in their suspicion toward Jesus as an iconoclast and revolutionist from the standpoint of Pharisaic traditionalism. His emphasis on spiritual reality and moral righteousness made their professional and pietistic functions seem empty and hollow. At bottom the Pharisees killed Jesus for his picture of their own theological and political hopes.

The twelve apostles naturally stressed the fact that the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, and the Sadducees challenged their claim with energy and bitter resentment. Gamaliel and the Pharisees held aloof and apparently enjoyed the predicament of the Sadducees, their hated rivals in the Sanhedrin.

Struck Out on a New Line

But Stephen struck out on a new line and showed how Judaism was preparatory for Christianity and was temporary and would pass away. His Hellenic culture undoubtedly made it easier for Stephen to see the true relation of Judaism and Christianity as was true also with Paul. Peter had a hard struggle to see how Gentiles could be saved without first becoming Jews, though he did see it after Stephen's death (Acts 10 and 11).

But there is enough in the teaching of Jesus to explain all that Stephen said. Jesus had explained about the new patch on the old garment and new wine in old bottles to show that Christianity was a spiritual revolution and was not to be cribbed and cabined by the current Judaism. The worship of God is spiritual whether in Jersualem or on Mt. Gerizim (John 4: 20 ff.). Jesus had charged Pharisaism with being hypocritical formalism at variance with the word of God (Mark 7:6) and had predicted the destruction of the temple (Mark 13: 2) and the passing of the Kingdom of God to the Gentiles (Matt. 21: 43).

The twelve apostles had not as yet seized upon this phase of Christ's teaching. But Stephen boldly proclaimed the spiritual nature of the worship of God irrespective of nation or place. He did it, moreover, with such cogency and clarity that he carried the Hellenists in the synagogue with him. A new force had to be reckoned with and the Pharisees once more sprang to the rescue of the ark of Judaism.

Religious Demagogy

These conscientious inquisitors and persecutors had the zeal of fanatics and were without scruples if so be they could compass their ends. And it must be noted that Hellenists attacked Stephen with the same zeal of the Palestinian or Aramaean Jews. Beaten in debate by Stephen his opponents "suborned men" who were willing to perjure themselves for pay in the interest of Jewish orthodoxy. "We heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses and God." They twisted his interpretation of Christianity in terms of mankind to be a direct attack on Moses who is here mentioned before God. Moses stood for all the Pharisaic theology and they "stirred up the people and the elders and the scribes" by the charge that Stephen was seeking to undermine Judaism.

It is not hard to make an ad captandum plea to the populace. Stephen soon found himself under arrest for heresy and arraigned before the Sanhedrin. The mob had rushed at him in their rage and were now ready to believe false witnesses who said, "This fellow does not cease to speak words against this holy place and the law, for we heard him say that Jesus, this Nazarene, will destroy this place and will change the customs that Moses delivered unto us" (Acts 6: 13).

It was to their thinking both blasphemy and heresy. In fact, it was neither. Stephen was the true interpreter of Moses as was Jesus. He taught the real worship of God in the spirit. He foresaw the inevitable disappearance of Judaism before Christianity and in a prophetic spirit predicted it. But Stephen did not deny the divine origin of the Mosaic law; he did not revile the temple. But Jewish national pride was aroused against Stephen by the specious charge. Piety and patriotism blazed out at him. What could he say in defense of his attitude?

5. A COURAGEOUS INTERPRETER OF JEWISH HISTORY

It was Stephen's supreme hour. He felt it and was looking unto Jesus for help. We read of none of the disciples who offered sympathy and help at this hour. They may have been cowed into silence. Some may have thought Stephen too bold and aggressive.

But a strange thing happened. The people gazed in awe at the face of Stephen which was transfigured with glory like that of Moses when he came down from the mount when he had been talking with Jehovah.

The young man Saul noticed it and long years afterwards understood what it meant (2 Cor. 3: 18). Stephen saw Jesus and the glory of God (Acts 7: 55) and his very face shone with the inward peace and light that radiated with a halo, as if his face were that of an angel.

Stephen probably thought rapidly as he recalled the fate of Jesus before this very body on precisely similar charges. He doubtless knew before he spoke what his fate would be. Pilate had surrendered to the Sanhedrin then, and there was small hope that Roman power would intervene in behalf of Stephen now. All that Stephen could do was to speak a clear and true word that would define the issue for which he was to die. Thus he might do much by dying for his Lord and for the freedom of the human spirit.

A Skilful Argument

His apology is really exceedingly skilful and adroit though at first one is surprised that the charges are not directly answered and the name of Jesus does not occur. But his address does answer the charges completely and it is a great and notable defense of Christ. He recounts Jewish history from Abraham to Solomon with philosophic grasp and spiritual insight.

He holds the attention of these rabid Jews as he retells the familiar and wonderful story. But he gives a fresh turn to the narrative that startles while it enthralls them. He shows that the worship of God in one place was not true at the beginning, and was temporary and not essential. He shows how the people had misunderstood God's hand with them and had killed the prophets who were called to interpret His will to them. Even when the temple came "they made external worship a substitute for spiritual obedience" (Furneaux).

It was a complete justification of Christ and of Stephen's exposition of the gospel. He knew his Old Testament like an Alexandrian theologian and criticized materialistic religion like a Greek, but his idea of redemption and mediation was distinctly Christian (Rackham).

But the breath of the hills did not suit Pharisaism. Stephen saw the flash of anger in the eyes of the members of the Sanhedrin as they saw the drift of his great address which Luke has preserved with wonderful skill. Stephen had not won his judges, though he had won his case and his cause before God and men. What must he now do?

6. THE FIRST MARTYR FOR CHRIST

Stephen was not afraid to reveal the Jews to themselves. Jesus had done the same thing in his terrific denunciation of the Pharisees (Matt. 23). They were children of their fathers. They have killed Jesus as they did the prophets before him. He spoke in pity while his words burned the eyes of his hearers like Isaiah's coals of fire.

His keen irony had stung them to the quick. His sarcasm (Acts 7: 50-53) cut to the bone (Acts 7:54): "And hearing these things they were sawn asunder (διεπριοντο) in their hearts, and they began to gnash (εβρυχ΄ον) their teeth at him. The words of Stephen cut like a buzz-saw and their teeth clattered like wolves for their victim.

They were already murderers at heart. The very truth of exposition of God's purposes of grace angered them all the more, when at last they saw the point of his speech.

Stephen saw the human wolves leap up at him as he looked up to heaven. He saw the glory of God and Jesus standing at the right hand of God in majesty and glory, standing as if to welcome his faithful witness who has resisted unto blood.

Stephen is rapt with the glory of the vision and cares not for his murderers. He calmly says, "Behold, I see the heavens opened and the Son of man standing at the right hand of God" (Acts 7: 56). Jesus saw the heavens as he came up out of the baptismal waters. Now the Son of man stands by God's throne to greet the victor in his death.

It is a glorious transfiguration and intensifies the rage of the Jews. They lost all restraint. The Sanhedrin became a mob and with loud outcry rushed at Stephen and hurled him out of the city and began to stone him (ελιθοβολουν).

A Common Lynching

They were observing some of the forms of Jewish law at any rate in taking him out of the city and in stoning him for blasphemy. But all the same it was murder, a common lynching. No vote of condemnation was taken and the Sanhedrin no longer had the power of life and death. The Romans were not consulted. The Jews could represent it as an uprising of the people beyond the control of the Sanhedrin so that the Romans would let it pass.

Stephen is called "the witness" or martyr of Jesus and the same word is used of "the witnesses" (οι μαρτυρεζ, Acts 7:58) who now "laid their clothes at the feet of a young man named Saul," evidently the master of ceremonies, who is now having his revenge on Stephen for defeating him in debate.

These "witnesses" began the stoning as was their privilege. It was too dirty work for the nice young rabbi from Tarsus. They pelted Stephen as he gazed into heaven and said: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit," as if glad to go. Then, bending his knees in spite of the rocks hurled at him, he prayed to Jesus, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge" (Acts 7: 60).

He died with forgiveness of his enemies in his heart, this first martyr for Christ, as he sealed with his blood the testimony of his life. Stephen was faithful to the death. Was his witness in vain? It seemed so at the time. But God's plans work slowly, but surely.

7. THE FORERUNNER OF PAUL

"And Saul was well-pleased at his death" (Acts 8: 1).

There was little of cheer to the Christians in this situation. Besides, Saul at once set about to root out the pestiferous heresy of Christianity from Jerusalem. Like a wolf he ravished the fold and put men and women to death and drove others far afield. The taste for blood grew with the gratification, and Saul, like a war-horse, sniffed the battle as far as Damascus.

The cause of Stephen seemed lost and that of Saul triumphant. The apostles alone were left in Jersualem, though why we cannot tell. Was it that the friendship of Gamaliel still shielded them from the wrath of Saul, his pupil? Did their failure to come to the rescue of Stephen mollify Saul? Was Saul afraid of the twelve? At any rate the cause of Christ seemed almost annihilated as Saul swept on his victorious career.

And yet, when Jesus checked Saul, he told him that it was hard for him to kick against the goad. Thus we catch a light on these days of vehement victory when Saul fought to drown his own conscience. Stephen had left his mark upon Saul. Stephen, not Gamaliel, was to be the real teacher of Saul.

"Si Stēphanus non orasset, ecclesia Paulum non habuisset." So we may conclude. At any rate Saul, who caused Stephen's death, came to be the real successor of Stephen. Saul took up, expounded, and carried on the teaching of Stephen about the universal message and mission of Christianity. Saul will one day meet the finer hatred of Jew and Judaizer as he fights for a free gospel for all men. Stephen is vindicated in Paul.

Thus God wrought His will in spite of the wrath of man. Paul himself one day won the martyr's crown (στεφανος). No one, we may be sure, gave Paul a warmer welcome to heaven than Stephen, who could justly claim Paul as his trophy for Christ.

ONE GENUS, MANY SPECIES

There are elements in every large city which want to bring about a revolution, or who think they do.

Some of them are witless and some dishonest. Some are mistaken humanitarians and idealists. Some are covetous and grasping. Some are potentially murderous. Some are intellectuals who have thought much and not enough. Some are visionaries, outraged by sight of man's injustice to man.—Chicago Daily Tribune.

SCOTCH-IRISH CHRISTIAN WORKERS' UNION

Mr. Walter Duff, Bible teacher and evangelist, who founded this union in 1898, desires the names and addresses of its former members to be mailed to him at Gladstone, Ore., promising to send them its monthly paper. To accommodate him and them we are inserting this paragraph.

D. L. Moody's Theology

A Finger Post for Christian Workers

By Rev. James M. Gray, D. D.

This is the substance of an address in London, England, in 1912, given at a breakfast tendered the speaker by a company of ministers, missionaries, religious editors and other Christian workers at the invitation of the Revs. F. B. Meyer and J. Stuart Holden. It was repeated at a graduation occasion of The Moody Bible Institute held in connection with the Annual Convention of the Cook County Sunday-school Association on April 18, 1912, and subsequently printed in pamphlet form for general distribution. The call for a new edition led to the suggestion that it be first reprinted in the magazine, in compliance with which liberty has been taken to omit certain local references and to make a few other abbreviations.—Editors.

I DEEPLY appreciate the distinction you have shown me, and accept it as tendered to the memory of D. L. Moody, the founder of the Institute now called by his name, and whose memory is as fragrant on this side of the water as on my own. It will therefore cheer his friends to learn of the blessing on the Institute since his departure "out of this world unto the Father," for "his works do follow him."

It is a joy to say that the same spiritual unction and glow, and the same evangelistic fervor that characterized the Institute in D. L. Moody's time, does so characterize it still. Dr. F. B. Meyer observed this during his last visit among us and was gracious enough to speak of it in a public address. It can be referred to without egotism, since the whole faculty would agree that it is explained not more by anything which they do, or teach, than by the lives of the students themselves. The latter are thoroughly converted to Jesus Christ ere they come to us, or they would not come; they experimentally know the Holy Spirit, bringing His presence with them when they come, and leaving its aroma after them when they depart.

Mr. Moody's theology is still the basis of the work. He had not the learning of the schools, but who shall say that he was not taught of God? His theology had four cornerstones, or, using the figure of the human body as typical of the Church, the four parts of his theology represented the brain, the heart, the lips, and the hands and feet of the Church.

I

The brain of his theology was the grip he had on the authority and integrity of the Bible as the Word of God.

Whistler, the great artist, once criticized a pupil, saying her work would never do.

"Why," she remonstrated, "you told me to paint as I see."

"Yes," was his answer, "but you are seeing as you paint."

Round Top, Northfield, Mass.

As a preacher, Mr. Moody would not have satisfied the artist, because he preached what he saw in the Bible and not what he saw in his mind.

His belief was that the very words of the autographs, or the original Scriptures, were inspired of God, and the Institute still maintains that truth. In some quarters it is considered unscholarly and passé, but we are not moved by opinions that have nothing better to support them.

On my present voyage across the ocean I read a book just published by an English scholar, the author of The Latin Gospels in the Second Century, who, during the past fourteen years has seen and handled nearly all the earliest Greek and Latin manuscripts of the Gospels, which Europe possesses. I mention this merely to show that he has a claim to modernism as well as scholarship, while in a footnote on one of his pages he says: "Every word in the autographs was plenarily inspired by the Holy Ghost." And again, "Of the verbal inspiration of the original documents of the prophets and evangelists, the church of Christ has never had any doubt."

I do not know whether any of my hearers have lost their grip on this precious and fundamental truth, or whether any have yet to grasp it, but I plead for its acceptance by every minister and Christian worker. It is revolutionary in the life that has come to appreciate it for the first time. The reverence and dignity it assigns to Holy Writ, the importance it bestows upon it in one's thought and preaching means a definiteness and authority of utterance which is the greatest need of the world today, and it also means a fruitfulness of ministry which no other cause can similarly effect.

Mr. Moody's Home at Northfield, Mass.

II

The heart of D. L. Moody's theology was his conception of the atonement of Jesus Christ. It was always said of him that he preached the love of God, in which frequently he was compared with Mr. Finney, who preached the law. But while this was so, that love was always focussed upon the Cross. Mr. Moody never minimized the lost condition of the natural man, nor the need of the new birth, nor the eternity of future retribution; but the truth foremost in his thought was that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself," and had given to him "the ministry of reconciliation."

Happily there is a kind of renaissance of this blessed doctrine in the present day, contributed to very particularly by Professor Clow, of Glasgow, in his clear and searching book, "The Cross in Christian Experience."

There is a sentence or two which he employs, so characteristic of Mr. Moody's preaching that I quote them: "The atonement," he says, "is something to be received by man. Men often think, and sometimes say, that if they repent, and come to God with confession of their sin, He will be reconciled to them. But that is not the gospel of Christ. God is reconciled to you, whether you are reconciled to Him or not. It is one thing for God to be reconciled, it is one thing for God to have forgiveness waiting for a man and another thing for man to receive that forgiveness and so be reconciled to God. The reception of the atonement is what is wanted on our part."

How faithfully, clearly, lovingly, and forcefully, did D. L. Moody proclaim this truth! What a benediction to have heard his sermons, oft-repeated, on "Grace" and on "the Blood"; sermons which I first heard in my early youth, and which brought to me the new experience of tears in listening to a preacher.

But, my brethren, if this be the truth, what message for the preacher is comparable with its infinitude of wealth for this, or any other period of human history? How can we fritter away our strength on secondary things, when this primary fact should practically fill the horizon of our thought? We thank God that The Moody Bible Institute emphasizes it in all its teaching—emphasizes the Cross as at once the condemnation of men and the power by which they may be lifted to a higher life.

III

The lips of Mr. Moody's theology may be said to be what he experienced and taught concerning the enduement of the Holy Spirit.

The story of what may be called the second great crisis of his spiritual life is well-known, but an occasion like this gives an opportunity and a reason for repeating it. He had been a Christian and a Christian worker for many years—indeed for him to be a Christian and a Christian worker were one and the same thing. But now he had relinquished his business connections and become a lay pastor of the largest mission church and superintendent of the largest Sunday-school in Chicago. Souls were being converted at every meeting, and yet two good women, not members of his mission, and one of whom still lives and prays, were in the occasional habit of attending his Sunday evening meeting, and praying while he preached. Sometimes at the close of the meeting they would say to him: "Mr. Moody, we are praying that you may receive the enduement of the Holy Spirit." As he himself related the circumstance, he felt annoyed that they should think it necessary for them to pray for him instead of praying for the people. But their godly persistency won in the end, and he asked them to show him in the New Testament the truth they were insisting on, which they did.

Mr. Moody was an eminently wise and practical man, and no sooner had he discovered the new and deeper blesisng that God had for him, than he began to seek it in prayer. "I was crying all the time," said he, "that God would fill me with His Spirit."

Sir Ernest Tritton said to me that he once asked Sir George Moore,

"What do you think of D. L. Moody?"

"I'm glad he's not in the silk trade," was his reply.

So smart and keen a mind had Moody, so energetic, practical and well-balanced, that had he been in the silk trade, he would have been a close competitor. But it was this sane and sensible man who never pursued a fad, and never was carried away by any fancy, who thus bore witness to his own experience:

"One day in the city of New York—oh, what a day!—I cannot describe it, I seldom refer to it; it is almost too sacred an experience to name. Paul had an experience of which he never spoke for fourteen years. I can only say that God revealed Himself to me, and I had such an experience of His love, that I had to ask Him to stay His hand. I went to preaching again. The sermons were not different; I did not present any new truths; and yet hundreds were converted. I would not now be placed back where I was before that blessed experience if you should give me all the world —it would be as the small dust of the balance."

We speak of Mr. Moody's great work in Great Britain, followed by that in the United States, but it was after this crisis that that work was done. The tens of thousands of souls who owe their salvation to his ministry on these two continents, may offer their adoration to the Lamb for what He did to D. L. Moody on that day.

And yet Mr. Moody was never carried off his feet by this, and never lost his head, to use a current phrase. In this, as in other matters, he was a steadfast witness to the fact that God hath called us to "a sound mind" (2 Tim. 1: 7).

With gratitude to God we can say that the Institute he founded believes in the Holy Ghost.

IV

The hands and feet of Mr. Moody's theology were the desire he felt and the efforts he made to save souls. "Of late my earnest prayer to God has been that He would help me to save more, and I can not tell you how wonderfully He has answered my prayer." Thus he wrote about 1876, and thus he might truthfully have written until the day he was stricken down.

He never allowed himself to be side-tracked in the pursuit of this aim. There were problems in his day as there are in ours—educational problems, social problems, civic and economic. Perhaps they were not so general or so tense as now, but they were present and pressing for all that; and Mr. Moody was too prominent a man, too influential, too traveled and too sympathetic with his kind, to be unmoved by them.

But this one thing he did, by all means he would save some. He knew that you might clothe men, and feed them, and educate them, and better their environment in every way, and yet leave them "dead in trespasses and sins." And his mission was to "take men alive," in Trumbull's happy phrase. When new hearts are given men, they soon make a new environment for themselves, and D. L. Moody was not a man to waste effort on second causes.

"You say, 'Can't we improve the dwellings of the poor?'

"Yes; God help us to do it," says Dr. Campbell Morgan, "but one of the best ways to do it is to improve the man that lives in the dwelling."

Mr. Moody's spirit in this regard is well described by an anecdote. One day he was ascending the steps of the hotel at Northfield, and observed a stranger sitting on the piazza. With his accustomed abruptness, he said to him:

"My friend, are you a Christian?"

Not relishing the question, the stranger straightened up, and replied:

"What do you think?"

"Not red hot," said Mr. Moody, and passed on.

"Not red hot." The difference between Mr. Moody and the average Christian is well expressed in "red hot." He was "red hot" along gospel lines, "red hot" for salvation, "red hot" to win men to Christ. Therefore he let questions of mere social service alone. The world could take care of its own business, and do it well. There were a thousand people interested in humanitarian projects to one that would save souls, and he would be that one. He believed in social service, but in salvation first. To reverse the order in his mind was to put the fruit before the tree. Social service that does not spring from the new birth can be only a worldly thing.

But "He that winneth souls is wise," and D. L. Moody's wisdom is seen in the result, the earthly result, even after so long a time. A day or two ago I received a letter from the founder of Mr. Fegan's Homes in which occur these astonishing words: "It may interest you to know that I do not see how rescue work on evangelical principles could have been maintained during the last thirty years or so, but for the sympathy and help of those who were either converted to God, or yielded themselves in fuller consecration to His service through Mr. Moody's ministry in our country." "This feeling was shared," he adds, "by Dr. Barnardo, Miss Annie Macpherson, Mr. Quarrier, and those who have passed on before" to the church triumphant above; and is shared at present by many heads of missions, and other organizations, who still remain on "active service within the church militant below."

As further substantiating this testimony let me add that the day after my arrival in London, an experienced newspaper man "interviewed" me, who in the course of his remarks, said: "There is not a Sunday in this country that Moody is not quoted in the pulpit, on the platform, or in the preaching on the street corners. And, drop out the leaders of Christian philanthrophy in London that are Moody men, and you drop out the backbone of that philanthrophy." A resident of Glasgow told me the same thing about that metropolis. What stronger testimony could we desire that saving the souls of men is the greatest of all labors? This is the source and the life of social service. It is for this that the Bible Institute stands.

But there was one great incentive to Mr. Moody's ministry, the pervading life of his theology which faithfulness requires me to mention, namely, the hope of the coming of the Lord—His personal and visible appearing. He set no dates for His appearing. He never speculated about it. He did not undertake to teach prophecy. But he was looking for His coming every day.

As he was walking one evening towards the Auditorium at Northfield in company with a friend, he sat down on the grass at Round Top, to rest. Looking out over the beautiful summer landscape spread before them, gilded with the glory of the westering sun, he said, as his son reports him in his biography:

"I should like to be here when Christ comes back."

His longing was not gratified during his life, but his body rests there, awaiting the voice of the archangel and the trump of God.

May we follow the example of his faithfulness, and be a sharer in the reward of that day!

THE NEW CHINESE BIBLE

This Bible to be known as the Revised Mandarin Bible, and ready for publication, has cost the Bible Societies $132,000 Mex., without counting the additional amounts paid by missionary societies in salaries to their missionary translators assigned to this work. All this before the first paper, now abnormally high, had been bought and the first type set!

The new version will be printed in China, and hundreds of orders from all parts of the country are waiting to be filled as soon as the first copies come from the press in February, 1920.

Reminiscences of D. L. Moody

By John W. Langston

Mr. Langston is in the printing business in Chicago, and on request dictated these few incidents about Mr. Moody for this issue.—Editors

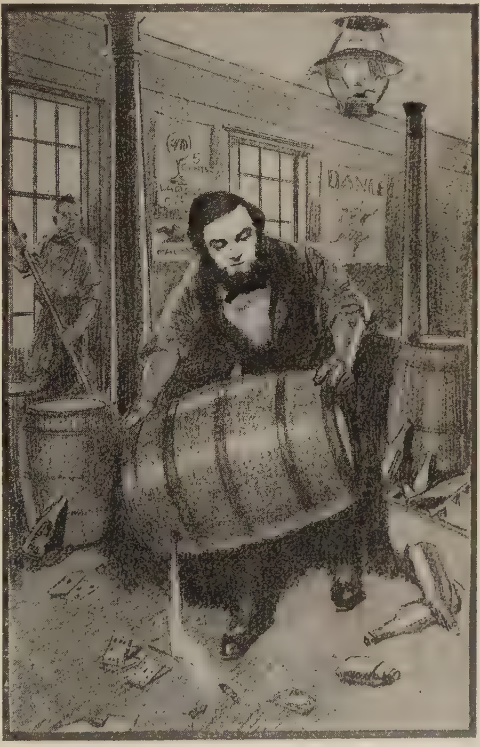
IT was on a Saturday afternoon, when there was a knock at mother's door.

Answering the knock, she found a young man there who said his name was Moody, and that he was organizing a Sunday-school, to open in North Market Hall the following day, and he wanted to know if she had children old enough to go. Mother replied that she had two, and that she would get them ready for the three o'clock Sunday-school the next day. Mr. Moody promised he would call for them.

On the following day he came to the house, and with him was a bunch of youngsters in the neighborhood of thirty to forty. Mother had us ready, and we went over to North Market Hall, where Mr. Moody had the room all prepared.

North Market Hall was located where the Criminal Court Building now stands, facing on Michigan and Illinois Streets. The lower floor was used as stalls for the sale of meats, fish and vegetables; upstairs, at the north end, was the police station, and at the south end a large vacant room used for meetings.

Mr. Moody had secured permission to use this room every Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. It was used for dances frequently on Saturday nights, and he had to go there after the dance was over, or early Sunday morning, to sweep and clean up the room so that it could be used for the Sunday-school.



Mr. Moody Cleaning Up Hall for His First Sunday-school

As I remember, chairs were used for the classes, and after the school had been established a while, Mr. Moody secured silk banners and placed them on poles that were attached to the backs of the chairs. They were lettered "Little Gleaners," "Precious Jewels," etc.

Lincoln's Visit to the Sunday-school

The Sunday-school was started in this small way, but grew to quite large proportions, and Mr. Fauntleroy became interested in the work and was made superintendent with Mr. Moody.

I remember little about the school and what was done, except what mother tells me. She said that when Mr. Lincoln was elected President, going to Washington on his way from Springfield, he stopped over in Chicago and was there over Sunday. Mr. Moody, learning of his presence in the city, went at once and invited him over to speak to the Sunday-school; and Mr. Lincoln came and on that afternoon spoke to the school. I do not recollect, and mother does not say just what his talk was, but there was a large crowd there that afternoon. It simply shows Mr. Moody's zeal in trying to build up the work and in getting attractions. He carried on the Sunday-school until close to the opening of the war. Not having a place for evening meetings through Mr. John V. Farwell's help a store on the south-west corner of Dearborn and Michigan Streets was secured.

When the war began, the room that had been used for the Sunday-school in North Market Hall was used for the army as an arsenal and recruiting station, and Mr. Moody had to give up his Sunday-school there. He later went into the army and became chaplain and continued in that position to the close of the war.

Then on his return he became interested again in the work, and mother, who had been converted at one of his meetings in a place we called the "Little Rag Shop," took an interest in the work also, and frequently Mr. Moody would come in, and he and mother would pray together about the work. One day he was especially burdened, and he said, "Sister Langston, we must have a church. Now let's pray earnestly that God will send somebody along that has money, to help us start." And they prayed earnestly and he went away very hopeful. In an hour he returned and had a check for $500. He drew the check out of his pocket and said, "Sister Langston, we have $500 for our new church."

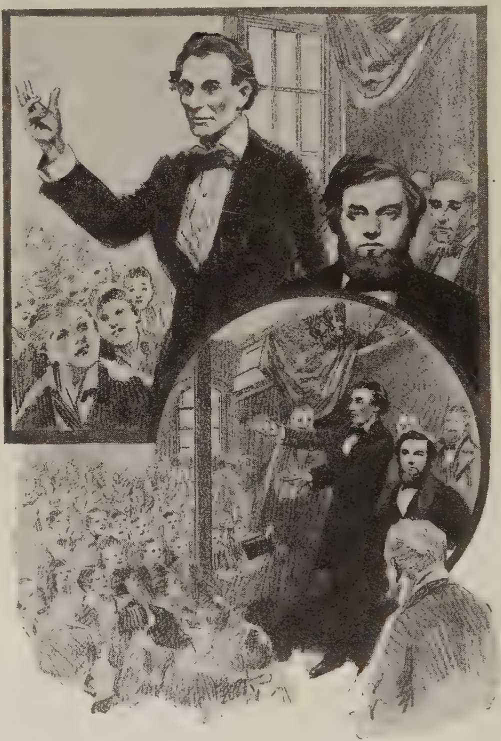
And mother said you never saw a man so happy and joyful as he was then.

Well, that was the nest egg for the church that later was built on Illinois Street near Wells. When the church was built they organized with a membership of twelve, mother being one of the twelve,—the only woman of the charter members.

Harry Moorehouse was there for a time, as one of Mr. Moody's co-workers, also Mr. Needham, P. P. Bliss, Mr. R. S. Thane, Major Whittle, the two Mrs. Abbotts, and others. The work increased until there was a large membership both in the Sunday-school and the church.

Romping With the Children

To speak further of his enterprising and zealous work, I might say that he would go around on Saturdays and get a large number of the children into a store that was just next to North Market Hall, and interest them in games, playing with them in all the games, and romping for an hour or so. Then at the end of that time, he would get them all quiet and would tell them about our Saviour. After his talk with them he would line them up in single file, and as they passed out they would be given bags containing candy, popcorn, apples and cake. This was carried on for quite a long time, every Saturday. At the annual picnics, there was no boy or girl that took greater interest in the romping and the games than Mr. Moody. He would play tag. He would get into the thickest of the fun, and usually when it came time for his return that night his black alpaca coat was in shreds, and sometimes there wasn't anything left of it.



President Lincoln While on His Way to Washington Visited Moody Sunday-school

While the work was going on at the Illinois Street Church some members who disliked Mr. Moody's methods arranged for a secret business meeting and planned to get Mr. Watts de Golyer in his place. Through some who had been notified to attend, Mr. Moody was made acquainted with the condition of things and immediately went about amongst his friends notifying them of the trouble; and when the matter of making a change came up in the meeting, there were enough of Mr. Moody's friends there to vote it down.

One Sunday Mr. Moody announced that he was going to sing a solo at the Friday night meeting. Everybody began to laugh the moment he announced it. "Well," he said, "if you want to hear me sing, you come on Friday night." Mr. Moody could not sing a note. On Friday night there was a large crowd who had come expecting to hear him sing. He got up and said, "I announced last Sunday that I was going to sing. Now you just listen." And he picked up a song book and read off a song. Of course they were disappointed in not hearing him sing, but it was a physical impossibility for him to sing a note.

A Famous "Anniversary"

One day Mr. Moody said to Mr. Fauntleroy:

"Fauntleroy, let's have an anniversary."

"But Moody, we haven't been here a year yet."

"What difference does that make? Let's have an anniversary."

"Why," said Mr. Fauntleroy, "you can't have an anniversary unless you have been here for a year."

"Well, I want an anniversary. You take care of the singing and I'll get the speakers."

On the following Sunday they had a lot of people at the anniversary before they had been there a year.

Mr. Moody was tireless in getting up plans to get in new scholars, and he announced that the boy or girl who brought in the largest number of scholars for the following two months would get a lamb. There was a great deal of interest shown. The boys and girls worked hard, but the lad who brought in the largest number was young Goodrich, and Mr. Moody had a picture of Goodrich and the lamb taken together.

One of the converts at Mr. Moody's meetings was a minstrel. After his conversion he would come to meetings and play his banjo. He had a wonderful way of playing chimes on it, so that they sounded just like church chimes.

Charlie Morton was standing on Clark Street one day and Mr. Moody came along and said:

"Say, do you love Jesus Christ?"

"Why, I don't know anything about Him."

Mr. Moody at once began to tell him about

Christ, and brought him to the church, and he became a Christian, accepted Christ; and, as he had no place to go, Mr. Moody took him into his own home. At that time, Emma Little, the organist of the church, was living at Mr. Moody's home. An attachment sprang up between Miss Little and Mr. Morton, and last year I attended their fiftieth wedding anniversary.

The Irreverent Goat

A little later when Mr. Farwell was east, he called in to see Mr. Moody at Northfield—his first visit there—and Mr. Moody took great interest in showing him about the place, the buildings, and his fine stock.
